Sure to Kill.

When the celebrated physician, Sir Henry Holland, told Sydney Smith that he had failed to kill either one of a brace of pheasants that he had shot with easy range near the latter's home, the witty divine asked:

"Why did you not prescribe for them?"

After the Reward.

Lady—What is it, little boy?

A Trio of Graduation Frocks

Paris muslin frock, with three-flounced skirt, with panel of the muslin tucked and crossed by insertion of lace. Yoke on bodice to correspond, and Berthe inset with lace motifs and insertion.

Showing use of small ruffles. Bodice and sleeves of ruffles crossed by suspender effect of Irish lace. Gulmpe of all-over baby Irish lace. Skirt has insertions of the lace, with six narrower ruffles at the foot.

White embroidered batiste net frock, trimmed with bows of white satin ribbon. These bows may be simulated in white valenciennes lace insertion if preferred.

The yoke is of lace and the material shirred.

THIN SUMMER WEAR

Silks and Organdies, Elaborately Trimmed, Will Be Popular During Hot Weather.

For evening wear nothing is prettier than the thin silks and organdies which may be worn through the summer. There is no evidence of the "simple muslin gown" in the models from which we are supposed to take our cue. They are trimmed as elaborately as may be, still keeping the lines of those already mentioned. A charming marquisette costume of palest blue consists of a skirt in which the front panel and flounces are cut in one piece. Bands of lace insertion outline the panel, and the flounce has a band of insertion around the bottom, with a graceful design in hand embroidery above it and extending half way up the front panel. Oval inserts of crosswise tucking, overlaid a piece, where he expects me to spend with bands of insertion put on in all my time, with nobody's company conventional figures, make up the fanciful bodice and short, puffed but his own. If he does not love me, sleeves, and a band of velvet ribbon why does he take so much trouble to several shades darker than the marmake me miserable?" quisette runs up over the shoulders underneath the girdle and down to the top of the flounce, which it meets underneath rosettes of chiffon. There is a gathered sash-drapery, inside the bodice which rounds out the decollete neck.

Handkerchiefs—

With pale pink, green, blue and violet borders are the finest of the linen and silver sleeves, fleurs de lis, and a great variety of flowers are used in the designs. Some impressive monochrs are crossbarred with a color and at the intersection of the bars there is a small white embroidered dot. Instead of putting embroidery around the edges and in the corners of handkerchiefs in the old-fashioned way, the designs are scattered about in a seemingly careless manner. Insects are extremely popular this year, and flies, beetles and spiders which look realistic in the center of a delicate web are embroidered at the intersection of bars. Fleurs de lis, clover leaves and daisies also are used in this way.

The Value of Appearance.

No woman is so good, intellectual, or beautiful that she can afford to be careless in her dress.

No woman, if she would be of influence, can afford to nag or worry or fret.

No woman has any right to make herself unattractive. The woman who neglects her appearance, because she feels it cannot make any difference to her family, is not only indifferent to her power but is lazy, and shirking her duty besides.

Mistaken Economy.

It is a waste of money to ever buy a cheap embroidery silk. The cotton and nerve force is put on even a comparatively simple piece of work in the effort to have it ruined at the first washing. A silk that runs is an abomination, and most of the cheaper silks are liable to that defect.

Do without embroidery if you will, but never economize on the materials of which it is made.

Popularity of Bands and Tucks.

The wide bands and deep tucks that have sprung into such unprecedented popularity this season continue their vogue, although it is not unlikely that they will come to the same fate as most fads of that order. They have become too common already; but what they will come to the same fate as most fads of that order. They have looking and such a simple method of ornamentation that we shall let them depart with regret.

A Dressmaking Hint.

If you are what is called an "out" size and the paper patterns cut in ordinary sizes do not fit you, rip an old well-fitting dress bodice apart, iron out the pieces so that they will lie flat, and cut a bodice pattern in paper from this. By allowing extra width where fullness will be needed, you can cut blouses from the same pattern.

SMART TUB GOWN

Latest Decree Calls for Marked Degree of Snugness and Trigness—Touches That Relieve.

A noticeable sauguess and trigness is the hallmark of many of the smartest tub gowns. The skirts are simply trousered and their length widths are unbroken except for a band of needlework above the hem or a few tucks in a group. The top of the skirt is mounted with a slight gathering from waist—something more scrooe the back. The bodice, white gathered, edmite of no outward fullness because the material is drawn into the figure lines so snugly and halted. A holero of the same fabric, short and very close fitting, embraces the bust and gives an excellent effect upon the figure, simple as it is.

There is a tailor suggestion about all this, but the handwork in finish takes away the severity somewhat, as the edge of the entire holero is embroidered by hand. So is the high collar-band and stock and the turned-over flat cuffs of the elbow sleeves. It requires little imagination to fancy how becoming such a gown may be with the bodice belted in with rose-pink ribbon and a simple pink rose at front beauty fastened to the corsage just where the holero meets.

A straw hat, a oluster of roses and some tulle, fresh white gloves and shoes and a white embroidered parasol, coupled with youth and beauty, would make a picture as may be found on the Florida Riviera.

DUTCH NECK BLOUSE.

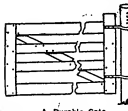
The cut-out pattern of yoke blouse cut square at neck, called the Dutch neck.

BEAUTY HINTS.

The lungs send away waste products, as does the skin. Deep breathing and bathing aid these processes. Getting to bed early, taking exercise out of doors, living a sane, simple life are the plain everyday rules for preserving good looks and vonger.

The proper cure for enlarged pores le thorough bathing every night with a good complexion brush and the use of an astringent wash every morning.

The brush awakens all the blood vessels and gives a to a state of healthful activity. People who use good face creams seldom have enlarged pores. The creams will cause perspiration and this keeps the pores active. Drink lots of water and eat plenty of fruit. These are good medicines for all beauty ills and are especially applicable to enlarged pores.



Benzoin must be used sparingly on the skin. It works its best effects when combined with alcohol and rosewater.

DURABLE GATE.

Hinges for Gate Which Permit It to Be Raised on Low End.

Any ordinary gate will answer the purpose. The improvement is in the hinges. These are made of an ordinary wagon tire. The upper one, which I have marked A, is made so it will pass entirely around the post and is bolted to the end of the gate, writes the correspondent of the Journal of Agriculture. The bottom one, B, is made with a shoulder which extends only half way around the post. It is somewhat like a letter "Y," only the open fork is made round so it will fit the post.

A number of holes bored through the top of a post, one under the other, through any one of which a bolt may be placed. This bolt, C, holds the upper hinge in place. By setting it up or down in the row of holes, the gate may be made to swing high or low, as desired. When there is a heavy snow, the bolt can be placed in the top hole, and the gate will swing over the drift. If it is desired to raise the gate so hogs and sheep can pass under while large animals are restrained, the bolt can be set any height desired to make the passageway under the gate large enough to permit ingress or egress of the smaller animals.

The drawing will explain the construction.

THE DUST MULCH.

It Prevents Evaporation of Moisture and Causes Roots to Strike Deeper.

A Matter of much importance, both as regards saving moisture and preventing root injuries, is the depth of surface tillage. Too shallow cultivation will not be effective in checking evaporation, still one must know that the soil should not be stirred so deep that the top roots are cut. If this is done the growth is at once checked, and the roots are forced lower in search of supplies. From two to three inches have been found the best depth for flat cultivation, where the ground has been thoroughly prepared. When a seed bed has been thoroughly fined, proper handling will bring the corn crop along, with the minimum amount of rainfall. The problem, says Indiana Farmer, is to maintain good capillary action between the lower water systems and the soil where the roots are growing. When the water moves upwards and strikes the dust blanket it is checked, and it must pass out through the plant, rather than by evaporation. It is a pretty nice problem, but the aim should be to make all water and fertilizing material pass through the roots of the growing plants, work for the dust mulch; don't dig down to the wet soil, so that with every cultivation you expose more soil to the sun.

MEDITATIONS.

Failure comes to the faint hearted.

Fear of being caught stands for conscience in some men.

Much of the fertility of American soils has been wasted by the men that have cultivated it.

No man should call himself a good farmer if his land has been growing less productive from year to year.

It is not safe to be governed by the results of a trial of one year on the farm, for frequently results are brought about by conditions which we know nothing about.

The most nutritious hay is made when grasses or clover are in bloom. A delay of one week in the cutting period will make a big difference in the actual feeding value of the crop.

With the prospect of a short hay crop, put away some sheaf oats, when harvest comes again. They make fine feed; in fact, if they are not put up before the straw becomes too ripe, there is nothing better.

Sheep Are Best Producers.

Prof. F. B. Mumford of the Missouri experiment station says that sheep produce more meat from a pound of grain than any other class of farm animals. In fact, a pound of mutton can be produced from about half as much grain as a pound of beef. Even Missouri's mortgage-lifting hog requires more grain to produce a pound of human food than the sheep. With the combination of corn and clover hay for feed, the dry shed for shelter, sheep will always give good account of themselves and respond readily to the care given them.

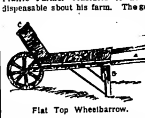
Save the Lambs and Pigs.

Save the lambs; save the pigs. The ewes and sows will need some green food at this time, or at least some bran and oil meal. If the bowels are kept open and appetites good there won't be much trouble with the youngsters when they arrive.

HARROWING THE CORN.

Do It, and Do It at the Right Time to Obtain Best Results.

Much good can be done with a harrow in a corn field where it is intelligently used, and more harm can be done when put in the hands of a man who knows little and cares less. A very light, slant tooth harrow should be used for this purpose, and then if the field is clear of rubbish so that the harrow can be kept clean it should be most excellent work. Care should be taken not to go on the field when the soil is wet and sticky. One should aim, however, to get on the field as soon after a rain as possible and still do good work before the surface gets dry and crusted. If the harrow is kept moving from the time the corn is planted until it begins to break ground the field will be loose and free from weeds, and then one should keep off until he can follow the rows with the corn cultivator.



I do not like to harrow corn after it is up, says a correspondent of the Northwestern Farmer. I will not say one cannot raise a good crop and harrow it; but it is usually detrimental and ordinarily does more harm than good. It is not necessary where one does justice to the ground before this time. Corn is one of the crops that must have attention at the right time if the best results are secured, as no amount of after work will fully make up for neglect.

I have often seen a good man and team do more work and better work in one day in a cornfield, than three men and three teams could in the same length of time later on. This was doing the right thing at the proper time and "taking the stitch in time that saves nine" later on.

A FLAT TOP WHEELBARROW.

One Which Will Be Specially Handy in Transporting Boxes, Etc.

We present herewith a sketch of a wheelbarrow which a correspondent of Prairie Farmer considers to be indispensable about his farm. The general idea of construction is very well brought out in the illustration. The two side pieces A A are six feet long and are 15 inches apart at the wheel. The end C is supported by two side pieces which are mortised to AA. Frame work is then covered by boards. B is a leg nailed to the bar, extending up to the frame. This kind of a wheelbarrow is recommended for transporting anything in boxes or barrels, finding it particularly suitable for transporting hives of bees.

Flat Top Wheelbarrow.

Keep Good Horses.

We know a farmer who has over $1,000 invested in old plug horses. Ringbones, spavins, wire cuts, curbs and blemishes are noticeable. He has ten head and none of them can be depended on for a decent day's work. He has a neighbor who has three horses, free from blemishes, which cost him $600, but with these three horses he can do more work in a season on a third of the feed than the man who has ten head. At the present price of feed, a horse is not worth keeping unless he is a good one and able to do lots of hard work.

Keep Account of Your Time.

Keep an account of every hour's time needed to prepare the ground, plant the seed, tend the crop and harvest the grain. To this add a reasonable amount for wear and tear of machinery, and the legal rate of interest upon the money invested in the land. When the crop is harvested figure the number of bushels at the prevailing market. If the expense account exceeds the other, then set about to increase the productiveness of the land so that it will produce more the year following.

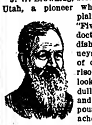
The Farmer's Income.

One of our exchanges says that $1,000 net income on the farm is better than an income of $3,000 in the city. Of course many of our readers will not believe this, but it is true, nevertheless. The man who has $1,000 clear on the farm after all expenses are paid had better not change places with the city man whose total income does not exceed $3,000 and out of which he has to pay all expenses.

Old Seed Corn.

An extensive corn grower asks whether we would advise planting seed corn two years old, and which now germinates 94 per cent. By all means, yes, replies Indiana Farmer. It is safer to risk that two-year-old seed than seed of 1906, which might show a germination of 98 per cent. The old seed will be more vigorous, but it will require more moisture to start germination.

In Raising Sugar Beets.



I have found it a very good thing to roll my sugar beets lightly just before thinning them. I usually cultivate once before thinning and again immediately after and then once every ten days until the beets become so large that the cultivator would injure the leaves too much, then I ditch them and lay them by.

See that the little chicks, as well as the older ones, have plenty of water, and renew it often.

A WONDERFUL GAIN.

A Utah Pioneer Tells a Remarkable Story.

J. W. Browning, 1011 22d St., Ogden, Utah, a pioneer who crossed the plains in 1848, says: "Five years ago the doctors said I had diabetes. My kidneys were all out of order, I had to rise often at night, looked sallow, felt dull and listless and had lost 40 pounds. My back ached and I had spells of rheumatism and dizziness. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me of these troubles and have kept me well for a year past. Though 75 years old, I am in good health."

Great Cricketer's Simple Tribute to His Own Worth.

In 1885 there was a great celebration in London in honor of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and among those in attendance was the Australian "crack" cricketer, Bonner, then at the height of his fame.

As one of the guests, says the compiler of the recently published "Letters" of the late Dr. George Birkbeck Hill, Bonner's health was proposed. His response was noteworthy.

"After seeing the way in which Dr. Johnson's memory is revered," he said, with great simplicity, "I am not sure that I would not rather have been such a man than have gained my own greatest triumphs in cricket."—Youth's Companion.

SORES AS BIG AS PENNIES.

Whole Head and Neck Covered—Hair All Came Out—Cured in Three Weeks by Cuticura.

"After having the measles my whole head and neck were covered with scaly sores about as large as a penny. They were just as thick as they could be. My hair all came out. I let the trouble run along, taking the doctor's blood remedies and rubbing on salve, but it did not seem to get any better. It stayed that way for about six months; then I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies, and in about a week I noticed a big difference, and in three weeks it was well entirely and I have not had the trouble any more, and as this was seven years ago, I consider myself cured. Mrs. Henry Porter, Albion, Neb., Aug. 25, 1906."

HOW HE BROKE A RECORD.

Took Last Jump from Forgotten Rubber Home Plate.

Billy Powell, greatest hurdler the west has produced, was referring to his college days on the Berkeley track.

"There were five in the race. I drew the extreme outside lane, which gave me a bad finish stretch. But I got a peach of a start, swept the curve like a yacht on her beam ends and came down the straight taking the jumps in beautiful style. I felt I had a varsity record in me at that clip, and I threw all my power into the final strides. Springing for the ninth hurdle I fairly flew through the air, and, dashing to the finish, broke the tape, the world's record for the low hurdles, for the 220-dash, and for the running broad jump, the time being 21 flat, and my last jump over two hurdles at once, clearing 43 feet and some inches.

"Whew!" exclaimed Ollie Snedigar, "why weren't the records ever allowed?"

"Well," continued Powell, "when they went to measure that leap, Col. Edwards started to shove his cane in, to indicate my foremost spike mark, and the stick jumped out of his hand. They scraped the short grass away and found a solid rubber home plate imbedded where the varsity battery used to practice."—San Francisco Chronicle.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT

Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning.

"A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness.

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum Food Coffee, and it is such a comfort to have something we can enjoy drinking with the children.'

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact.

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions and boiled it fifteen minutes after the boiling began. It was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich delicious flavour. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better and better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destroying regular coffee for any money."

"There's a Reason." Read the famous little "Health Classic," "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A Sad Mistake.

"In my father's native village lives Mr. S., a very deaf old man. During the summer months he lets his spare rooms to some of the many pleasure-seekers who frequent the place, says a Boston Herald writer, and one day last summer, while Mr. S. was in his garden, a young man of the village chanced by, and the following conversation took place:

"Good morning, Mr. S."

"Mawnin'."

"You've got your house full of boarders this summer."

Mr. S. was picking potato bugs off from his plants, but he managed to stop long enough to answer, "Yes."

"Some nice looking young ladies among them," continued the young man.

Mr. S. stood up and eyed the potatoes critically, then answered:

"Well, they'd ought to look purty good. I just picked two quarts of bugs off 'em."

Stolen Naps.

"How do you like that office boy I sent around?" asked the banker.

"Don't think much of him," replied the broker. "He isn't wide awake."

"But you told me the last office boy you engaged was too forward and you wanted one who was retiring."

"Yes, but this one is too retiring. Every time I slip out for a few hours I find that he retires on top of the big safe and snores until I return."

CREAM SHIPPERS

The wide-awake farmer who has cream to dispose of, naturally wants to sell it to the best advantage. It is a fact that some creameries pay more than others, and the reason is that some market their butter better and realize more out of it than others. All creameries have to sell their butter and the one that makes good butter and has an established trade realizes more out of it and consequently can pay the farmer more for his cream.

We have been in business nineteen years and have a reputation for making the finest butter, and get a better price the year around than any creamery in the Northwest, consequently we can do better by you than any other creamery can.

This summer we have contracted with a large packer for all the butter we can make above what we use for our retail trade at a BIG PRICE so we can afford to pay big prices all summer and we are going to do it.

If you are a cream shipper and are not already on our books we invite you to start at once and keep on all summer right through till fall, and we can promise you larger returns for your cream than you ever got during the summer before.

Don't pass this by as an ordinary advertisement, we mean it, and mean every word of it.

We pay spot cash for every can as it comes in. No delay, no waiting. For every can you ship the money goes to you by return mail. You know what your cream is bringing you each day. We guarantee safe return of all empty cans.

MOTHERHOOD

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism, curing displacements, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth. Note what Mrs. James Chester, of 427 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to the good it did me. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now."

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

Sendai, Japan.—Although made famous by a famine, Sendai is now the center of a record rice crop. From a condition of hunger and distress that rattled forth more than $200,000 from warm-hearted Americans, this region has now passed into a period of rare prosperity. The rice crops are 20 per cent. above the average.

A Famine and International Relations.

Only memories and a few hundred orphans remain as reminders of the dreadful famine of a year or so ago. Among the memories is an enhanced appreciation of Americans and their religion. The aid so promptly and generously given during the famine has affected all of Japan. In amount it exceeded the gifts of Japan and all the rest of the world combined, reaching a total of $300,000. In this region especially the feeling towards "the rice country" — which, curiously enough, has always been the way the Japanese write the word "America"—is warm beyond expression. The governor of the province, the mayor of the city, the generals in command of the military forces here, the presiding judge of the courts, the editor of the leading newspaper, and many prominent citizens assured me in most cordial terms of the city's gratitude for the assistance rendered to the famine sufferers.

It took American enterprise to awaken over the Japanese to the serious news of the famine situation. At their Thanksgiving day service in Sendai in 1905 the American missionaries and caves hundreds of years old, carved by the Ainu, where lived the Buddhist priests from the beginning of Sendai's glory. The city is noted for its progressiveness and hospitality to foreigners, and yet for its thoroughly Japanese character. For instance, there is only one vehicle in the city for which a horse is driven, and that is the prisea vaa. Of course there are draught horses, but, or as the Japanese term truly has it, "pulled" by a rope.

When Mr. Lloyd Griscom, the former United States minister to Japan, visited Sendai, the city feted him in the lavish fashion which only the Japanese know. Other Americans have had similar experiences. The American Young Men's Christian association secretaries met last summer at a little seashore village near Sendai, and literally the entire community turned out to welcome them, lining up along the road, and the school children singing songs. The village officials met the visitors a mile or so from town. An evergreen arch was erected over the main street, with the English word "welcome," and the entire convention the one day taken on an excursion to the matsushima.

How the Missionaries Stand.

All this is noteworthy in the light of the fact that Sendai knows few foreigners save missionaries. With the exception of two teachers in the government schools, the entire foreign community in Sendai is made up of Christian preachers and teachers.

A Famine Sack.

formed the first committee of relief, for their work throughout the three affected provinces had made them familiar with the dreadful conditions. Of the 2,000,000 inhabitants of these provinces, 1,000,000 were poverty-stricken. When it set out upon its task of exciting international sympathy for the sufferers (one curious and unprecedented consequence of which was the gift of $75,000 by the dowager empress of China from her private purse) this committee added an English teacher and a French priest to its number. It was this small body of seven men which not only touched the heart of Christendom with its appeals, but even stirred the Japanese themselves, in the latter score.

The recognized fact that these leaders in famine relief—a work which, I learn, was carried on in most businesslike fashion, and in closest cooperation with the Japanese officials—were Christian missionaries, and the American religious newspaper, The Christian Herald, was in the forefront of the contributing agencies, and that great quantities of rice, especially that given by the German Reformed churches, came in "Christian sympathy" bags, could not fail to make a decided impression. If anything was needed to strengthen the respect of the Japanese heretofore for the American religion the famine relief work did it.

Where Americans Are Welcome.

This city is a strategic point in Japan. With a hundred thousand inhabitants, it is considered the metropolis of the north. It has 1,500 soldiers in garrison, and some 3,000 student in its schools. On its bay is Matsushima, one of the "three beautiful places" in Japan, a series of lovely islands, pine-covered and water-worn, with a famous temple on one. From them the city has obtained its favorable impressions of foreigners. It is said that any white man's word is perfectly good in the stores of the city. The attitude of the officials is certainly more than kind; it is cordial and sympathetic to the last degree. On the occasion of the return of Rev. Dr. D. B. Schneder from America he was met at the station by all the prominent officials of the city and province, as well as by a multitude of other persons. It is said that Dr. Schneder, who is the oldest missionary of the Reformed church here, and Rev. Dr. John H. DePuy, of the American board, are the leading citizens of Sendai. Certainly they are high in the friendship and honor of the official classes.

Going the Japanese One Better.

First in importance and magnitude of the numerous Christian enterprises in this place are the two great schools of the German Reformed church, the Tohoku Gakuin, for young men, and the Miyagi Jo Gakko for young women; these schools, though practically all others in Japan, are known by other names in America, which are practically never heard here. These two schools are more modern and better equipped than even the government schools. It was really a surprise to find, ont here in a remote part of Japan, American schools, supported and controlled by Americans, which compare favorably with similar institutions in the home land. The buildings are modern and imposing, far surpassing in appliances and arrangement any of the several government schools which I have inspected. The wisdom of this is most appreciated by those who best understand the Japanese character; here in the seat "face," or "trust," as the American slang has it, must always be considered.

The nearly 300 students of the Tohoku Gakuin are enrolled in preparatory, collegiate and theological departments. The staff of teachers numbers 29, seven of whom are Americans, with Dr. Schneder at their head. I was particularly struck with the strength of Paul L. Gerhard and William G. Seiple, Ph. D., the latter a Johns Hopkins man whose hobby is archaeology. Likewise, Miss Weidner, Miss Powell and Miss Zurfluh, of the girls' school, impressed me as strong teachers and executives who would not be without honor in their own country. All that the government schools teach, and more, is given in the Tohoku Gakuin, the students of which, like those of the former, are exempted from military service. The vigorous athletics of the Japanese, as well as baseball and other American games, form a part of the physical training. Many of the students support themselves, working and living in the industrial home which the denomination maintains at Sendai, rising at two and three o'clock in the morning to deliver milk and newspapers. There is a pronounced religious life among the students; they have a Y. M. C. A., and hold student prayer meetings on the roof of the college tower; they do evangelistic work in the country, teach in Sunday schools, etc. One of them was my interpreter when I was called upon to make an address to the Masachurian veterans and other soldiers in the military hospital, and he certainly was a self-possessed, free and forceful speaker.

Making the Most of Miss Japan.

Japan's newly awakened interest in the education of women affords the missionaries an opportunity for work that reaches far. There are three schools for girls in Sendai, maintained by American churches. As already said, that of the Reformed church, which has been in existence since 1886, is the largest and best equipped. It is run by three American young women, with a staff of 14 Japanese teachers, and has 190 students. All but two of the graduates of this school have been Christians; and the aggressiveness of the Christianity of the undergraduates students is indicated by the fact that every week 20 different Sunday schools are supplied with workers by the school.

A similar high religious standard is maintained by the Baptist school, which has 50 pupils and less pretentious buildings. The Methodist girls' school, with about 80 pupils, of whom 25 live in dormitory, is industrial in character and does efficient work with an equipment unequal to that of the neighboring schools.

The Missionary as Matrimonial Agent.

When calling at the Baptist school I was at first unable to see Miss Buzzelle, the principal, as she was busy condoling with a young man who wanted to marry one of her girls and was trying to enlist her help. I later met the young man, and a fine fellow he seemed. He had seen the girl once and she had seen him. She was willing, and he was eager—extraordinarily so, as such matters go in Japan. But his family felt that the girl's social position was not equal to his, though they finally consented to the match. Thereupon the girl's family, its pride aroused, refused to let her marry the man; and inasmuch as in this country a girl really marries a whole family, and her future happiness is determined more by her husband's relatives than by the latter himself, Miss Buzzelle thought the decision wise and declined to intervene for the ardent suitor. A measure of this sort of responsibility goes with the principleship of a girls' school, always, of course, with the cooperation of the family. The graduates are desired as wives, first of all by the Japanese preachers and Christians. An increasing number of educated men, not Christians, are selecting mission school wives, although the teachers rather discourage the girls from marrying any but Christian men.

Caring for Famine Orphans.

Most appealing to me of all the sights of Sendai was the orphanage which is an outgrowth of the famine. Here 250 children, some of them little girls who were sold from being immoral lives, find a home under the care of Miss Frances E. Phelps, a Methodist Episcopal missionary who nobly represents America's finest article of export—the cultured, fine-spirited, self-sacrificing woman who have given their lives to what they consider the world's highest welfare. Miss Phelps has under this great company of children, ranging in age from two or three years to thirteen or fourteen, some of them orphans only because abandoned by their parents during the famine.

They are a healthy, merry lot, although when rescued there were only two who were free from the dreadful eye trouble so common among the poor of Japan, and all were covered with rags, filth and vermin. Conversation in their appearance within these few months is no more marked than their development along other lines. They sing the Christian hymns, in wide variety, more heartily than I have ever heard them sung by a Sunday school in America. On a slight financial foundation this orphanage is doing a work of vast importance, which must commend itself to one's sympathy and judgment, be he Hottentot, Buddhist or Christian.

The Calmness of Despair.

Scribnerite — Good heavens! We can't stay over night in this hotel!

Comedian—What is the matter with it?

Scribnerite—The bellhop says it's haunted.

Comedian—That settles it. We stay. It is our only chance this season of ever seeing the ghost which is genuinely American.

AROUND THE CIRCLE

HOW THE PRACTICE OF HOME TRADE HELPS EVERYBODY.

THE RESULT OF ADVERTISING

An Increased Use of Printers' Ink in the Local Paper Brought Prosperity to the Entire Community.

"You'll have to stay over Sunday, Mary, as I can have a chance for a visit with you. Can't possibly get the time through the week. Business too lively."

"Things must be getting better with you, John. Last time I was here you seemed to have lots of time to spare. Said business had gone to the dogs, or rather to the mail-order houses. What made the change?"

"Well, to tell the truth, Mary, I just wakened up one day and thought I would give them fellows in the city a little of their own medicine. I got onto the fact that they were killing me by feeding the people around here on printer's ink in the way of advertising, and while I knew most of what they said was lies the people didn't know it, and I started in to show them what I could do. Not at all like they voted me a raise in salary for the coming year. In a talk made by Brother Jones he explained that this was possible because the people were keeping their money at home rather than sending it to the catalogue houses of the cities. Brother Frank (the postmaster) explained that the money order business of his office had dropped to almost nothing, within the past six months. He said that less than a year ago he was handling more than $1,000 each month in the shape of money orders, and that now the total is not one-fourth of that. I understand that they will also increase the school teacher's salary next term."

"A 12-page paper this week, I see. Anything special doing?"

"Not at all. That's to be the regular size of the Record in the future. The increase in business warrants it. The campaign of advertising being conducted by the merchants forced me to increase the size or encroach upon my reading matter columns, and so I increased. Than, too, my subscription list is growing. People who never took the paper before say they want it now if for nothing more then to keep posted on the prices the merchants are quoting. Business in the Record office is booming all around. I have had to advertise for two more job printers, and have just ordered a new printing press. By the way, is that horse you offered me soma time ago still on the lying, you know, but et selling good goods as cheap as the city fellows did, and lots of times a little cheaper. "I went to the local paper and pratty near scared the editor to death by ordering a half page of each issue for six months. Then I set about seeing what I had to sell that the people would want. I really didn't know what was in that store until I started to look it over. Some of the things had been there so long I had forgotten about them. I handled them out and put a bargain sale price on them, told the people about them in the next week's Record, and gave the prices, and say, I just couldn't get them things wrapped up fast enough. Ever since then I've just been buying and selling, buying and selling. Seems like nothing stays in the store. Have hired two more clerks, and they're everlastingly telling me we're out of this, that or the other thing. I just tell 'em to tell the people what you've got and what you are willing to sell them for pays. I've paid off that mortgage that's been hanging over us for the last ten years, and gave $100 to the new church building fund, and it's advertising that did it.

"You'll stay over Sunday, won't you? I've got to get to the store now."

"Jones ordered a new delivery wagon this morning, Jane. Said since the folks around here had gotten used to home and quit sending so much money to the mail-order houses he simply had to have it. You see, have what I make on that wagon to get that new dress with that you've been wanting. Wish you'd buy it of Jones though for he always trades with me."

"Yes, sir, I figure I'm ahead a little more than the freight on that buggy, besides getting a better buggy than you got. I intended to send away for mine, too, like you did, but I saw Brown's advertisement telling the kind of a buggy he had and the price, and I concluded I'd look at it first. He's making better prices than the catalogue fellows, and he's paying the freight besides. I figure that I saved just about enough on that buggy to pay the doctor's bill for Molly's sickness, and then, besides, Brown ordered his hay of me, and he's paying a good price for it, too."

"Now, my dear, you may engage Miss Herman to give Princess music lessons for the winter, prosperity is returning to Jonesville, and I'll be a candidate for the office of justice of the peace next fall. Let's go down town and get a bite to eat."

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

TEN GOOD REASONS.

Read Them and Patronize the Merchants of This Town.

Here are ten good reasons for trading with your home business people, right in your own exchange.

Because: You examine your purchase and are assured of satisfaction before investing your money.

Because: Your home merchant is always ready and willing to make right any error or any defective article purchased of him.

Because: When you are sick or for any reason it is necessary for you to ask for credit, you can go to the local merchant. Could you ask it of a mail order house?

Because: If a merchant is willing to extend you credit you should give him the benefit of your cash trade.

Because: Your home merchant pays local taxes and exerts every effort to build and better your market, thus increasing both the value of city and country property.

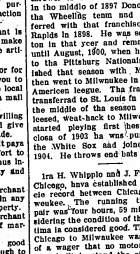
Because: The mail order merchant does not lighten your taxes or in any way hold the value of your property.

Because: The mail order merchant does nothing for the benefit of market, social or real estate values.

Because: If your town is good enough to live in it is good enough to spend money in.—Gov. Folk of Missouri.

Because: The best citizens in your community patronize home industry. Why not be one of the best citizens?

Because: If you give your home merchant an opportunity to compete, by bringing your order to him in the quantities you buy out of town, he will demonstrate that, quality considered, he will save you money.



Search for Old Cannon.

A tradition still survives in Luserna county, Pa., that when Gen. John Sullivan marched through that region in 1779 on his expedition against the Indian confederacy of central New York, he buried some superfluous brass cannon along the Wilkes-Barre mountain. To search for these revolutionary relics a number of the best known citizens of Ashley have formed themselves into an historical society. One recent Sunday the members scoured the mountain in the vicinity of Laurel Run, but could find no relics of the kind, nothing save points.

Sporting Gossip.

If any one of the contests in the ring is to be especially commented upon at present, it is the difference in financial status prevailing among some of the men who are on the center of the stage just at present and that existing a few years ago. Take Abe Attell, for instance. When he won from George Dixon in the fall of 1901 he had just been brought from the west by Jack McKeown. Attell had made quite a reputation, in a mild way, by fighting a couple of draws with Dixon, but no manager had come forward to claim him. McKeown picked him up and decided to take him east. His had found Abe hanging around Young Corbett's training quarters in Denver. Abe fought Harry Forbes once and Broad a couple of times in St. Louis, and then went on with Ivery Ymger. This was the biggest house he had battled before in his career, the receipts being more than $4,000. Yanger got the verdict, the police stopping the fight in the nineteenth. Out of the amount won Attell received exactly $15. To-day Abe is nhlo to draw down $1,500 for a 20-round go in Philadelphia, and is credited with making money rapidly. Mike Schreck, who can now command a fair-sized sum in any battle, fought one of the hardest scraps of his career in January, 1902, at St. Louis, with Hugo Kelly. The fight went 15 rounds and there was a total of $7,000 in the house. The fighters divided $400. Is right next go they drew $8,000. Today the sama fight would drew more than that many thousands at the event. The same evening that Jack Sullivan was knocked out his brother Mike, now mentioned as a candidate for the welterweight championship, won a preliminary. He received the magnificent sum of $50 for his share.

John A. Donohue, first lieutenant of the Chicago Americans league club, was one of the chief individual factors in the capture of the world's championship fall of 1906, his fielding being phenomenal and game-saving, and his batting most timely. Donohue was born on July.12, 1879, at Springfield, O. He played his first game of real baseball at Marietta, O., in 1896, starting as a catcher, where a left-handed thrower is under a heavy handicap. In the middle of 1897 Donohue joined the Wheeling team and was transferred with that franchise to Grand Rapids in 1898. He was sold to Dayton in that year and remained there until August, 1900, when he was sent to the Pittsburg Nationals. He finished that season with Minneapolis, then went to Milwaukee in 1901 in the American league. The franchise was transferred to St. Louis in 1902 and in the middle of the season he was released, weat-back to Milwaukee, and started playing first base. At the close of 1903 he was purchased for the White Sox and joined them in 1904. He throws and bats left-handed.

Ira H. Whipple and J. F. Alofsin, of Chicago, hava established a motor cycle course between Chicago and Milwaukee. The running time of the pair was four hours, 35 minutes. Considering the condition of the roads, the time is considered good. The run from Chicago to Milwaukee is the result of a theory that no motor cycle was ever built to stand the strain of the 100 miles in five hours. Whipple of the Chicago motor cycle "trust" had one end of the wager and William Mohn had the other. It is not known if the wagered was small, but the feeling was high. The pair covered 135 miles in the run, which is to the knowledge of the road, being lost' three times, near Glencoe, Lake Bluff and Lakeside.

Although the Chinese baseball players are mighty scarce in this country over in Honolulu there is a team composed exclusively of Chinese and they play good baseball. The team is called the Chinese Alohas. In a recent game with the players representing the Hawaiian Hotel the Chinese team won by the score of 9 to 8. The line-up of the Chinese team is as follows: F. Yon, catcher; Chang Yen, pitcher; N. Sheng, first base; Ah Yap, second base; Yuan Chew, third base; Hoi Sing, shortstop; Ho Yong, right field; Ah Sam, center field; Hung Ryam, left field.

News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

FAIR SEX IS CROWDING INTO EVERY OCCUPATION

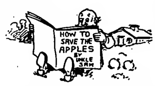
WASHINGTON.—The progress of the modern woman in the industrial world and how she is crowding into occupations hitherto monopolized by man is made known in a report issued by the government census bureau. The figures are based on the census returns of 1900 and show that even that long ago woman had invaded all but nine of the 303 occupations in which the bread winners of the United States were engaged. As to whether she has wedged her way into these nine occupations in which man was then dominant the report sheds no light.

The returns show, among other things, that five women were employed as pilots. On steam railroads ten were employed as baggagemen, 31 as brakemen, seven as conductors, 45 as engineers and firemen, and 26 as switchmen, yardmen and flagmen, and 43 were carriage and hack drivers, six were ship carpenters, and two roofers and slaters. One hundred and eighty-five were returned as blacksmiths and 508 as machinists; eight were boilermakers, 31 charcoal, coke and lime burners, and 11 were well borers. Two women were also reported as "motormen."

The number of women at work more than doubled in the 20 years from 1880 to 1900, and there was a noticeable increase of bread winners among married women in 1900, as compared with 1890.

Almost one-fourth of the total number of women at work were servants, 456,405 were farm laborers, 96.8 per cent. of whom were from the Southern states, and 361,804 were negroes. There were 338,14 dressmakers, 327,206 teachers, 328,935 laundresses, 307,706 farmers, 231,458 textile mill operatives, and 146,929 housekeepers and stewardesses.

TO RETIRE ARMY MULES ON A PENSION OF GRASS

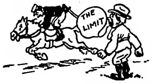


A movement to pension the army mule and furnish him a home when his days of usefulness are over has been started, and if it receives the cooperation of humane societies a bill will be passed by the next congress prohibiting the sale of the obstinate "critters" owned by the government. Under present laws the army mule, along with all other government property, must be condemned when useless and sold to the highest bidder. Patriotic societies which have been organized to look after the welfare of veterans have been asked to join in the movement to provide at government expense quarters and feed for horses and mules which have served faithfully with Uncle Sam's army so as to save them from inhumane treatment.

W. H. Lowder of Miles Camp, Spanish War Veterans, who is taking a leading part in the agitation in behalf of the friendless mule, at a meeting of his camp here, said:

"It is a pitiable sight to see our old army horses and mules, after having seen service in foreign countries, sold to unscrupulous horse dealers. Every one of them are marked with the United States army service mark and it is a disgrace that they should be hitched up to scavenger wagons, ash and brick carts.

Officials of the war department who have command of the army rules raise no objection to the suggestion, and say that if permitted by law it could be easily arranged to find a comfortable home for the worn-out army mules.



FARMERS TOLD HOW TO USE THE APPLE CROP

THE plant industry bureau of the department of agriculture has decided that the apples of the country are not sufficiently utilized for food purposes and has issued a bulletin of advice to the farmers, telling them how to use the stock that is of too poor a grade for the general market. It pays special attention to the "evaporation" of apples as being particularly valuable in using up the fruit that might ordinarily go to waste.

It points out that the portion of a fruit crop which is of too low grade to market in the ordinary way can often be made to pay at least a large part of the expense of maintaining the orchard or fruit plantation if it is converted into some other form or handled in some way other than that practiced with the better grades. The report details various methods of operating the industry, of handling the waste, the laws on the subject, and the grading and storing of the products.

"While the recent tendency in the apple industry," says Chief Galloway of the bureau, in the bulletin, "has apparently been to centralize fruit evaporation into distinct commercial establishments having considerable capacity and requiring capital to construct and equip, there still remain large regions in which there is considerable surplus of fruit that is unsuitable for packing and shipping in almost every crop year. Encouragement of evaporating, canning, cider making and other methods of utilization appears desirable, and of these evaporating is the one that is most applicable at present to a wide range of conditions, and therefore of most importance to the average farmer."

PRESIDENT ORDERS HARD TEST FOR ARMY OFFICERS

ARMY officers are poor horsemen, in the opinion of President Roosevelt, who has directed that they ride fifteen miles one day every other year at a gallop, trot, and a walk, to test their skill in horsemanship.

President Roosevelt has written a letter on this subject to the secretary of war. The secretary of war has issued an order directing that the president's ideas be carried out. The letter has caused consternation in the army. It is as follows:

"As I have personally observed some of the field officers were physically unable to ride even a few miles at an increased gait, and as I deem it essential that the field officers of the army should be at all times physically fit and able to perform the duties pertaining to their positions, especially in the field; and as I believe that such physical fitness can only be demonstrated by actual physical tests, I desire that you give the necessary instructions to have the physical condition of all officers of the line who are to come up for examination or promotion to the grade of field officer actually tested for skill and endurance in riding, this in addition to the physical examination now required by law.

"I further desire that an annual or biennial test of the physical condition and skill in horsemanship of all field officers of the line be made under the personal supervision of the several department commanders when making their annual inspections.

"The tests should be thorough and should consist of a ride not less than 15 miles,

IN THE LIMELIGHT

A PICTURESQUE MAN

John R. Hegeman, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, who has been indicted on seven counts for forgery in the third degree and three for perjury, is the most picturesque figure in the insurance game. He is long-haired, gray and swarthy. The indictments grew out of certain "year-end" transactions in which the annual statements to the state insurance department are said to have been "doctored."

Hegemen is a striking personality, both physically and intellectually. In facial contour he bears a strong resemblance, some think, to the late Edwin Booth. His hair is worn in long ringlets which flow over his shoulders and this part of his adornment is his particular pride. The curling locks now streaked with gray are cared for as carefully as the hair of any woman, and when he sits in the sunlight his head appears to be covered with a mass of floss silk. His face is smooth shaven and the cameo-like features are accentuated by a pair of clear, gray eyes that light up wonderfully when his favorite topic—life insurance—is under discussion.

He usually wears an old-fashioned stock and a standing collar, a long frock coat of dark material and light-colored trousers.

His entire life since boyhood has been devoted to figures and to statistical work. He was born in New York in April, 1844, and when he was 22 years old he became the accountant of the Manhattan Life Insurance company where he first displayed those faculties which subsequently elevated him to a position at a salary of $100,000 a year. He left the Manhattan company to become the secretary of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, and in that capacity his zeal and his unflagging energy increased the business of the company to such an extent that the directors voted to make him the vice president. He continued as vice president of the company until October, 1891, when he was elected president.

LEADS WAR ON WHITE PLAGUE

Dr. Frank Billings of Chicago, president of the Illinois state board of charities and a noted physician, has been elected president of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. This organization of doctors, which has already done important work toward the stamping out of the white plague, has just held a largely attended convention in Washington.

After the death of the late Marshall Field Dr. Billings sent in the following bill:

"To services rendered from January 10 to January 17, day and night attendance, time of journey to and from New York—$25,000."

This fee, one of the largest ever paid an American doctor, was allowed without question.

Dr. Billings is noted as a diagnostician. He is a member of most of the technical societies of the medical profession and is consulting physician in many of the Chicago hospitals. In 1902-3 Dr. Billings was president of the American Medical association, and he also has been president of the Chicago Medical society. He is 53 years old and was graduated from Northwestern university medical school in 1881.

Dr. Billings attracted much attention last fall by advocating state regulation of marriage. In a widely-quoted speech he said:

"I do not believe there should be such freedom of marriage. I am no lawyer, but I would like to see society put on its statute books a law forbidding two people to be married, not merely until they had secured a certificate of health from a physician, but until they had obtained a certificate of inheritance showing their antecedents.

"This sounds drastic, but the increase in the defective classes is so impressive as to warrant such a conclusion. Two per cent. of the population of Illinois is insane. The number of defectives is increasing three per cent. annually."

PLANS HAVEN FOR HOBOES

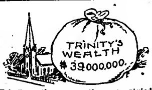
Dr. Ben L. Reitman, organizer of the Brotherhood Welfare association, an institution designed to uplift the "Weary Willie" band more commonly known as tramps, who recently gave an elaborate banquet at a prominent Chicago hotel to a typical gathering of "knights of the road," has aroused reformers and others by his unique plan and many are already becoming interested in his scheme.

Dr. Reitman was born in St. Paul January 1, 1879, and when 12 years old he ran away from home and took up the "Weary Willie" profession. For five years he remained at home and went to school or worked for a period of seven months out of the year and the balance of the time he put in tramping about the nation. At the age of 17 he became fireman on a tramp steamer out of Tampa, Fla., to Europe and sailed around the world several times as first, second and third class and steerage passenger, as sailor, fireman, cook, steward, ship doctor and stowaway. He also has traveled throughout different countries in the guise of tourist, companion, beggar, tramp and investigator. After obtaining knowledge of the world and the various modes of living by its inhabitants Dr. Reitman decided to take up the cause of the tramp and is now devoting his time to the uplifting of this well-known element.

HEAD OF NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and vice president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has, by means of her talents, applied to a lifelong and unflagging fight against the curse of intoxicating drink, achieved not only national but international fame. Than Mrs. Stevens few of our Americans are more in the public eye to-day.

But her home life and surroundings at Portland, Me., few, save her most intimate friends, know of. The Stevens homestead is in Stroudswater, a historic suburb of the charming City by the Sea which the poet Longfellow sang of. The house is of the old Colonial style, severe in its design, but conveying an unmistakable air of gentility and comfort. It is over a century old and was built for Mrs. Stevens' husband's father, who brought his bride there.



It has always been the noted occupant's aim to preserve the old-fashioned air which characterizes the residence. Nothing modern finds a place within its four walls. While electricity is available for lighting purposes kerosene lamps are the sole illuminant.

The rooms are all large and square. Some years ago Mrs. Stevens converted what was originally the kitchen into her study. Chosen for its southern exposure and for the inspiring view obtainable from its windows it is an ideal working den.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

OLD TRINITY CHURCH HAS ENORMOUS FORTUNE

NEW YORK.—There is probably no other estate in New York about which it would be so difficult to obtain exact information as that with which the Trinity church was endowed by good Queen Anne 202 years ago. The vague statement recently put forth by its rector concerning the income of the parish stimulated an inquiry by one of the title guaranty companies as to how long it would take to make a list of the various parcels of real estate held by Trinity and what such a list would cost. This brought forth the information that it would be necessary to search the public records for three centuries past and that the cost of the investigation would be not less than $1,000.

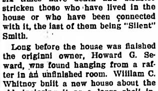
One of the principal difficulties in the way of finding out how much of the famous old "Bouwerie" of Anneke Jans is now the property of "Mrs. Trin," as the corporation was styled in a parable written in its defense longer than half a century ago, is the fact that many of the holdings are leased for long periods to others, under whose names they appear on the tax assessor's books.

Fifty years ago, when Trinity was investigated by a committee of the state senate it appeared that originally the mother of Protestant churches in New York owned 2,068 lots, of which 318 had been given away and 691 remained. The other 1,059 it was inferred, had been sold. This report is the only full one made since 1814, when the policy of keeping the financial affairs of the corporation a secret was adopted. With this report for a basis, however, and some shrewd computations of the present value of the unassessed property therein listed, Trinity's wealth in real estate has been estimated at $39,368,100.

CHARITY OF "BIG TOM" THAT MADE POOR HAPPY

IT is notable that among the 4,000,000 persons in New York there is none that is doing the sort of charity work that for years made Thomas Brennan beloved by uncounted thousands. "Big Tom," as he was known affectionately by those who were the objects of his kind solicitude and those who looked on admiringly while he gladdened the hearts of hosts of poor folks in the city, was not a wealthy man, but from his comparatively meager pile he gave most bountifully. His peculiar hobby was taking poor women and children away from the crowded quarters on holidays and out to sea or into the country. Chartering a steamer or a train, Brennan would go among the poor on the East Side and pass out tickets to scores upon scores, tickets which told them where to take the boat or the train, and how they could spend the day as his guests, with lots to eat and many games to play, music and fishing tackle for all who wanted to cast a line and bathing suits for those who wanted to swim.

The peculiar feature of Brennan's charity was that it had no tinge of politics in it. There is the Timothy D. Sullivan association which now takes thousands of poor people on excursions in the summer time, but those who go are those who live in the district where Sullivan or his machine wants support, and whose relatives have votes—at least one apiece. But Brennan favored no district, he sought to gain nothing but a look into happy dirty faces, and to make life's burden a little lighter for a few. As he went about the city when he was commissioner of charities and saw a family that needed an outing that family got an invitation to his next excursion, and there was no string attached to it. And when the day arrived the one jovial, fatherly touch of Brennan made all aboard akin.



HOODOO HOUSE OWNED BY LATE "SILENT" SMITH

WHEN "Silent" Smith purchased the palace at Sixty-eighth street prosaically known as 871 Fifth avenue, he smiled contemptuously and dismissed with his accustomed brevity of speech the warning of his friends that it was a house of doom. It is recalled that six times have death and disaster stricken those who have lived in the house or who have been connected with it, the last of them being "Silent" Smith.

Long before the house was finished the original owner, Howard G. Seward, was found hanging from a rafter in an unfinished room. William C. Whitney built a new house about the old, inclosing it as a large shell incloses a small one, but without removing the hoodoo which has clung to it since that first tragic event; for scarcely had the fairyland of Italian renaissance been completed within the brownstone walls when the bride for whom Whitney had designed it was brought in to die from the effects of a hunting accident at Aiken. Then one day the report reached the financial district that its leader lay ill in his magnificent home. Mr. Whitney died and gossip forgot the curse until last June, when Stanford White, who had helped to build and decorate the house, was shot by Harry K. Thaw.

Business adversities and ill health have overtaken Amzi L. Barber, and they call him the "asphalt king" no longer, except in derision. Now J. H. Smith, the late owner of the house, is dead. The hoodoo has struck again.

WOMEN OF FOUR HUNDRED OFTEN VISIT "UNCLE"

PAWNBROKERS are doing a land-office business with fashionable women this year. Bridge and poker losses have been so common among the elite that frequent trips are made from the green table to the loan office. It hardly would seem that the little vices of the exclusive social set could have so great an effect on anything so far removed from them in character as a pawnshop. True it is, nevertheless. Most persons in New York's bon-ton circle have money to burn, but they don't always have it when they want to start a little fire, and it's no rare thing for them to be hard pushed to pay their losses within the time prescribed by the unwritten code. Such debts must be paid, of course, and paid promptly. So off goes Miss Four Hundred to one of the several pawnshops catering to the "carriage and automobile" trade and quickly pawns anything from heirlooms to the most modern jewelry. Diamonds that have shone in the ballroom, grand opera and at many fashionable weddings have been pledged many a time. A parure belonging to one of the giddiest as well as one of the richest young belles in town has been pawned a half dozen times, it is said, during the past year. A woman of the Astor crowd recently pawned an enormous emerald with a setting of diamonds and topazes for $2,000.

Then there are women who do not restrict their pledges to gems and gewgaws. Many of them pawn their frocks. Of course, when a costly gown sometimes disappears the owner declares it was ruined through the carelessness of a new maid.

ORCHARD UNSHAKEN BY THE DEFENSE

HIS TREACHERY TO FEDERATION OF MINERS IS CLEARLY BROUGHT OUT.

He Betrayed Both Sides--Admits Thefts and Other Crimes, But Holds Tenaciously to Main Story--Lie Passed by Counsel.

Boise, Idaho, June 8.—Counsel for William D. Haywood continued their attack on the testimony of Harry Orchard at both sessions of the trial Friday, and centered their strongest assault on the events beginning with the explosion in the Vindicator mine and ending with the earlier meetings between the witness and the leaders of the Federation of Miners in Denver. To the extent that traffic with "the other side" in the war of labor and capital in Colorado was discreditable they succeeded in discrediting the witness.

Taking up the admission that Orchard made in direct examination that he had been treacherous to his comrades in Cripple Creek by tipping off a train wrecking plot, they developed the fact that Orchard entered the employ of J. C. Scott, who had charge of the railway detectives. Orchard said that with Scott he had met W. C. Sterling, a detective in the employ of the Mine Owners' association, and that Scott had paid his expenses and accompanied him to Denver on the trip when he had first met Moyer and Haywood. He said that he had agreed to report to Scott, but that he was lying to him, never intending to make reports to him, and never did make reports.

Adds to His Crime Record.

More crimes, great and small, were added to Orchard's record Friday. A Cripple Creek woman with whom he committed bigamy had three sons; Orchard stole this grade one from a mesamate; he stole two cases of powder from the Vindicator mine; he stole powder to make one of the bombs thrown into the Vindicator coal pile, and he told a lie.

The defense endeavored in various ways to throw the shadow of doubt and improbability around the whole Vindicator story.

Orchard stood the test and strain very well and held tenaciously to the story he related Wednesday and Thursday.

Counsel fired up several times during the day, and in the last passage at arms Prosecutor Hawley said that Richardson told a falsehood when he intimated that Orchard was a fixed witness.

Tells of Steunenberg Murder.

Boise, Idaho, June 7.—Harry Orchard crowned his admissions of grave crimes Thursday when, continuing his testimony against William D. Haywood, he made an explicitly detailed confession of the murder of Frank Steunenberg by an infernal machine that directly opens the way for his own conviction and execution.

He swore that the assassination of Steunenberg was first suggested by Haywood, was jointly plotted by Haywood, Moyer, Pettibone and himself, was financed by Haywood and was executed by himself after the failure of an attempt in which Jack Simpkins had participated.

Orchard lifted the total of his own murdered victims to 18, and detailed the circumstances under which he tried to murder former Gov. Peabody, Judge Goddard, Judge Gabbert, and Sheriman Bell, Dave Moffat and Frank Herne. Incidentally, he confessed that a plan to kidnap the child of one of his former associates.

Under cross-examination by the defense Orchard confessed guilt of the sordid social crimes of deserting his young child and wife in Ontario, Canada, of living in British Columbia with Hattie Simpson, the wife of another man, and committing bigamy by marrying a third woman at Cripple Creek.

Orchard on the Stand.

Boise, Idaho, June 6.—Alfred Horsley, alias Harry Orchard, the self-confessed assassin of Frank Steunenberg, went on the stand Wednesday as a witness against William D. Haywood, and there made a public confession of a long chain of brutal, revolting crimes, done, he said, at the instigation and for the pay of the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners.

Orchard confessed that as a member of the mob that wrecked the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mill in the Coeur d'Alenes he lighted one of the fuses that carried fire to the giant explosion; confessed that he set the death trap in the Vindicator at the Cripple Creek that blew out the lives of Superintendent McCormick and Foreman Beck; confessed that because he had not been paid for his first attempt at violence in the Vindicator mine he had "got even" prior to his associates by warning the managers of the Florence & Cripple Creek railway that there was a plot to blow up their trains; confessed that he cruelly fired three charges of buckshot into the body of Detective Lyte Gregory, of Denver, killing him instantly; confessed that for days he stalked Gov. Peabody about Denver, waiting for a chance to kill him; confessed that he and Steve Adams set and discharged the mine under the depot at Independence that instantly killed 14 men, and confessed that, failing in an attempt to poison Fred Bradley, of San Francisco, he blew him and his house up with a bomb of gelatin.

IS JAILED FOR CONTEMPT

SECRETARY OF UNCLE SAM OIL COMPANY PUNISHED.

Made Affidavit Accusing Federal Judges of Conspiring with the Standard Company.

Leavenworth, Kan., June 6.—Judge W. C. Hook, of the United States circuit court, Wednesday sentenced H. H. Tucker, Jr., the indicted secretary of the Uncle Sam Oil company, to serve three months in the Leavenworth county jail for contempt of court, the contempt being a sensational affidavit filed by Tucker alleging a conspiracy between Federal Judges Pollock, McPherson and Phillips and the Standard Oil company to drive the Uncle Sam company out of business.

Judge Hook delivered a terrific arraignment of Attorney Albert L. Wilson, of Kansas City, who prepared the affidavit. He said the only purpose of filing the affidavit was to create a sensation in the papers and influence the public sentiment. Hook declared there was no precedent for such an affidavit and the clerk of the court was criticised for placing it on file. It was stricken from the files by order of Judge Hook.

Tucker commenced serving his sentence Wednesday night. The bankruptcy proceedings were continued until a judge can be found who can sit in the case. Judge Pollock will not preside.

Tucker was on the stand two hours, and was subjected to a grueling examination by N. H. Loomis, general attorney of the Union Pacific, named by the court to conduct the examination. Tucker attempted to corroborate the charges in the affidavit, but before the end was reached the affidavit was prepared on hearsay.

MRS. EDDY'S TRUSTEES BEATEN.

Cannot Be Substituted for "Next Friends" in Accounting Suit.

Concord, N. H., June 6.—The petition of the three trustees to whom Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy had transferred her property, asking that they be substituted as plaintiffs in place of "next friends" in the suit to secure an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's property, was denied Wednesday by Judge Robert N. Chamberlain of the Merrimac superior court.

Within a few hours after Judge Chamberlain's decision had been announced counsel for the "next friends" caused summonses to be served upon Calvin A. Pyre, Herman B. Hering and Irving B. Tomlinson, three of the ten defendants to the original suit, requiring them to give their depositions in the equity proceedings for an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's property. A summons for Lewis C. Strang, formerly Mrs. Eddy's assistant secretary, could not be served on account of his absence from the city. The summonses are returnable Monday, July 1.

SAW THEIR WAY OUT OF CELL.

Three Army Prisoners Escape from Old Castle William.

New York, June 5.—Sawing their way through the steel bars of their cell in Castle William, three army prisoners escaped from Governor's Island, where they have not been captured. A boat is missing from the island, and the men carried the steel window bars with them as weapons.

The escaped prisoners are Henry C. Tomer, R. C. Campbell and Frank West. They were serving two and one-half year terms, respectively for theft, sleeping on post and desertion, and were confined in the same cell on the top tier in Castle William. The men used a rope ladder with which to escape. They sawed the bars of their cell, and the fact that they had saws and used a rope ladder leads the authorities at present to believe that the prisoners had outside help, and Gen. Grant has ordered a rigid investigation.

STRUNG TO CEILING BY WRISTS.

Horrible Torture of Prisoners in Santa Fe Penitentiary Charged.

Denver, Colo., June 5.—The News Tuesday printed a story from Santa Fe, N. M., to the effect that a local newspaper there charges the management of the territorial penitentiary with barbaric treatment of prisoners. An incident is told in which it is alleged that one of the prisoners was strung up by his manacled wrists with an iron chain fastened in a staple in the ceiling, with his toes barely touching the floor, and allowed to remain in this position for 17 days.

During this time, it is charged, his rations consisted of bread and water and it was only when the prisoner fell in a faint that he was released from his torture. According to the story, the charges are now being investigated by the acting governor and the attorney general.

Three Killed by Explosion.

Reddick, Ill., June 6.—Three persons were killed here Tuesday night by an explosion of a car loaded with gasoline. One of the men killed was Fred Hatting, a barber of Reddick. The others were John Frazee and Austin Stockton, both from Danville. Ten persons were injured.

Luncheon for Mark Twain.

London, June 5.—Mark Twain accepted the invitation of the Pilgrims' society to entertain him at lunch June 25. Mr. Birrell, chief secretary for Ireland, will preside and many notable persons will be present.

KNOX IS WILLING TO BE CANDIDATE

SENATOR ANNOUNCES HE WILL ACCEPT NOMINATION IF OFFERED.

Doesn't Seek the Honor—Gratified by the Action of the Pennsylvania Republicans in Indorsing Him for the Presidency.

New York, June 7.—United States Senator Philander C. Knox, of Pennsylvania, Thursday night announced his willingness to become a candidate for the presidency in 1908 should the Republican party see fit to nominate him. Senator Knox's position was made known in expressing his appreciation of the action Thursday of the Republican state convention at Harrisburg, Pa., which indorsed him as a candidate for that office.

Senator Knox, who is stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria, learned of his indorsement by the Harrisburg convention, through the press dispatches. Having read these, including an abstract of the platform adopted, he said:

"I am deeply sensible of the great honor done me by my fellow Republicans of Pennsylvania.

Gratified by the Action.

"In their convention, composed of delegates elected directly by the people, they have increased my many obligations to them by coupling with the indorsement of the administration of Theodore Roosevelt the suggestion of my name as his successor.

"I note the conventional reference to the fact that no attorney general and senator I was privileged to aid in the formulation of and in carrying into legislation and judicial decision those just policies for the protection of the people which have so greatly endeared President Roosevelt to the nation. I value the action of the convention approving such public service as I have been enabled to render in the past with a satisfaction not exceeded by my gratitude for the unsolicited pledge of support for higher honors and graver duties for the future.

Didn't Seek Indorsement.

"I have too profound a sense of the dignity of the chief magistracy and too intimate a knowledge of its labors and responsibilities to have sought this indorsement. If, however, the wishes of Pennsylvania Republicans and the reasons they assign for their action should commend themselves to the national Republican convention, I should accept its action with full appreciation of its import."

BECKER WON'T GO ON STAGE.

Milwaukee Mayor Refuses Flattering Offer of Theatrical Managers.

Milwaukee, June 6.—Mayor Sherburn Becker, of this city, has decided to decline the offer of $1,000 a week to go on the stage. He will continue his duties as mayor of Milwaukee until the end of his term, he says. He wired Fred Donagher at Chicago, representing Messrs. Brady & Grismer, saying that while he appreciated the flattering offer to play a title role, he must decline.

Rhodius Declared Insane.

Lehanon, Ind., June 8.—Judge Arman Friday declared George Rhodius, of Indianapolis, to be insane and appointed James M. Berryhill, of this city, as his guardian. Rhodius is a justice of the peace to Elma Dare, a keeper of a resort in Indianapolis. It was charged that the Dare woman kidnaped Rhodius.

Frisco Street Car Dynamited.

San Francisco, June 5.—Dynamite was exploded under the first car sent out over the MacAllister street line Tuesday. The forward trucks of the car was raised from the tracks and the passengers were badly frightened, but no serious damage was done. The explosion occurred when the car was half way between Polk street and Van Ness avenue.

AMERICAN HORSES LEAD

SEVERAL TAKE PRIZES IN THE BIG LONDON SHOW.

Pabst's Hackney Stallion Wins First Award and Champion Cup—Victory for Kentucky Hack.

London, June 8.—The first international horse show held in England, an exhibition of horses gotten together in respects to the Madison Square garden show, with the added interest that the competitors come from many countries, was opened at Olympia Friday and will continue for a week.

The morning events saw but one American horse in the ring, Sir Humphrey, a hackney stallion, the property of F. Pabst, of Milwaukee, and he carried everything before him, inking the first prize in the class for hackney stallions four years old and over, footed in or before 1902 and standing over 12.2 hands. Sir Humphrey won the champion gold cup presented by Sir John Kerr for the best hackney stallion in the show.

The American horses gave a good account of themselves in the afternoon. Poetry of Motion, owned by Lawrence Jones, of Louisville, Ky., took the first prize for ladies' hacks not under 14.2 and not exceeding 15.2 hands, and the leading lady in this class several entries from the stables of Alfred Vanderbilt and Walter Winans, an American resident of England.

In the competition for the best pair of horses with carriage and appointments Walter Winans took first and second prizes. Mr. Vanderbilt was third.

In the class for trotters, judged on style, not pedigrees or records, Mr. Winans secured both first and second prizes and Mr. Winans got third prize.

SAW NEGRO SOLDIERS SHOOT.

Brownsville Woman Thinks She Could Identify One of Them.

Washington, June 7.—Mrs. Emma Lewis, proprietor of the Lenby hotel in tirownsville, Tex., told the senate committee on military affairs Thursday that she believed she could identify one of the former negro soldiers as a member of the group that shot up the town. She was awake at the time the garrison and seeing the flashes of guns she said that she saw 16 men in khaki uniforms in the town alley shooting into the Cowan house.

She was in a window of her hotel, about 40 feet away, and two of the men looked up while she was watching them. Just at that moment several shots were fired by members of the group and she said she saw the two men distinctly. One was very black and the other a mulatto. The latter had large spots on his face and she is sure she could recognize him if she should see him. She made the description of this man tallies with the appearance of a soldier of company C, who was one of the men involved in the trouble with Mr. Tall, a customs inspector. A subpoena was issued for her to be in Washington to attend as a vestigation, but he has not been found.

CROKER WINS EPSOM DERBY.

Captures British Classic With Orby, Ridden by Johnny Reiff.

London, June 6.—Richard Croker's racehorse colt Orby, bred, Irish trained, backed by thousands of sons of Erin in two hemispheres, won the classic event, Epsom derby. Col. Baird's Wool Winder was second, and that other great Irish colt, Capt. Greer's Sliere, Gallica, prime favorite for the blue ribband of the British turf, made a gallant race, but could finish no better than third.

Croker's victory was not a popular one. His horse was ridden by Johnny Reiff, the American jockey.

Tries to Murder His Wife.

Kankakee, Ill., June 7.—After 36 years of married life, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harmes, living near Bonfield, west of here, quarreled a few weeks ago and separated. Thursday morning Harmes called at the home of his daughter, Mrs. William Schultz, where his wife was staying, and shot her. She is not expected to live.

PROBE CONSPIRACY TO CHEAT UNCLE SAM

CERTAIN RAILWAYS AND THE POST OFFICE ARE SAID TO BE INVOLVED.

Inspectors at Work—Investigation Started on President Roosevelt's Direct Order, Already Has Caused Big Saving to Government.

Cincinnati, June 8.—An investigating of the relations of the railroads and the post office department by direct order of President Roosevelt, which has already caused a saving to the government of more than $3,000,000, is declared to be now under way, in an article in The Times-Star.

The article says: "Thirty-two post office inspectors of the United States, the elite corps in the service of Uncle Sam, are at work on a case of alleged conspiracy of certain of the railroads with the post office department of the United States."

In Cincinnati Thursday.

"Four of these inspectors were in Cincinnati Thursday. They are not all still here and, in fact, none of them may be here at this moment, but they are likely to reappear any day and are to be reenforced when they do return. That they held a conference with post office inspector in charge, Holmes, at Cincinnati, is also known.

"What railroads are involved in the allegations is not stated. In brief, the facts are known but the evidence is not at hand.

Ordered from White House.

"The order to investigate is said to have gone out from the White House direct.

"That for the search for evidence has not yielded much fruit. It is being conducted with great secrecy and the least misstep might cause an upheaval to see who was responsible.

"The inquiry has been going on for months, in fact, since last December. One post office division has charge of the disbursement of $90,000,000 annually, and enough has been learned in the investigation to save the United States $2,000,000 a year. The money goes to all the sources of mail revenue, but the alleged conspiracy, from whatever department, is said to have been with certain railroads. It is in connection with the payments for the handling of the mails.

"The inspectors who were in Cincinnati were D. W. Peters, of New York; E. H. Kline, of Indianapolis; A. B. Britton, of Minneapolis, and C. A. Cisler, of Auguste, Ga."

Cortelyou Order Modified.

Washington, June 7.—Postmaster General Meyer has issued an order directing that "when the weight of mail is taken on railroad routes the whole number of days included in the weighing periods shall be used as a divisor in obtaining the average weight per day." This order amends order No. 165, issued by Postmaster General Cortelyou on March 7, 1907, by substituting the words "whole number of days the mails are weighed."

The object of the order of March 7 was to reduce the compensation paid by the post office department for transportation of the mails over railways to increase the number of days to be used as a divisor in ascertaining the average daily weight of the mails carried. The enforcement of that order, according to the department, would have worked an injustice to those railways which afford the most efficient service; that is, those lines which carry the mails seven days in a week would receive less compensation for transporting the same weight of mail than would those which give a service of only six days in each week.

LOW FARES KNOCKED OUT.

Cleveland Car Company Victor in Ohio Supreme Court.

Columbus, O., June 5.—The supreme court Tuesday in a decision in the suit of the city of Cleveland against the Cleveland Consolidated Railway company and a blow at low fares. The case was brought in the circuit court of Cuyahoga county and involved the validity of the street car franchises of the city and the company's rights to operate cheap fares. The circuit court upheld the validity of the franchises of the Consolidated Railway company and the supreme court sustained the circuit court, thus knocking out the low fare franchises.

Bobcat Attacks Rider.

Crookston.—Joseph Dobias, a farmer of Tabor township, had an exciting adventure with a bobcat and perhaps would have been killed but for the intervention of his dog. Dobias was riding from his farm to Angus and the first intimation he had of the animal's presence was when it suddenly sprang at him from the side of the road and bit viciously at his foot.

The animal which Mr. Dobias was riding was a colt, and it became frenzied at the presence of a wild cat and, throwing its rider started to bolt. The bobcat was about to leap upon the prostrate man when the dog interfered and sprang gamely at the circumstances threat. A fierce contest ensued in which the dog was getting the worst of it. By this time, however, Dobias had picked himself up and secured a club. With this weapon he waded into the melee and between the man and the dog the cat was soon killed. It was a big fellow, measuring 5 feet 4 inches in length and standing 2 feet 3 inches high.

Horse Kills Child.

St. Paul.—Struck down by a horse her father was riding, little Vera Zimmerman, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Zimmerman, received injuries from which she died a short time after the accident. Mr. Zimmerman had mounted a horse to drive a herd of cattle to a neighboring farm, the little girl and her sister following a few poces in the rear. As the start was made one of the animals bolted for the pasture gate and Mr. Zimmerman wheeled his horse to head off the runaway. In so doing the horse was upon the two little girls. One managed to escape but the other received a blow from the horse's hoof that fractured her skull, and she died in less than an hour.

Old Mystery Solved.

International Falls.—John Shaw, a native of Ellsworth, Wis., settled on a claim on Bear river, thirty miles west of here, in the fall of 1906. The following June while following a trail from his trading place to his homestead he became lost, and despite the efforts of his relatives and neighbors no trace could be found of him. Log drivers have just found the skeleton of the old man on the banks of the Bear river a short distance from his trail, they being identified by a watch and a compass. Nothing was found to indicate foul play and it is more than likely that the old homesteader died from exhaustion and exposure. The bones were buried on the homestead and the whole is a mystery that has for three years been a subject of interest in this locality.

Two Brothers Drown.

Akeley. — Henry Fegre, and Ola Fegre, aged twenty and twenty-seven years, respectively, were drowned in Akeley. In company with three other young men they were crossing the lake in a small rowboat, which was capsized. Three clung to the boat and were rescued. The Fegre boys struck out for shore, but the distance was too great and they disappeared before help could reach them. The bodies have been recovered.

Boy Killed in Runaway.

Taylors Falls.—In a collision between two run-away teams the five-year-old son of Davo Conneres of Osceola was killed, his skull being fractured. Postmaster C. D. Emery of St. Croix Falls, sustained three broken ribs; several others were slightly injured. The accident occured while on the return from a ball game and while the teams were going down a steep hill.

Two Boys Suffocated.

St. Paul.—Left alone in the house while their father and other members had gone to a wedding, the three youngest sons of Sam Kopilovich were suffocated by smoke from a fire which broke out in their home at 348 Chestnut street. Two of the boys died while being removed to the ambulance. The third was taken to the city hospital and will recover.

Ends Life With Paris Green.

Willow River.—I. W. Page, employed by the Atwood Lumber company of this place, committed suicide by taking a dose of paris green. Ill health is the only cause given for the act. He leaves a wife and three children.

Lost Boy's Body Found.

Solway.—The dead body of little "Nickie" Shepherd, three years old, who wandered away from his home near this place and became lost, was found about a mile from home in a swamp by Frank Illingbell, a neighbor of the Shepherds.

Arrest Murder Suspect.

Minneapolis.—Theodore Wicherski, wanted in Little Falls on a charge of murder, was arrested in Minneapolis by Detectives Lyons and Purcell, in company with Sheriff Frank Long of Little Falls. Some months ago Wicherski attended a celebration near Little Falls and while intoxicated got into an altercation and pulled a revolver and fired into the crowd. An elderly woman was struck and fatally wounded. Wiiherski made his escape and was discovered working in a mill in Minneapolis.

Sixis Fair Attractions.

Hamline.—Vice-President C. M. Griggs of the State Fair who is chairman of the committee of amusements, is home from a trip to Chicago and other points where he has been in touch with the best things now obtainable for amusement features, and is ready to announce, practically complete, the program of specialties for the fair of 1907.

One of the great specialties secured is a troop of light Bedouin Arabs who are expert acrobats. These are genuine Arabs wearing the costume of the desert and showing the great agility of a people trained to constant muscular activity and tremendous endurance under all conditions.

A very clever act will be presented by Willis and Hassan who are, perhaps, the best equilibrists now before the public. Their specialty is head balancing with ladders etc.

Some exceedingly fine work in the contortion line will be presented by La Carmontella an italian contortionist of European repute and "Norman the Frog Man" so called because of his ability to assume the most grotesque shapes and positions.

Comedy will be represented by Fink's mules—exceedingly funny—Marcella and Malley who do a comedy bar act and a comedy wrestling match, and the Johnny Jonee Country Circus, a laughable burlesque in which goats, pigs, geese, dogs, cats, donkeys and other domestic animals take a prominent part.

Something much above the average in trained animal showing will be seen in Haward's dogs and ponies. They put on an act in which a man and a woman ride dogs and four ponies participate in showing the remarkable attainments possible for dumb brutes.

Several fine acts will be of the aerial class. The Zamora Family is regarded as the most impressive troupe now possible to be engaged and the Weltzman are the premiers of the bicycle world. Contest will be Harold the high diver who descends from an immense height and disappears in a lake of fire, a most horribly realistic piece of work.

The most sensational of all the acts, however, is the marvelous automobile which not only leaps a great gap after descending a steep incline at high speed, but turns a complete somersault in the air before reaching the ground.

Victim of Reckless Driving.

Staples.—As the result of the alleged reckless driving of John Udach, Mrs. Peter Kelly is dead and her daughter and grandchildren are in serious conditions from injuries received in a runaway.

Mrs. Kelly and her daughter, Mrs. Howard Huff, with the latter's child, were driving into town when the team of Udach and Kelly took fright from being run into by a team of mules which were driven by the latter's son. Udach at a furious clip, The neckyoke of the Kelly team broke, allowing the pole to drop to the ground, and throwing the wagon into the ditch. The occupants were thrown violently out. Mrs. Kelly's head striking a stump. She was dead when picked up. Mrs. Huff and her child were badly cut and bruised.

Udach was arrested, but claimed to remember nothing of the runaway.

Shoots His Arm Off.

Willow River.—While out hunting and fishing Peter Solak accidentally discharged a shotgun which he was taking from a boat where he had been fishing, the contents entering his left arm near the shoulder, almost severing it from the body. He was brought to this place immediately, where the physicians found it necessary to amputate the arm. Mr. Solak is in a very weak condition and may not recover. He has a wife and four small children.

Found Dead in a Cabin.

Spooner.—A man named Davis, who used to teach school on the Canadian side of the lake, was found dead in a cabin on Racket Island, one of the islands in the Lake of the Woods, by a cook on Capt. Beandro's boat. The body of Davis, on which were night clothes, lay on the floor. It seemed as if he had tried to kindle a fire, but died before it could be done.

NEWS NOTES.

Little Falls.—Ten cans of brook trout, containing about 50,000 trout minnows, have been planted in various streams within a radius of a few miles of this city. The trout were sent from the Glenwood hatchery at the request of local anglers.

St. Paul.—A patrolman who had an alarm clock in his hat to arouse him once an hour was removed by the police board.

Cottonwood.—Fire totally destroyed the large barn on the J. O. Gray farm three miles south of here, together with nine horses, five cows, grain and machinery owned by T. Loland, the tenant. The barn was insured for $600, about one-fourth of its value, while Loland's loss is total. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Minneapolis.—A state convention of the Christian churches of Minnesota will be held in Minneapolis June 17, 18 and 19. The sessions are to be held in the Portland Avenue Church of Christ. Delegates to the number of 500 are expected to attend.

THE ERROR OF INTERRUPTION.

"Gracious, Smith, but you have a fierce cold. How did you catch it?"

"Hang me if I know how. I've taken off—"

"You idiot! And you don't know how you caught it! Why, a child could tell you. I am surprised that a man of your intelligence, or supposed intelligence—"

"I don't see any occasion for such an outburst as that. You act as though I had committed a crime. I was simply going to say I've taken off—"

"And you don't know how you caught the cold? Why, it's a wonder you're not in the hospital with pneumonia! I didn't suppose a man like you would do that. You read the papers, don't you? Every day you see interviews with doctors—"

"Excuse me, old man. I try to be patient with everybody, but you are taxing my temper to the limit. I start to tell you I've taken off—"

"Yes, and you ought to be ashamed to confess it. Don't you see interviews with our best doctors, where people not to take off their flannels until—"

"Who said anything about taking off his flannels?"

"Why, you did. You said you'd taken 'em off—"

"I didn't say anything of the kind. But I did try to say that I didn't know how I had caught this cold because I have taken awful good care of myself all this spring."—Chicago Journal.

Not Pride, But Caution.

Sweet Girl—Mother, Mr. Nicefellow is coming to take me out riding this afternoon. I may go, may'n't I?

Mother—If he drives up with a span of spirited horses, you can go; but if he comes with that broken-down old nag he had last time, you sha'n't.

"Why, mother, I didn't suppose you would ever have such a foolish pride."

"My dear, a young man who comes with a span of spirited horses expects to drive with both hands."—N. Y. Weekly.

Fool Editors.

Mrs. Grubber—Well, well! What fools these editors be!

Mr. Grubber—Eh?

Mrs. Grubber—Here I writ a letter to the editor of the Punkinville Trumpet, askin' what would be a proper an' inexpensive thing to git for a wedding present; an' here in the paper he's printed a list of about a hundred things what folks give as wedding presents, an' there ain't one of 'em costs less than a dollar.—N. Y. Weekly.

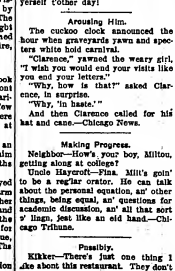
Side Lights on History.

Gen. Sherman was on his memorable march to the sea.

"Everything seems to be going smoothly thus far," he said, "but something seems to tell me that the end will be disastrous!"

Years afterward, when he found he couldn't go anywhere without hearing the brass bands playing "Marching Through Georgia," he realized that his forebodings had been only too well founded.

Far From It.



"Dora, dearest, I love—"

"Oi! O!"

"Do you interrupt me, Dora, because you don't want to hear it?"

"That wasn't intended as an interruption, George. Go ahead."—Chicago Tribune.

NOT JUST WHAT HE MEANT.

Owner—Are you lade aware that an ass is allowed to fish here?

Boy—Why we saw yer fishin' an' yerself t'other day!

Arousing Him.

The cuckoo clock announced the hour when graveyards yawn and specters white hold carnival.

"Clarence," yawned the weary girl, "I wish you would end your visits like you end your letters."

"Why, how is that?" asked Clarence, in surprise.

"Why, 'in haste.'"

And then Clarence called for his hat and cane.—Chicago News.

Making Progress.

Neighbor—How's your boy, Milton, getting along at school?

Uncle Hayseed—Fine. Milt's goin' to be a reglar orator. He can talk about the personal antekkin, an' other things, being equal, an' questions for academic discussion, an' all that sort o' lingo. Jest like an old hand.—Chicago Tribune.

Possibly.

Kikker—There's just one thing I like about this restaurant. They don't keep me waiting for my check.

Nokker—No; the waiters probably have found that there's no use in holding it till you are ready to go—you never tip 'em, anyway.—Chicago Tribune.

TOO WILLING.

"Do you love me as dearly as men have ever loved women?" said Mabel, adding an easy anchorage for her cheek about the latitude of his left shoulder.

"More," said George, with waning enthusiasm, for this was about the twenty-fourth encore to which he had responded since eight o'clock, "More, far more, deary. Oh, ever so much more."

"Would you," she went on, and there was a tremulous impressiveness in her voice; "would you be willing to work and wait for me as Jacob worked for Rachel at the well, seven long years?"

"Seven!" he cried, in a burst of genuine devotion. "Seven!" Aye, gladly! Why, and more! Even until seven times seven! Let's make it 70, and prove my devotion."

Somehow or other he was alone when he left the parlor a few minutes later, and it looks now as though he would have to wait 700 years before he saves fast to toastie his toes at the grate in that parlor again.

THE HOME TEST.

Miss Buy—I am sure you made a mistake when you sold me this dog for a full-blooded bird dog.

Mr. Sell—How is that?

Miss Buy—Why, I've tried him on three kinds of bird seed and he won't eat a bit of it.—Chicago Daily News.

She Was Flattered.

Mrs. Sansom—I understand, sir, that you have secretly been making love to my daughter, and I must forbid on acquaintance begun in that way. You should have seen me first.

Shrewd Suitor—Madam, had I seen you first I should have forgotten your daughter and fallen in love with you.

Mrs. Sansom—Um—the informality of the proceedings was all I objected to. Come with me and I will introduce you.—The Royal.

Tight Fix.

"Say, old man, what would you do if a fellow saved you from suicide?"

"I'd go to him, thank him with all my heart, and bestow upon him all that was in my power."

"I don't know how I can do that in this case."

"Why not?"

"The fellow I mentioned married the girl to whom I was engaged."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Sensitive Subject.

"Spacer out of a job? Why, I thought he was running a fashion department in a woman's magazine."

"Yes, but he caused the magazine to lose so many subscribers they fired him."

"How in the world did that happen?"

"Why, the lobster headed his column, 'New Wrinkles for Women.'"—Chicago Daily News.

You Never Know Your Luck.

"I'm so glad you have come, Miss Morrison! I have so longed for a dance with you. May I have the fourth waltz?"

"You may if I am not engaged."

"Your card shows that you're not."

"Yes—but I'm going to sit out the third waltz with Jack, and—well, I may be engaged when the fourth comes."—The Royal.

A Camera Fiend.

Magistrate—Officer, what is this man charged with?

Constable—He's a camera fiend of the worst kind, your worship.

"But this man shouldn't have been arrested simply because he has a mania for taking pictures."

"It isn't that, yer worship; he takes the cameras."

Logic.

Ned—My sister Ethel told you last night that she would be a sister to you, didn't she?"

Jack (savagely)—Yes, she did.

Ned—Well, that makes you a brother of mine, doesn't it, old man? Suppose you lend me five pounds now, on account of brotherly interest.—The Royal.

Too Much For Him.

Friend—Didn't your husband rave when you showed him the dressmaker's bill?

Wife—Rather.

Friend—And how did you quiet him?

Wife—I showed him the milliner's next, and then he became absolutely speechless.—Chicago Journal.

Why It Didn't Kill Him.

"That was a remarkable case—his sound in the vermiform appendix of a Lorain (O.) boy, and it didn't kill him."

"Nothing remarkable about it, for it was a safety pin."—Chicago Journal.

TIMBER KING WALKER.

MULTIMILLIONAIRE OF WHOM LITTLE IS KNOWN.

Could Become One of World's Richest Men by Forming Lumber Trust Which He Opposes—Proud of His Five Sons.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I have no respect for men whose sole object is gain and control over other men for their own personal aggrandizement. Such a purpose in life is false, and contempt is its just due. I shall, if possible, make such an arrangement as will forever prevent the kinds which I now own from passing into the control of those who might abuse them or the people who require their products."

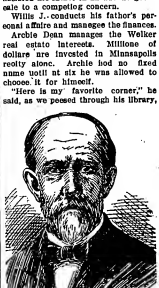
This is the remarkable utterance of a man whose wealth is estimated at at least $40,000,000, and who, though inconspicuous, ranks among the nation's richest captains of industry. By the single stroke of his pen, Thomas Berlow Walker, who owns more timber land than any other man in the country, might stack his millions in equal numbers with those of John D. Rockefeller or Andrew Carnegie.

Like all men of vast wealth centimetes of Mr. Walker's wealth vary. Some place it as high as $100,000,000, but $40,000,000 is a very conservative estimate.

In an interview at his home, in this city, the timber king discussed the great economic question of the day and explained his own position. Despite his enormous wealth he is little known outside of his immediate business and home circles.

In lumber circles the uncolved question hos been why a lumber trust was not formed along the lines of other big industrial corporations. In so interview Mr. Walker gave the answer, for the first time publicly. He said:

"As long as I live there will 'never be a timber trust if I can prevent it.



"I have been approached repeatedly to head a combination that would control practically all the lumber supply of the United States and Canada. I have as often positively refused to even consider the proposition."

Mr. Walker is the original individual owner of timber beyond question.

When asked about his five sons and their association with his enterprises, a great pride shone in his eyes.

"All the boys run the business now. As they returned home from school they entered into my business with me, and could they understand it so thoroughly that I really believe I am no longer necessary to its continued success."

Each son manages departments that in themselves stogly constitute vast business enterprises, such as many millioned men would view with envy.

THOMAS B. WALKER.
(Timber King Who is Strongly Opposed to a Lumber Trust.)

Fletcher L. has entire management of the great Minnesota timber tracts and lumber mills.

Clinton has absolute charge of the great timber interests. The development work hes been done there yet, and a herculean task confronts him.

Gilbert M. spent many years on Minnesota timber tracts and finally assisted his father in an advantageous sale to a competing concern.

Willis J. conducts his father's personal affairs and manages the finances.

Archie Dean manages the Walker real estate interests. Millions of dollars are invested in Minneapolis realty alone. Archie hod no fixed name until at six he was allowed to choose it for himself.

"Here is my favorite corner," he said, as we passed through his library, lodlcetlog a case in which the volumes were more vorn than the rest.

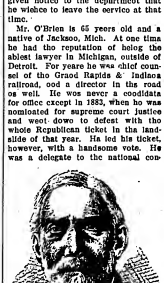
"What is the secret of success?"

"Sociology. I love the study of political, religious and industrial problems the world over. I can never tell which affords me the greatest pleasure and interest—those old volumes or my children."



Mr. Walker opieced his great gallery to the public several years ago. There is no closed door and no admission was ever charged. Even illustrations are furnished visitors free.

His home, built years ago, is simplo and comparatively small. Its associations are dearer to him than a gilded palece. Many comfortable benches are placed in the edge of the lawns, and here the people are welcome to come and sit beneath the shade. While his cherishable and philanthropic work is done quietly it is extensive, ond he is the mein supporter of certain institutions to his city.

A few days ago the state erected another memorial to an officer who happened by Fate's decree to be the only one of the naval branch of the service to fall in battle that was a colonial daye. On June 30, 1889, he was appointed to the United States Naval academy after a competitive examination. He was made ca ensign July 1, 1897. O'BRIEN TO BE TRANSFERRED.

Minister to Denmark Will Succeed Ambassador Wright.

Washington.—The state department has formally announced that Thomas J. O'Brien of Grand Rapids, Mich., United Stotes miolster to Copenhogoo, will become ambassador to Japan in September, on the retirement of Luke E. Wright of Tennessee, who has given notice to the department that he wishes to leave the service at that time.

Mr. O'Brien is 65 yeors old and a native of Jackson, Mich. At one time he had the reputation of being the oldest lawyer in Michigan, outside of Detroit. For years he was chief counsel of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, and a director in the road as well. He was never a coodidate for office except in 1882, when he was nominated for supreme court justice and went down to defeat with the whole Republican ticket in the landslide of that year. He led his ticket, however, with a handsome vote. He was a delegate to the national con-

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act. of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Thread has gone up, but cotton remains at the old price. The farmers raise the cotton and the trusts raise the thread.

Now that the thread trust has got control of the thread and raised the price to 6 cents a spool why not set the prisoners in Stillwater to making thread, as well as binding twine.

Our farmers are smiling over the big rain last Sunday night, and well they may as there are only one class of people that have a better prospect to make a profitable seasons work than they have, and that is the attorneys in the county seat removel case.

Thief River Falls has bought a time lock safe for County Audit or O'Brien to put the county seat removel petition in. Two years will be about the right time to set the lock to once, as the lawyers won't get ready to take a final look at the petition much before that time.

The Railroad companys had better take their medicine that was meated out to them by the last legislature, then to force an extra session of the legislature, for if they do it, will stir up the people to such an extent that they will get a more bitter pill to swallow than the present one that they are making such wry faces at.

Editor Pease of the Anoka Union talks reminiscently in this wise: "Fifty years in Minnesota and forty-six of them spent in a printing office. Made some enemies, sold some friends. Newspaper men seldom make an enemy, and those only political. At best newspaper work is of the strenuous kind, and editors are doomed to work. Always plenty to do around a print shop! But there is a fasination in the work hard to resist, and men follow the profession when others offer better and more profitable opportunities. Once a publisher, always a publisher, holds good in this, perhaps more in this, than in any other.

The trial of Haywood for the murder of governor Steinenburg of Idado, has meartbed a den of assasins that is enough to make every law abiding citizen in America to shudder. Harry Orchard who made the informal machine that blew up governor Steinenberg, has confessed to committing eighteen murders as the hired assassin of Haywood, the leader of the western Federation of miners. We are pleased to note that the law abiding class of laborers and socialist organization are beginning to cut this class of assasins out and are disposed to incourage their prosicnution as common criminals of the worst class. It is a disgrace to the laboring men of this country who make their living by honest toil to be classed with an organized band of criminals and assassins, who never did an honest hours work in their lives, who are murdering people and claiming they are doing it for the protection of the laboring men. We hope to see this class of criminals vigorously prosicuted, until they are landed where they will have to do without toil at the end of a ball and chain, or make a market for new brands of good hemp rope.

Get your extra pig or calf ready to pay the raise on your taxes, caused by the county seat fight.

Those that have become discouraged with this part of Minnesota, are begining to think it is a fine country after they have visited other localities.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette, and Courier were near enough alike last week to be twin brothers. We guess Sam is running both papers and he is getting out two pretty good ones if he is.

Observation.

An observant man in all his intercourse with society and the world constantly and unperceived marks on every person and thing the figure expressive of its value and, therefore, on meeting that person or thing, knows probably what kind and degree of attention it is fit. "Humph!" said the wild hearted lobster, "I've noticed that a poster like that never draws a crowd. We want cod, that, once printed, will remain perfectly quiet, and we'll get readers even by mailing them at all cents."

In Praise of Celebrities.

Celebrities are the best natured people under the sun. It is notorious that a big London crowd is of all crowds in the world the most harmless and the easiest to manage. But see them also in their ordinary collections, outside the gallery door of a popular theater or concert hall in the entrance of an excursion train—they are the most tractable, wholesome little kind that is. A deliberately rude or offensive celebrity is hardly to be met with.—T. P. O'Connor in T. P.'s Weekly.

Awful Bad Roads.

We had another talk with the Kratka man about the road to Thief River Falls this week, and it made us laugh so we thought we would put it in print.

We asked him if the roads was getting any better to Thief River Falls and he said.

"Oh yes better some places but them same old swamps aint dry yet"

Rep.: Well we should think that the people of Thief River Falls had ought to try and fix up them bad places if they want our trade.

Native: "Well you see there been a lot of fellers in Thief River Falls yet think we must come there anyhow, and dey don't care a dam how we get dare, and if we get stuck in the swamp and loose our team and vogen they don't care so we get trou in a balloon with the pangle."

Rep.: How far is it across them bad places that you speak about?

Native: "Oh not so far but you see you can not come trou a short place if it been awful bad, but dey don't care for we must come anyhow."

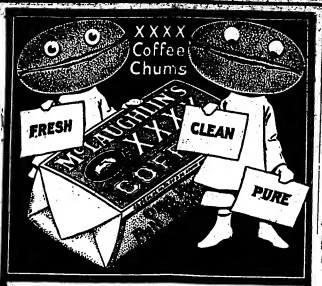
Rep.: Now that they are trying to get the county seat we should suppose they would try to take some interest in fixing up the roads, so the farmers could get in to their new county seat.

Native: "They don't care, they always say Thief River Falls is nearer to you, but if I have to take my halcon skies, and boat to get to the county seat, ay may just as well go to Red Lake Falls as Thief River Falls, and save the expences of moving the county seat."

Rep.: Well now you are a farmer.

Native: "Yah s ath a farmer."

Rep.: Why don't you go down to Thief River Falls and tell that committee to go down to Poston or McIntosh and get a few lessons about building roads, where the two towns got out nine miles away from home and built roads so the farmers could get into town.



Neither one of them got the county seat, but the farmers got the roads and it was a good investment for both towns.

Native: "I never thoug ht of this before, but I am going down to talk with Thief River Fall about that place, that the man lost his team and saved the vogen."

A little [illegible]. The poor son's performance on the French horn is execrable. It will drive everybody from my house. Tod Hill: "It was a teacher."

If it is the intention to give notice to a mans neighbors that he is going to make final proof, the notices may as well be published in the St. Paul Dispatch, as some of the papers that they are being published in now, which have no circulation at all in the vicinity in which the land is located.

: : HER CHOICE : :

By Belle Trimble Mattson

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Her eyes brightened as she sat alone in the flickering firelight. The cool greens and grays of the room took on a little flush, and her face shared it.

The next hour would decide her life; she was gambling with fate, and there was a pleasurable excitement about it.

It mattered little to her which came first; the colonel could give her devotion, not to speak of his wealth and position.

The doctor could give her an equal devotion, and the companionship of a keen and vigorous intellect.

Jack did not count. She had given him the rendezvous only that she might complete her revenge. He was not really in the running.

Why should she marry again at all? But then, why not? She was young, and widowhood had begun to pall. It was a life-habit with her to rid herself of things when they palled.

A servant brought a card. So! It was to be the colonel.

Picking from a tall vase one of the long-stemmed lilies the colonel had sent that morning, she went slowly down, her soft white gown floating about her and deepening the dusky shadows in her hair.

A great tenderness filled the heart of the old man as she entered the bright room, with its lily in her hand. He came toward her eagerly; with old-fashioned courtesy he took her hand and led her to a chair.

He spoke of the weather and other trivial things. She watched him and listened. His step had not changed; his figure was no longer vigorous, the ring was gone from his voice, and his lips—

"It pleases me to see you with my lily. They reminded me of your fair sweetness when I saw them this morning. May I hope?"

He stopped abruptly, and she turned her face to his. She noted the flabby lids of his eyes. Still—

She opened her lips to say "yes," and in a moment was surprised to find she had said "no."

When he had gone, she went to her own room again. The lilies oppressed her; their perfume seemed heavy and weak. She hurled her fcen gratefully in a huge bowl of vivid red roses, with cool soft petals and a spicy breath. The doctor had thought them so like her marked personality and abundant vitality when he selected them.

She rang.

"Send Mary with these lilies to old Mrs. Bernard, and take this bowl of roses to the library."

So, it was to be the doctor. Would he come next, or should she give Jack Farnham his congé first?

A nervous ring was followed by the doctor's card on the tray of the immaculate maid. She was rather glad he had come first. It would add a sharp little point to her remarks to Jack Farnham, if she had already promised herself to another man.

She ran lightly down the stairs. He was standing by a table turning the leaves of a magazine.

"I'm strictly that, on the chemistry of foods," he remarked, when the greetings were over.

She felt chilled. The chemistry of foods! Probably that was his deity! Slow, professional he was! Those keen eyes behind the spectacles were likely at this moment taking her in as a "subject." She know this was an injustice, but the thought came to her all the same.

Was he considering capillary action, when cheek flushed and her eyes brightened? She moved, impatient of her own thoughts.

She felt—like an insect under a microscope. His presence had never impressed her like this before. Assuring herself of her own absurdity, she smiled back at him, and he, pleased that he had gracefully prevented the formation of fog in the atmosphere, went on deepening her impression.

Oh, it would never do. She could not sit opposite those professional eyes three times a day for the rest of her life. She would just be a widow.

She broke on him almost abruptly, not answering the sentence he had barely finished.

"Dear doctor, I am sorry to pain you. You came for an answer to-day, and I must say 'no.'"

There is nothing I can say? Nothing could change your decision? It will be a deep sorrow to me else." He spoke in a measured tone, keeping a firm hold on himself.

"No," she said. "No. But, believe me, I am sorry."

He stood up, very grave and white. "You will pardon me, if I go at once?"

Bowing over her hand, but not venturing to look in her face, he went out of her life.

She felt ashamed at the relief that came to her, when she knew she was not, after all, to be the doctor's wife. She sat, thinking still of him, when "Mr. John Fahlen Fernhem's" card was brought her.

"Show him into the back parlor, and say that I will see him presently."

When the servant had gone to do this bidding, she rose and stood before a tall glass. Was her hair right? This man must be made to feel her desirability. It must be crowded on him, and he must then be made to feel, what he had seemed a little blind to heretofore, that this desirability was beyond his reach.

Should she wear some of his violets? How also Jack always was about remembering what flowers one loved, and all those little things that flatter women.

No, she would wear none of his flowers. They were filling with perfume at this minute that back parlor, where this mastered person was likely tramping about.

He was not tramping about; he was standing very still as she came into the room.

Tall, very dark, with a thin, keen face, his one beauty was his eyes. He had several years the advantage of her 30, and he bore heavier traces of those that had passed over him.

He did not rest himself, and his attitude seemed to forbid her doing so. Breaking resentfully through this impression, she sat down, forcing herself to say, as she tucked a cushion into just the right spot: "Sit down, won't you? It seems more friendly. And don't glower at me, I beg. It intimidates me."

Laughing a little at the idea of intimidation, he hesitated a moment, then seated himself on the edge.

"Thank you, yes. I will sit down but I can't, I really can't, rise to frivolities in conversation. It takes a woman," he went on, a little bitterly, "to absolutely disgulse every feeling."

He sat down before her, he took her hands, he almost crushed them, indeed. "Nell, you will come to me? You do love me? Is the love of a life not worth the taking? I have loved you siwnya, dear—I think from the foundation of the world. Can you get along without a love that needs you so?"

Alms! for Jack. There it was—the old masterfulness. She would none of it. Could she "get along," indeed!

She drew back from him. "Thank you; yes, I am getting along very well."

He only stared at her, still leaning toward her.

"The love of a good man is an honor to any woman—"

"Bosh!"

"But I cannot accept yours, and give none in return," she went on, ouerseding his scornful interruption. "My heart is in the grave with Herbert."

"Really, and truly?" he spoke slowly, as if trying to grasp it. "Do you mean that? You—will—not—marry—me?"

"No."

"I will say good-night." He spoke briskly, as he arose. His shoulders looked very square; his brown eyes had lost all the softness of a moment ago.

Bowing stiffly, he left her. She listened. The maid had led the man hall, and she heard him pause. She knew he was getting himself into his overcoat.

Now he was going to the door.

She leaped from her cushions. She ran. She stopped. She should get out before she reached him!

"Oh, wait," she gasped. He, stopped. "Jack, Jack," she panted. "Come back. My heart isn't in the grave with Herbert at all. It is going out of the door with you this minute, and I've just found it out."

Why Glasses Are Clicked.

In answer to a correspondent who asks, "Will you finally settle the question why glasses are clicked when people drink a toast in wine?" a Berlin paper says: "Your question should have included beer. The ancient form is observed with that beverage as well as with wine. There are many versions, but the most logical is the one which is based on the supposition that a good drink is so worthy of respect that in taking it all one's senses should be employed. One sees the liquid, tastes it, smells its fragrance, feels its effect, and the glasses are clicked so that the sense of hearing may also have a share in the pleasure."

Matinee Toque of Mauve Roses and Wings

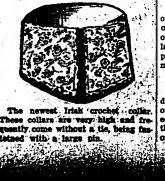
THE LINEN FABRICS

They Are Well Liked for Little Folks' Wear During the Summer Season.

The heavier, more substantial butcher linens are being revived for children's wear this season, and they are a welcome change, as the fabrics are most practical, wash well, and, though heavy, are cool. Then, too, they look smart when made up with as little trimming as possible, and the simple lines are far more appreciative for construction than anything more elaborate, so that the little frocks, coats and wraps may be safely attempted by the home dressmaker.

In dresses, gulmpe and jumper modes are to be preferred, both for comfort's sake and laundry saving. A pretty little frock in this style seen recently in a shop was of soft cadet blue, box plaited into the belt and hemmed on the bottom. Above the belt was cut a deep slit, and the slashed sleeves were similarly finished. The gulmpe was of fine lawn. The same thing may be carried out in a one-piece dress for small girls, box plaited from the top to long waist length, the fullness springing from the plain forming the skirt portion, and if the embroidery should be beyond the powers of the amateur sewer, then embroidered motifs could be applied. Such a frock will be smart and launder perfectly. Setting the yoke, if there are checks, stripes, etc., should not be forgotten before sending to the laundry.

Coats of butcher linen are very much worn, both in white and colors. The brown shades have, of course, crept in even here and stylish box jackets in leather color are touched up with a little white linen and brown soutache, the closing by means of handsome white pearl buttons. Small boys look manish in this style of wrap topped by a feather tam-o'-shanter.



Another revival for boys' wear is the narrow brimmed corduroy or straw sailor with ribbon band. To boys whom they become nothing is jaunter for summer, though for some reason or another these small men prefer the round soft gray and tan hats. These may be more comfortable, but they certainly lack smartness.

In boys' suits gray appears to be a favorite color, and the box coat with the belt is newer than the belted Norfolk model; otherwise boys' styles remain stationary.

Coats and wraps of linen for girls do not differ greatly from those designed for boys, the added collar and cuffs of embroidered white pique or linen being the only mark of difference. For small children a long, full skirt attached to a short body, with the cape effect, is the most popular, and at the same time the most appropriate, as such a wrap completely envelops the figure, while the cape adds warmth as well as beauty.

For misses' wear in the line of light wraps there are loose Dolores and Etones in linens and very light weight cloths that are simple, smart and practical, the preference running being braid or embroidery; and such models offer just the convenience and comfort needed for wear.

FOR AFTERNOON GOWN

Black and White Striped Muslin a Popular Material at the Present Season.

Black and white striped muslin is so much in favor that it will answer many a doubt about an afternoon gown. You can get it in any quality. The skirt can be made slightly full in six or nine gores, gathered, the belt with the lower edge in round length, but touching for no inch or more. On this put three inches, cut on the bias or straight, edged with clusy lace and tucke or narrow black satin ribbon.

Make the blouse in wide bands over shoulders, running nearly to belt back and front showing a deep V, which is filled in with plaited white Brussels net running with vertical frills of clusy with a stock to match. The sleeves are about four inches wide in these blouses, made Japanese, and run well down below the armhole—which is the new method. They are edged with ribbon and isee end under it is put a sleeve to match the vest, ending is below elbow with a lace cuff, two inches deep.

Any woman over 40 years old will find this an admirable summer costume, which she can wear for church, calling, and any other, socist affair, with it she wants a rolling hat of white or yellow straw, the brim trimmed underneath with three rows of black velvet ribbon at the round crown heaped with n few large roses in pink or crimson with masses of green leaves spread out on the hat.

insertions of All Kinds.

Dainty hits of insertion of both lace and embroidery are set into lingerie frocks in most delightful effects, and there is no fidelity to any particular designa. Variety is the spice of fashions as well as of life, and the contrarico who injects the most of it into her toilettes is the one who is regarded as the most original. It would seem as if all the inspiration possible had been drawn out of the portraits by old masters, but this is not the case. Some of the new skirts are after Reynolds, modernized, of course, with bands of silk or braid, and combinations are more incongurous than ever.

Tha Sabis Rose in Millinery.

A new rose is indicative of the queer concetts that find favor with women seeking distinctive effect. The center of the flower is pale pink and the color deepens until the edges of the outer petals are quite black. Flowers oh this sort, or in fact, of any, are used very sparingly tha season, which is a veritable feather season, with ostrich plumage still in the fad.

Discarded Waist.

Will make a good corset cover. Cut out neck, round or square; also cut out sleeves, leaving narrow strips over shoulders. Trim all edges with lace and beading and you will be surprised at your pretty corset cover, made without much labor or expense.

The All-White Hat.

The all-white hat for the summer days—due to arrive finally—is to be of the dead white type, it is predicted, but with dark facings to relieve the unbecoming tone of the outer coloring or lack of it.

68, BUT PERFECTLY WELL.

Tha Happy Experience of a New Castle, Pa., Woman.

Mrs. John Mansell, 614 So. Jefferson St., New Castle, Pa., says: "For years I was running down with kidney trouble without knowing what it was, and finally got so bad I was given up. The urinary passages were painful, sometimes scanty and again very profuse. My limbs, feet and ankles bloated dreadfully, and sometimes my whole body. My heart palpitated and I had smothering spells. A week's treatment with Doan's Kidney Pills helped me and a few boxes cured me. At 68 I am strong and well."

Wanta the Rod Restored.

The Shanghai Times editor says: The jail has been well administered, but is fuller than it should be, due, I fear, to the abolition of the cangue and bamboo. The ordinary criminal has no great objection to repeated short visits to the jail, but shrinks from a repetition of corporal punishment. Punishment with the bamboo is in vogue throughout China, and here only has it by special order been abolished. We deprecate the Chinese authorities making this settlement a field for experiment, and will protest for the reintroduction of this salutary method of punishment.

An Artistic Idea.

"I don't mind paying for a picture if it's a good, natural likeness," said the rich man to the fashionable artist, to whom he was to sit for his portrait.

"O, it is quite characteristic and natural, I assure you," replied the artist. "I flatter myself that easy attitude with your hand in your pocket is quite a neat touch."

And so it proved when the bill came in.

Wonderful Engineering Work.

The admirable accuracy of the work of civil engineers of the best class is shown in the wonderfully slight deviation of the great Simplon tunnel from the calculations of the men who planned it and executed the work. The tunnel is 12½ miles long. It proved 31 inchoes longer than it was expected to be. When the two headings came together in the depths of the mountain their levels were less than 3½ inches apart.

AFRAID OF PARALYSIS

A NERVOUS SUFFERER CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

The Medicine That Makes Rich, Red Blood and Performs Wonders as a Tonic for the Nerves.

Why are nervous people invariably pale people?

The answer to that question explains why a remedy that acts on the blood can cure nervous troubles.

It explains why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are also for nervous people.

It is because of the intimate relation between the red corpuscles in the blood and the health of the nerves. The nervous system receives its nourishment through the blood. Let the blood become thin and watery—poor—and the nerves are starved—the victim is started on the road that leads to nervous wreck. Nervous prostration, pale people—but the pallor comes first. Enrich the blood and the nerves are stimulated and toned up to do their part of the work of the body. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make rich blood and banish nervousness, irritable, ailing people into strong, energetic, forceful men and women.

Mrs. Harriet E. Porter, of 20 Liberty avenue, South Amherst, Mass., says:

"I had never been well from childhood and a few years ago I began to have dizzy spells. At first I could not walk straight. I was afraid of paralysis and was on the verge of nervous prostration. Then neuralgia settled in the side of my head. The pains in my forehead were excruciating and my heart pained me so that my doctor feared trouble of the heart. I tried several different kinds of treatment but they did me no good.

"One day my son brought me some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I found that they strengthened my nerves. I took several boxes and felt better in every way. These were no more dizzy attacks, the neuralgia left mond I have been a well woman ever since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are invaluable in anemia, rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers, and in all of headaches, nervousness, neuralgia, and even the functional troubles of females.

Our booklet "Nervous Disorders, a Method of Home Treatment" will be sent free on request to anyone interested. Write for it today.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Is acknowledged to be the most successful remedy in the country for those painful ailments peculiar to women.

For more than 30 years it has been curing Female Complaints, such as Inflammation, and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, Backache, and is peculiarly adapted to the Change of Life.

Records show that it has cured more cases of Female ills than any other one remedy known.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage of development. Dragging headache, pain, weight, and headache are relieved and permanently cured by its use.

It corrects Irregularities or Painful Functions, Weakness of the Stomach, Indigestion, Bloating, Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility; also, Dizziness, Faintness Extreme Lassitude, "Don't care and want to be left alone" feeling, Irritability, Nervousness, Flatulency, Melancholia or the "Blues." These are sure indications of female weakness or some organic derangement.

For Kidney Complaints of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a most excellent remedy.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice. She is the Mrs. Pinkham who has been advising sick women free of charge for more than twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother—the late Lydia E. Pinkham in advising. Thus she is well qualified to guide sick women back to health. Her advice is free and always helpful.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

WHEEL FOR PULLING POSTS.

It Makes the Usually Hard Task Easy.

When I have removed the wire from a fence and wish to pull the posts I take an old corn planter wheel, attach a chain to the base of the post and pass it over the top of the wheel to the whiffle-trees, as shown in the illustration, writes a correspondent of Prairie Farmer. I find that this makes a very convenient device and posts can be pulled without very much difficulty.

CORN STALKS AS FERTILIZER.

Are of the Best If Turned Under to Decay.

Corn stalks are one of the best ready fertilizers available. They contain elements taken from the soil, so in returning them to the soil we are giving back a part, at least, of that which was taken from it. When corn stalks are burned on the ground, the greater part of their value is lost. The ash which remains is a valuable fertilizer, but if the whole stalks are returned to the soil, all of this ash is saved and also the other substances which, in their decay, liberate more soluble plant food.

A fertilizer to have high value should furnish available plant food, and also improve the physical condition of the soil. Good commercial fertilizers do the first, but not the second. Stable manure furnishes readily available plant food, and also has a high value for improving soil texture. The same is true of all organic matter applied to the soil if it be in a condition for ready decomposition.

Corn stalks in contact with moist soil readily decay, hence, they become available as plant food. As an improver of soil texture, corn stalks have few equals. Being very large, when plowed under, they make the soil loose, which allows free access of air. This effect is felt for two or three years, which is not so much the case with smaller plants turned under.

The richest good can be had from corn stalks by husking the corn as early as it will do in the fall, pasturing for a short time with cattle and hogs to save the waste ears and grain, then immediately dragging them down with a heavy drag or harrow, says Farm and Home. This brings them in contact with the moist winter and spring soil for partial decay, and prevents the washing of the soil to a large extent if the land be hilly. In this way, they are half decayed when plowed under, give little trouble for the season's cultivation, and furnish rich plant food for the summer's growing crop.

DECAYING VEGETABLE MATTER.

Get It into the Soil If You Would Save the Ammonia.

In the decay of vegetable matter nitrogen in the form of ammonia is thrown off. This is the case whether the matter decaying is in the open air or buried in the mass of manure in the barn yard. The escape of the ammonia represents the departure of a fertilizing element that is of value to the farmer. All efforts should be made to prevent the escape of this gas. The only sure way of doing it, says Farmers' Review, is to get the manure or the decaying vegetable matter into the soil where it will be operated on by the forces there and the gas thus combined with elements that will reduce it to a state in which it can be made a plant food. The best heritage pile of horse manure is one of the waste places of the farm. From it the hot steam rises, having in it a very large amount of the fertilizing element named. This is especially so in the spring, summer and fall. Many farmers allow the manure, and especially the horse manure, to accumulate throughout the summer for fall use. In the warm weather the decay of the vegetable matter goes on more rapidly than in the cold weather and the loss is consequently greater. In large stables this loss of volatile elements amounts to a large sum, if the nitrogen be valued at commercial rates.

Government Aid in Road Making.

Government aid in road building will eventually come in this country although the progress in that direction at present may seem rather slow. Other countries have so recognized the importance of improved highways and we believe it is only a matter of a little time when the United States will by federal appropriation. Even the little country of Cuba has authorized the expenditure of $5,000,000 in the general improvement of its public highways.

BURNT CLAY ROADS.

Way in Which Some Sections Are Getting Good Roads at Small Expense.

Clay becomes more or less hard and impervious to water when subjected to heat. Clay has been so far considered one of the worst road-building materials, combining with the gentle rain to form a sticky mire destructive of locomotion by man or beast. The clay, however, may contain within itself the very elements of the salvation of those regions in which it predominates, as witness this from the Southwest Magazine:

"A method has been discovered for converting gumbo roads, long a dread to those who have had to travel in rural districts, into clay-ballasted highways. The process which has been conducted in the Yazoo Valley of Mississippi has been not only simple, but satisfactory and not costly.

"After grading the road to an even width between ditches, it is plowed up as deeply as practicable. After the plowing has been completed, furrows are dug across the road from ditch to ditch, extending through and beyond the width to be burned. Across the ridges formed between these furrows —which should be about four feet apart—the first course of cordwood is laid longitudinally so as to form a series of flues in which the firing is started. From 15 to 20 of these flues are fired at one time.

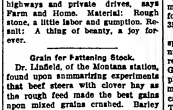
"The best and soundest cordwood is selected for this course and should be laid so that the pieces will touch, thus forming a floor. Another layer of wood is thrown irregularly across the floors, in crib formation, with space left between, in which the lumps of clay are piled in close enough to allow a draft for easy combustion. After the clay has been heaped upon the floor, another course of wood is laid parallel to the first.

"The third layer is placed in exactly the same manner as the first, and each opening and crack is filled with brush, chips, bark, small sticks or any other combustible material. A top layer of clay is placed over all and the finer portions of the material are heaped over the whole structure; the latter being taken from the side ditches. Finally the whole is tamped and rounded off so that the heat will be held within the flues as long as possible. When coal is available, the two top layers of wood may be omitted and the coal slack thoroughly mixed with the clay.

"It is necessary to get the fires well under way in the flues before the first layer of wood is burned through. The first action of the fire is to drive out the water contained in the clay before the actual burning and clinkering can begin. The firing should be begun on the windward side, and the best results are obtained by firing all the flues at a section simultaneously and maintaining the combustion as even as possible, in case the combustion is too rapid in any flue, it may be regulated by banking the mouth of the flue with clay.

"After the firing is completed, not only the portion of clay which forms the top of the kiln, but the ridges between the flues should be burned thoroughly, so as to form a covering of burnt clay 10 to 12 inches in depth which, when rolled down and compacted, forms a road surface of from six to eight inches in thickness.

"If properly burned, the material should be entirely changed in character, and when it is wet it should have no tendency to form mud. When the material is sufficiently cooled, the roadbed should be brought to a high crown before rolling. This can best be done with a road grader. The finished crown should have a slope of at least one-half inch to the foot.



"A burnt clay road will last indefinitely, and it has the double advantage of being dry in wet weather and free from dust in dry weather. There is splendid opportunity for road improvements of this character in the southwest."

highways and private drives, says Farm and Home. Material: Rough stone, a little labor and gumption. Result: A thing of beauty, a joy forever.

Grain for Fattening Stock.

Dr. Lindell, of the Montana station, found upon summarizing experiments that beef steers with clover hay as the rough feed made the best gains upon mixed grains crushed. Barley was second, wheat third and oats fourth. In all cases the grain was crushed or ground.

We talk about educating the patrons of a creamery community and then expect the buttermaker there to do the job. We are often mistaken as to which needs the educating.

CHOICE OF TWO EVILS.

Request That Was by No Means a Compliment for Papa.

A New York scientist, the father of a large and growing family, has his troubles. One evening his youngest was holding forth in her best style. The mother could do nothing with the child, so the man of science went to the rescue.

"I think I can quiet little Flora," he said. "There's no use humming to her in that silly way. What she wants is real music. The fact that I used to sing in the Glee club at Yale and sang well, too, may make a difference."

Accordingly, the professor took the child and, striding up and down the room, sang in his best manner. He had not finished the second verse of his song, when a ring was heard. The door was opened, and there stood a girl of 14, who said:

"I'm one of the family that's just moved into the flat next to yours. There's a sick person with us, and he says, if it's all the same to you, would you mind letting the baby cry instead of singing to it?"—Success.

ECZEMA COVERED BABY.

Worst Case Doctors Ever Saw—Suffered Untold Misery—Perfect Cure by Cuticura Remedies.

"My son, who is now twenty-two years of age, when four months old began to have eczema on his face, spreading quite rapidly until he was nearly covered. The eczema was something terrible, and the doctors said it was the worst case they ever saw. At times his whole body and face were covered, all but his feet. I used many kinds of patent medicines, to no avail. A friend teased me to try Cuticura. At last I decided to try Cuticura when my boy was three years and four months old, having had eczema all that time and suffering untold misery. I began to use all three of the Cuticura Remedies. He was better in two weeks; in six months he was well. Mrs. R. L. Risley, Piermont, N. H., Oct. 24, 1905."

PAT SET ONLY ONE LIMIT.

Would Quit When He Was Done With All Things Earthly.

A rich man out in the suburbs who owns a large place has among the many people employed to keep it in shape an Irishman of whom he is particularly fond on account of his unconscious wit, says Harper's Weekly. This Irishman is something of a hard drinker, and, as his income is limited, he is more particular as regards the quantity than the quality of his liquids. The other day the employer, who had been waiting a good opportunity, remarked in a kind tone, as the closing sentence of a friendly lecture:

"Now, Pat, how long do you think you can keep on drinking this cheap whiskey?"

To which Pat instantly replied:

"All my life, if it doesn't kill me."

The Human Shield.

The advent of Descartes day caused Admiral Dewey, at a recent dinner, to praise the bravery of the American troops during the civil war.

"Both sides alike were brave," he said. "North and south, soldiers and sailors. And the bravest act of a recruit was a thing to be seen to be believed.

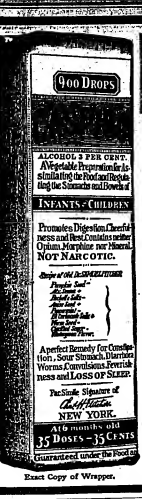
"There used to be circulated, though, a good story about a Connecticut recruit. This young man, after he had gotten initiated, fought bravely; but in his first engagement he was very nervous.

"A chum of his was in the line ahead of him, and when the bullets began to fly, the chum began to dodge.

"Thereupon the recruit shouted excitedly:

"'Hey, Jim, don't duck. I'm behind ye.'"

Chaspans and Improves Coal.



Consul General W. R. Holloway, of Halifax, says that the Canadian commercial agent at Kingston, Jamaica, reports an invention at that place for depriving soft coal of its most objectionable feature by a chemical which, when it is put into the fire, causes the oils said to produce smoke, and calling the resulting article "coalite," which is something like coke in appearance and which can be furnished at one-third the present cost of coke. Five acres of land near Manchester have been purchased, and large works will be erected for its production.—United States Consul Reports.

AN OLD EDITOR

Found $2000 Worth of Food.

The editor of a paper out in Okla., said: "Yes, it is true when I got hold of Grape-Nuts food, it was worth more than a $2000 doctor bill to me, for it made me well once. I have gained 25 pounds in weight, my strength has returned tenfold, my brain power has been given back to me, and that is an absolute material, for I am an editor and have been for 35 years.

"My pen shall always be ready to speak a good word for this powerful nutritive food. I had of course often read the advertisements regarding Grape-Nuts, but never thought to apply the food to my own use, until, in my extremity and sickness the thought came to me that it might fit my case. The statements in regard to the food are absolutely correct, as I have proven in my own case. One very fortunate thing about the food is that while it is the most scientifically-made and highly nourishing, concentrated food I have ever known, it has as delicious a taste that it wins and holds friends." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Made for Fat Men.

One of the narrow arches in the gallery of the chapel at Columbia university is not exactly symmetrical, although the defect is not noticeable to the casual observer, says the New York Globe. The reason for the widening of the arch after its original construction had rise to a somewhat humorous occurrence. One of the early visitors was a remarkably fat man, who found himself wedged into the arch when he tried to squeeze through and was extricated with difficulty. The builders, recognizing the possibility of other fat people being numbered among the future visitors, decided to widen the arch, sacrificing symmetry and harmony to practical need, as the pier was so constructed as to bear no loss of width on one of its sides.

Yokohama. This mongrel city is the most that many travelers see of Japan, yet is it neither Japanese nor foreign, and is spoken of disparagingly by everybody throughout the empire except those whose business interests tie here. The city is a comparatively recent creature of foreign trade. It is not characteristically Japanese even in its speech. The "Yokohama dialect" is o byword throughout Japan. Nor is the city's China-ue, though it has a large colony of pictails. Still less can it be called Korean, although its 600 European residents make it the most foreign city in Japan.

The importance of Yokohama lies in the fact that it is the first gateway for the trade of the orient. Here the west first touches the east. It is in the gabic of the Englishman's house, plotting directly at the wooden devil, the power of the letter would ha counteracted. So, whoever visits Yokohama may see a new brass cannon about three feet in length and of three-inch bore mounted on the top of a modern Englishman's residence, with its muzzle pointed threateningly toward the house of the next door neighbor. All this, mark you, is not a tale of old Japon, but a happening of recent months.

Where Missionaries Are Criticised.

Perhaps the incident for which I myself can vouch, having seen the cannon and the wooden devil on opposite gable ends) illustrates the esthetic city of Yokohama, yet the city is scarcely hospitable to ward Christian missionary enterprise. It is perhaps the center of the criticism of foreign the big hybrid hotels along the Yokohama bund, which neither the east nor the west would own, which charge Waldorf-Astoria prices for Oshkosh accommodations, where the tourists hear the stories concerning missionaries that are retailed around the world as the first-hand knowledge of those who have been on the scene and really know.

The Devil and the Cannon.

A curious story illustrates the composite character of this important city and shows, not only the commingling of the old and the new here, but also the chaotic state of the Japanese mind at present with respect to religion. Upon Yokohama's famous bluff a rich American has built an elaborate home, which so greatly resembles a Buddhist temple that the Japanese were at first angry at what they thought to be mockery. Fearing that for this reason the building might be burned, the insurance companies for a long time declined to accept it as a risk.

At one end of the cobio of this curious structure is the grinning head of a huge wooden devil. A short distance away from this particular house is the residcoce of a wealthy Englishman, whose servants one day fell ill. They consulted the Buddhist priest near by, who told them that their illness was caused by the malignant influence of the devil on the American house. It would be impossible for them to recover so long as that hideous creature shot its baneful glances in their direction.

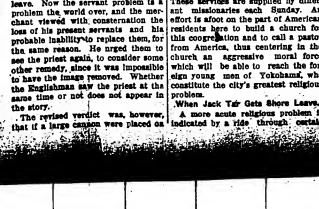
Straightway the servants reported to their employer that they must leave. Now the servant problem is a problem the world over, and the merchant viewed with consternation the loss of his present servants and his probable inability to replace them, for the same reason. He urged them to see the priest again, to consider some other remedy, since it was impossible to have the image removed. Whether the Englishman saw the priest at the same time or not does not appear in the story.



The revised verdict was, however, that if a large cannon were placed on missions. Here it is that the traveler hears that missions are only "o bluff." It is asserted that nobody here knows anything about missions and that the missionary is chiefly engaged in the profitable task of shutting up the eye of the church at home.

Looking After Americans Abroad.

The stories one hears concerning Europeans (as all white people are called) in the port cities of the orient are not pretty. The criticism of missionaries pales into insignificance beside the criticism of the American business men. In fact the two are said to have a relation. I have heard missionaries charge that it is because Christianity rebukes the lax moral code of the business community that the latter so strongly condemn missions. This is rather too sweeping, and too easy an answer to the charges laid at the door of the missionaries.

First, it is worth finding out just what the churches are doing for the English-speaking settlement. There is in Yokohama n prosperous and well-attended Church of England, supported by individuals and by English business firms, who follow the old English custom of renting a number of sittings

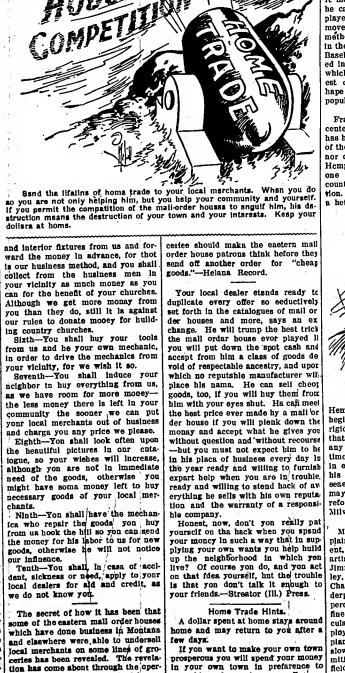
A NEW TEN COMMANDMENTS

Carefully Revised by the Catalogus Houses—Mail-Order Houses and Pure Foods—The Local Dealer.

The ten commandments as revised to fit the mail order catalogue house plan:

First—You shall sell your farm products for cash whenever you can, but not to us; we do not buy from you.



Second—You shall believe our statements and buy all you need from us because we want to be good to you, although we are not personally acquainted with you.

Third—You shall send the money in advance to give us the chance to get the goods from the factory with your money; meanwhile you will have to wait patiently a few weeks because that is our business method.

Fourth—You shall apply to your nearest city to aid you in building good roads so you may conveniently get the goods from the depot which you buy from us, for we do not build country roads.

Fifth—You shall buy church bells when they ordered groceries; that the English language is not understandable. By selling the stuff that has been put under the ban because of its impurity, the mail order concerns have been able to undersell the local merchants living hundreds of miles away from the great centers of supply.

In carrying on this trade-in impure goods, the mail order houses have done the greatest injury to the consumer. While the local merchant has been set by the eastern mail order houss, so it is with the other lines they work off in Montana. The red dies and harness offered at phenomenally low prices, the buggies and wagons, at prices which seem almost like giving the vehicles away, the kitchen utensils which are priced in the voluminous catalogues at figures that indicate the local merchants are highway robbers, the dry goods that are offered at such infinitesimal prices as to compel the ordinary woman to believe the mail order man is a public benefactor, all of these eastern mail order house offerings are on a par with the proved quality of the groceries they have been selling—fraudulent and put out to sell and not for service. The confession on the gro-cestee should make the eastern mail order house patrons think before they send off another order for "cheap goods."—Helena Record.

Your local dealer stands ready to duplicate every offer so eductively set forth in the catalogues of mail or der houses and more, says a ex change. He will trump the best trick the mail ordar house ever played on you. He will put down the spot cash and accept from him a class of goods de void of respectable ancestry, and upon which no reputable manufacturer will place his name. He can sell cheap goods, too, if you will buy your from him with your eye open to that. He can meet the best price ever made by a mail or der house if you will pleak down the price and accept what he gives you without question and without recourse.

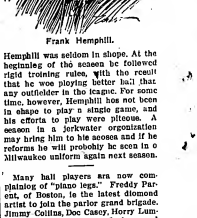
But you must not expect him to be in his place of business every day in the year ready and willing to furnish expert help when you are in trouble ready and willing to stand hack of ev erything he sells with his own reputation and the warranty of a responsible company.

Honest, now, don't you really put yourself on the back when you spend your money in such a way that in supplying your own wants you help build up the neighborhood in which you live? Of course you do, and you act on that idea yourself, but the trouble is that you don't talk it enough to your friends.—Streator (Ill.) Press.

Home Trade Hints.

A dollar spent at home stays around home and may return to you after a few days.

If you want to make your own town prosperous you will spend your money in your own town in preference to some bigger burg a long way off.



The way to start a wagon out of the mire is for all the horses to pull together. One way to pull together is for everybody to patronize home industries whenever possible.

Money in circulation around the town you live in is much better for your interests than the same money in circulation in a city hundreds of miles away. Your dollar is honored in a big city, but it has friends around home and is therefore easily found.

Sporting Gossip.

Baseball has grown from insignificant to gigantic proportions withio the last 40 years, and the scientific work of the teams delight millions of enthusiastic spectators during the season. The baseball "fan" sees so many things about the game to admire that he would probably become confused if he attempted to describe eil. Writers are to the same predicament. Each patron, however, feels that he has been well repaid for the time devoted to watching a contest between two nines, and his description of the game is always interesting to those unfortunate enough to be absent. In general it may be said that on no other athletic field are the qualities of ingenuity and resourcefulness more advantageously employed than oo the baseball diamond. Football, to be sure, demands the exercise of these elements, but not to ony greater degree than baseball. In baseball, moreover, the honest attendiog ony momentary lepse of attention and intelligent observation is greater than in almost any other game, because, as we all know, a game is frequently decided by the passage of a player from one base, the third, to the home plota, and even so simplo and cosual a thing as a fumble may often result in this loss. It is unnecessarry to drow attention to the physicol odvontogce to the player of the game of baseball. No other game can be said to exceed it in its ability to call into activity every muscle of the body, while itsletioy oso upon the exercise of swift ood accurata vision, of the most cnrefol judgment in gouging distances, ond of the olcoet discrimination in play. In exercising also tho foculties of the spirit, the ethiral and morni scose of a man, the game of baseball is cspecilly to be recommended. Self-re straint under the most trying circumstances, steadioese uoder the severest provocation, such oe the efforts of partisan spectators to "rattle" a player, potience, in lntemen nod pitebpr alike—these qualities are drown upon in every game ood the man who has the most of them in the most abundaot degree is, other things being equal, usually the winner. Of course, the most striking fenture of baschall is its cleanliness and scientific skill. It may, indeed, be said as a fact, he called a kind of living chess, the players, whoo perfectly matched and trayed, acting with scnecilicy of the mathematicol precision of the powns in the most intellectuni ol oil positmes. Baschall, however, possesses the added interest of thot elamont of chance which savore every sport in the highest degree, ood without which perhaps no sport would he univeroally popular.

Frank Hemphill, for three seasoos centerfielder on the Milwaokee team, has been sold to the Bloomington club of the Three I. league by Owner Havenor of the Brewers. The passing of Hamley finds a minor league toker one of the best outfielders in the country out of the baseball associa tion. When in condition there is not a better fielder in the business, but Frank Hemphill.

Hemphill was seldom in shape. At the beginning of the season he followed rigid training rules, with the result that he woo playing better ball than any outfielder in the league. For some time, however, Hemphill has not been in shape to play a single game, and his efforts to play were piteous. A seeson in a jerkwater organization may bring him to his senses and if he reforms he will probobly he seen in o Milwaukee uniform again next season.

Many ball players are now complaining of "piano legs." Freddy Parent, of Boston, is the latest diamond artist to join the parlor parade. Jimmy Collins, Doc Casey, Horry Lumley, Sam Mertes, Jimmy Jackson and Charley Hickman oil hove piono undorpinnings. Jim McGuire also has the greyhound type and much to be pro furred to the stocky striders of the Roger Bresnahan kind. Pisoo legs have to be tuned up. Only a long sweating and boiling-out process to the spring will give the playere the spirit to stay with the speedy base runners.

MANY PETTICOATS AMONG RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

WASHINGTON.—Barred from becoming letter carriers by a technicality in the postal regulations, women are rapidly invading the ranks of the rural carriers, where there are no restrictions against them. An examination of the records of the post office department shows that there are 237 carriers in the rural communities who are women, and 1,000 substitute carriers are of the same sex.

Who was the first woman rural carrier is something that is unknown by the post office department. Several have claimed that honor. Women were delivering mail matter in the farming communities for Uncle Sam long before his officials who have charge of that branch of the postal service knew anything about it.

There is another way in which they have made inroads into the service. When a man is appointed a rural carrier he is allowed to name his substitute, and many name their wives, daughters, or other members of their families for this place.

When a woman has served six months as a substitute, that is, as a bonded substitute, she will be eligible to appointment as regular carrier, and should there be a vacancy the department will give her the preference for appointment as regular carrier in the rural service.

While the regulations of the postal service make no specific provisions against women as letter carriers in cities, there is a provision which has the effect of barring them from these positions. A uniform which must be worn by city carriers, consisting of coat and trousers and cap of a certain color, is prescribed, and no women has been brave enough to make application in the face of this.

The records of the department show that the women carriers in the rural fres delivery service have made most excellent officers. They have shown great perseverance and ability to perform their duties in all sorts of weather.

DON'T CHEW YOUR MEAT, SAYS CHEMIST WILEY

DON'T chew meat. Gulp it in chunks.

Mastication has no part in the digestion of meat. There is some reason for believing that chewing will make meat indigestible. The saliva is an alkali. Acids are needed for the conversion of flesh into the elements that nourish the human body.

Too much chewing may raise the alkalinity of flesh used for food to such an extent as to seriously hamper the work of the stomach, which, alone, has to do with the disposal of animal matter.

This, in brief, is the gospel of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist of the department of agriculture. His views were called forth by a report by Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale on the relative value of animal and vegetable foods.

Aside from knowledge gained by him as a chemist, Dr. Wiley has noted that the carnivorous animals do not chew their food. They tear it from the bones and swallow it in chunks. Therefore the learned chief chemist holds that if a man can get a chunk of meat down into his stomach, no matter how big it may be, he has done all that nature requires of him.

"Mastication is good for the development of the muscles," says Dr. Wiley, "but chewing of meat is unnecessary, if not positively harmful. With vegetables, however, it is impossible to do too much grinding. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that all the digestion of vegetables is accomplished in the mouth and small intestines. If there is not enough mastication the work cannot be done afterward.

"But Fisher is a faddist; all of us are a bit offkeed in that way. He is trying to make over man so that he will not eat. He ought to know better than that."

FIGHT ON TRUSTS COSTS UNCLE SAM ROUND SUM

"TRUST busting" comes high end the taxpayers foot the bills. Special investigations of the Standard Oil, beef, harvester, tobacco, powder, tinplate, and other combinations have cost enormous sums. Inquiries now being prosecuted into the lumber, watch and other trusts will drew heavily upon the federal treasury.

In the last four years the government has paid out nearly $300,000 in fees for special counsel. These are some of the largest items:

Beef case, $48,000.

Standard Oil (in court), $45,000.

Tobacco cases (under investigation), $12,000.

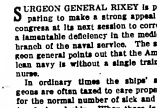
Paper case (concluded), $20,000.

Harvester Case (under investigation), $20,000.

Fertilizer case (in court), $15,000.

Coal and oil carrying railroads (under investigation), $10,000.

Powder case (under investigation), $7,000.



Turpentine case, $25,000.

Total, $242,000.

Fines paid the government, $30,000.

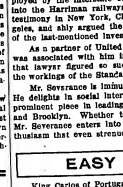
There are almost n dozen other investigations, which have cost a goodly price, but they are of lesser importance.

Kellogg and Morrison are paid $12,000 a year each. Judge McReynolds gets $16,000 n year.

SURGEON GENERAL RIXEY WANTS NURSES IN NAVY

SURGEON GENERAL RIXEY is preparing to make a strong appeal to congress at its next session to correct a lamentable deficiency in the medical branch of the naval service. The surgeon general points out that the American navy is without a single trained nurse.

In ordinary times the ships' surgeons are often taxed to care properly for the normal number of sick and injured aboard ship. When there is an epidemic of fever or measles (the latter often a serious malady among male adults), such as occurred not long ago on the battleship Connecticut, it has been found impossible to give the invalids the necessary scientific and careful nursing required.



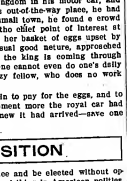
Surgeon General Rixey has, therefore, worked out the details of a plan for the organization of a corps of trained nurses, such as the army has.

Afloat these nurses will necessarily be men, but in the navy hospitals ashore, where the more difficult, lingering and dangerous cases are treated, women nurses will be employed. For $46,000 Admiral Rixey feels that he can make a respectable beginning in the organization of such a corps, and he is seeking support from the secretary of the navy and the president in securing the necessary appropriations by congress.

The first official suggestion of the employment of women in the projected naval nurse corps was broached by the surgeon general in an address delivered by him on the occasion of the graduation of the nurses' class at the Garfield hospital in this city recently.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

SKILLFUL "TRUST BUSTER"



Cordenio Arnold Severance, the government attorney who has unearthed such valuable evidence in the Harriman railroad deals that the department of justice has resolved to start criminal suits, is a young western attorney who had achieved an enviable reputation as a corporation lawyer when he enlisted with the government forces. Mr. Severance was born and raised in Minnesota and has held a number of offices, including that of state senator.

Mr. Severance's law business extends all over the country, from Massachusetts to California. He has been counsel for various railroads in the northwest, also for a number of Chicago packers, for the United States Steel corporation, and numerous other business industries. He was employed by the interstate commerce commission in the recent investigation into the Harriman railways. In connection with letter proceeding he took testimony in New York, Chicago, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and ably argued the matter in Washington, and his skillful handling of the last-mentioned investigation was especially commended.

As a partner of United States Attorney Frank B. Kellogg, Mr. Severance was associated with him in all the important trust investigations in which that lawyer figured so successfully, notably the Western Paper trust and the workings of the Standard Oil company.

Mr. Severance is intimately from the common disease of running for office. He delights in social intercourse and his genial disposition has won him a prominent place in leading clubs of Minnesota, Duluth, Chicago, New York and Brooklyn. Whether telling an humorous story or pursuing an octopus, Mr. Severance enters into the spirit of the thing with all the yim and enthusiasm that even strenuous President Roosevelt could ask.

EASY GOING MONARCH

King Carlos of Portugal is the happiest most easy-going and pleasure-loving ruler in Europe. The only cloud upon his horizon has been a parliament which persisted in trying to make laws and run the country. Life was not worth living, decided the jolly monarch, with such a pest always on hand, so he sent the lawmakers home and proclaimed that he would run the country alone for three years.

The private life of Portugal's monarch is rather interesting, because it is more like that of a private gentleman than the daily round of a sovereign. As he rises at five in the morning, he contrives to get all his "work done before the day, then five days of the six he gives over the afternoon and evening to his one amusement—sport. He has explored every corner of his kingdom in his motor car, and a short time since, when driving through some out-of-the-way place, he had Wiley, "but chewing of meat is unnecessary, if not positively harmful. With vegetables, however, it is impossible to do too much grinding. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that all the digestion of vegetables is accomplished in the mouth and small intestines. If there is not enough mastication the work cannot be done afterward.

"But Fisher is a faddist; all of us are a bit offkeed in that way. He is trying to make over man so that he will not eat. He ought to know better than that."

HAD NO OPPOSITION

To run for office and be elected without opposition is an unusual thing in American politics. This rare distinction has befallen D. R. Anthony, Jr., who was nominated for congress by the Republicans of the First district of Kansas to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of Congressman Curtis to the United States senate.

Mr. Anthony received a remarkable political indorsement in that he was unanimously nominated by his own party, and the Democrats of the district met and resolved to make no nomination against him.

The new congressman is editor of the Leavenworth Daily Times, and is a son of the late Col. D. R. Anthony, one of the pioneers and historical characters of Kansas' struggle to be a free state. He is also a nephew of the late Susan B. Anthony, and a brother-in-law of Capt. Koehler, the army officer who recently had a clash with Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood in the Philippines.

As showing the trend of politics in the western states, Mr. Anthony's platform calls for revision of unfair tariff schedules by the friends of the protective principle, stands for government control of the railroads as advocated by President Roosevelt, and declares for the curbing of criminal trusts and monopolies.

SURGEON GENERAL RIXEY

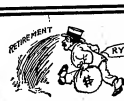
Presley Marion Rixey, surgeon general of the United States navy, who attended the last Mrs. McKinley in Canton, O., has had official care of the health of the presidents of the United States for the past nine years. He accompanied President McKinley on his fatal trip to the Pan-American exposition and was with him when he died.

Dr. Rixey was one of the most skillful, experienced and widely traveled surgeons of the navy when William McKinley became president. He was made a White House physician and took charge of Mrs. McKinley, who had been in precarious health for years.

The engaging manners of the Virginian and the success which attended his care of Mrs. McKinley attracted the president to him. The two became fast friends. One of the last official acts of that never fails to make friends wherever he goes, Dr. Rixey is a general favorite in all circles of official Washington.

Mr. McKinley before he was struck down by the assassin's bullet, was to arrange for Dr. Rixey's promotion to the position of surgeon general of the navy.

One of President Roosevelt's first acts on taking office was to carry out the dead president's wish.



Many honors have come to Dr. Rixey in the course of his career, one of the most prized being a decoration from King Alfonso XIII. of Spain for his valuable services rendered to officers and men of the Santa Maria following an explosion on that vessel.

Round About New York

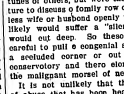
RYAN QUITS WALL STREET TO ENJOY HIS FORTUNE

NEW YORK.—Thomas F. Ryan has ended his days of activity in Wall street. His departure for Europe the other day signalized his breaking away from the personal management of the gigantic corporations with which he has been associated for the last 25 years.



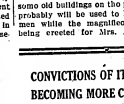
The news of Mr. Ryan's retirement has been confirmed by Wall street by men who know him intimately and who have closely watched his movement in the stock market during the last tradition that Mr. Ryan's ambition, after he had become an important factor in the financial world, was to accumulate $100,000,000. This he has accomplished. His fortune is estimated by those in a position to know at considerably over that figure.

Mr. Ryan, according to "inside" information, will now enjoy a retired life on his magnificent estate in Nelson county, Va. That he may direct his eagerles toward becoming a United States senator from Virginia is considered a strong possibility.

The retirement of Mr. Ryan from Wall street has been expected for some time.

Mr. Ryan's rise to power in the financial world was remarkable. He is now 55 years old. He started his business career in o Baltimore dry goods house in 1868. He soon tired of that and in 1870 came to New York, where he got a position with a Wall street brokerage firm. It was not long before he had made a successful venture in the stock market. With the money he made he started in business for himself. In 1874 he bought o seot on the stock exchange. From thot time he has been a power.

DIVORCE COURT



SOCIETY NOW SHUNNING SUBJECT OF DIVORCE

THAT the ostitude of the swell set toward divorce is changing is the conviction expressed by a well-known club man nt the Knickerbocker. He declares that the unfortunate matrimonial experiences of society folk are now seldom discussed in the open, brazen way they were not long ago. Just as some pretty well informed preachers said, in their condemnation of high society, extravagance, and gemology, was in first position es a social questfication. Tutors in the remifications of divorce were earning more money even then instructors in bridge.

But according to the club man mentioned, who, by the way, used to be much interested in divorces and indeed once planned to issue a "Directory of the Divorced," the subject is shunned by the majority of society folk now. Other matters are dis cussed at various clubs, and the wholesome change is very noticeable. To be sure there are some who still talk scandal—in every class there are persons who gloot over the misfortunes of others, but were they to venture to discuss o family row or o faithless wife or husbond openly they most likely would suffer a "silencer" that would cut deep. So these few are careful to pull e congenial spirit into a secluded corner or out into the conservotory and there elone muneh the malignant morsel of news.

It is not unlikely that the torrent of ebuse that has been heaped upon Abe Hummel, representative extraordinary of the trefle in such things, has had a good deel to do with this elooge of sentiment—thet and the Thaw case and the Gould case. To some who peddled libelous stories of morttol rows the revelotions recently made of the dangers of that occupation may have been the deterrent. But the society man who was discussing the subject the other day declared emphatioolly that the reason wos more complimentary—thot it was because New York society people have come to look with more respect upon the private offairs of their own homes.

MRS. ARMOUR TO LIVE NEAR THE PRESIDENT

MRS. PHILIP D. ARMOUR, widow of the founder of the Armour Packing company, has decided to join the colony of New York millionaires who have country places near the home of President Roosevelt on Oyster Bay. Through her attorneys in this city Mrs. Armour has quietly purchased seven acres of land about three miles from Sagamore Hill. The land is high and has miles of water frontage. It slopes down to Huntington Bay and was o part of the old Simmons farm.

The shore frontage is e sandy beach and at the point where the property touches the water there is a sufficient depth even at low tide for a fair-sized yacht to ride at anchor or tie up in case e lock is built, such as the Roosevelt place, which extends 100 feet or more into the bay.

The property has been on the market for some time, but has looked a purchaser because of the prices asked and the fact thnt there is little shore front compared to the total orea.

The beach property could have been sold ot three times the ocreage price asked for the full tract, but Mrs Armour insisted that the land be sold in one piece. It, is understood the price paid was around $1,500 en acre. The property adjoins the Von Wyck ferm, said to have been leased to Booker T. Washington. There are no other old buildings on the place, which probably will be used to house workmen while the magnificent home is being erected for Mrs. Armour.

CONVICTIONS OF ITALIANS BECOMING MORE COMMON

IN THE last two months there has been n surprisingly large increase in the number of convictions of Italians in New York. It used to be said that it was almost impossible to get a verdict against them, and often the courts, low and high, had turned loose men of whose guilt there was not the slightest donbt, simply because witnesses would dare to testify against the accused.

The wedge has been entered into the world of Italian crime, and the police have learned that it is easier to punish Italian criminals than hitherto. The Mafia is walking around just to save funeral expenses. It no longer has nny terrors for the Latin people. And as for the Black Hand, they laugh nt mention of it. To the average Italian, indeed, a Black Hand'ar simply means a loafer who has grown weary of digging dirt and makes o living by writing threatening letters.

The reasons nre not obseure. A young crop of Italiens hes grown up in this city, and they eore not more about the custom or ways of their parents thon do the descendnnts of the other foreign-born people care about what their people did. As a consequence, when a crimo is committed in Italian quarters now, the police easily find young Italian-Americans willing to volunteer as witnesses. They are not afraid of Italian secret societies of n reel or mythical type, or Italian criminels, no more than a young American is afraid of an American crook or criminnl.

Catholic clergymen who speak Italian have had a wholesome influence on Italian people here.

TESTIMONY TO BACK UP ORCHARD'S STORY

EVIDENCE THAT HE RECEIVED MONEY FROM PETTIBONE.

Steve Adams Identified—His Arrest in Ogden and Telegram to Haywood —Witnesses Confirm Features of Bradley and Vindicator Plots.

Boise, Idaho, June 15—The prosecution in the Steunenberg murder trial Friday, entering in earnest upon the substantiation and corroboration of Harry Orchard's testimony, showed a continuous thread of evidence connecting George Pettibone's store in Denver with Orchard at San Francisco engaged on the Bradley murder plot, partly another direct line by which it is hoped to show that Haywood engaged and paid Steve Adams for the same desperate work, and added special touches of confirmation to Orchard's general story.

Officials of the United States post offices at San Francisco and Denver produced original records showing that in August, 1904, a registered letter was sent under the name of "J. Wolf" from the address of Pettibone's store in Denver to "J. Dempsey" at the Golden West hotel in San Francisco. Orchard swore that he stayed at the Golden West hotel under an alias that was either "Dempsey" or "Hogan," that Pettibone used the aliases of "Wolf" and "Pat Hone" and that under the name of "Wolf" Pettibone, in the month mentioned, sent him a registered letter containing $100, to pay his expenses while engaged on the Bradley murder.

Adams and Haywood Connected.

Police officials of Ogden established the arrest there in June, 1904, of Steve Adams and A. T. Williams. They were sealed up in an east-bound car loaded with fruit, and when arrested for trespass each had a brace of revolvers. When released through the influence of a detective, who was a brother Mason of Adams, they went straight to the office of the Western Union and sent a telegram to Haywood in Denver.

The defense headed off an attempt to get the contents of the telegram before the judge, but the state indicated that it would return to the charge later and further develop the incident when it has broadened its foundation.

Adams Produced in Court.

When the Ogden testimony was introduced Steve Adams was brought into court under guard to be identified. Adams seemed in a defiant humor and walked to a point directly in front of the jury and gazed steadily at the witness confronting him.

Besides its work on the Pettibone Orchard and Haywood-Adams lines the state produced several witnesses who confirmed features of Orchard's story as to the Bradley affair, the first descent into the Vindicator mine with the object of doing violence; the first success of the Vindicator plot and the circumstances under which Detective Lyte Gregory was killed.

Witness Motives Assailed.

Boise, Idaho, June 14.—The men who are battling to save the life of William D. Haywood and the good name of the Western Federation of Miners made their greatest assault upon Harry Orchard Thursday, when, carrying the review by cross-examination of the life of crime down to his confession, they bitterly assailed his guiding motives.

Six days they spent in stripping him before the jury of every shred of morality of character, and then, suddenly turning upon him in final fierce attack, they fought with every means known to the legal craft to convince the jury that Orchard was committing a crime in falsely swearing away the lives of innocent men in the hope of saving his own. They carried their attack to the very language with which the witness answered their questions, and everywhere they alleged by forceful implication that it was put into his mouth by men controlling him.

Orchard Weeps on Stand.

Orchard broke down when they recited to him the tale of David and Uriah, that Detective McParland related to him when he came seeking a confession. He fought to save himself, but tears filled his eyes and he rocked nervously like a falsetto woman. His voice lowered to husky-ness, and he hid his face in a handkerchief. Then he steadied himself and went on strongly to the end. He defended his motives by saying that he had finally experienced conversion and penitence and had resolved to make all possible reparation by freely confessing all. McParland had told him that he was doing a great service for the state, and that states were kind in men who served them; there was no other promise.

Peabody Wants Orchard.

After the noon recess former Gov. Peabody, of Colnrado, met Harry Orchard in the office of the counsel for the prosecution. The meeting was unexpected as far as Orchard was concerned, and when he saw Peabody advancing toward him with hand outstretched he blanched and began to tremble. "I am ashamed to speak to you, governor; I am ashamed to look at you," faltered Orchard.

"Oh, that's all right," said Peabody, laughing. "You need not be ashamed to speak to me now."

Orchard began crying, and when Peabody succeeded in reassuring him he said:

"I am glad that I did not kill you, and that I am spared the thought of that crime at least."

ILL FATED LAUNCH FOUND

BODIES OF SOME OF DROWNED MIDSHIPMEN IN VESSEL.

Naval Officers Convinced It Was Run Down by Barge in Tow of a Tug.

Newport News, Va., June 15.—With canopy frame crushed but canvas still tightly fastened down, the missing launch of the battleship Minnesota was located in 27 feet of water, about 1,600 yards west by south of Fort Wool, Friday afternoon. Across the little craft was a hit-tail piece of towing line, serving to convince the naval officers that they are right in their theory that the launch was run down by a boat of some kind in tow of a tug.

The diver who went down to examine the launch, reported that the beads and arms of three men were protruding from beneath the canvas covering.

It will be Saturday morning before the launch can be raised and at the present time no one knows how many bodies will be found. It is believed that every one of them will be under the canopy, but the fact that uniform cases of midshipmen Urich and Stevenson were picked up in the Roads indicates that these two must have succeeded in getting free from the boat before they were drowned.

Norfolk, Va., June 13—It was reported Wednesday that the disaster to Hampton roads Monday night which resulted in the sinking of a launch from the United States battleship Minnesota and the drowning of 11 men, including six midshipmen, who were returning from the army and navy ball at the Jamestown exposition that night, and five seamen who made up the crew of the launch, would prevent the Minnesota's launch being run down by a tug and coal barge which the former was towing.

The midshipmen believed to be drowned are:

Philip Henry Field, Virginia; Frank-lin Porteous Holcomb, New Castle, Del.; Herber Leander Holden, Chicago Hill, Henry Clay Murphin, Jr., Jackson, O.; William Hollister Stevenson, North Caroline; Walter Carl Ulrich, La Crosse, Wis.

Following are the missing enlisted men:

Jesse Corn, Louisville, Ky.; Robert H. Dodson, New York, N. Y.; Frank R. Plumber, Mabton, Wash.; Harry Lee Van Dorn, West Cedar Rapids, Ia.; George W. Westphal, Neenah, Wis.

SENATOR MORGAN IS DEAD.

Veteran Statesman of Alabama Succumbs to Angina Pectoris.

Washington, June 13.—United States Senator John Tyler Morgan of Alabama, for 30 years a member of the upper house of congress, died at the senate committee on the interoceanic canals, and prominent as a brigadier general in the confederate army, died at his home here Tuesday night.

Senator Morgan had been in bad health for a number of years but had more or less regularly attended the sessions of congress. He suffered from angina pectoris which was the cause of his death. He passed away at 11:15 o'clock. The death bed were his daughters, Miss Mary Morgan and Miss Cornelia Morgan, both of this city, and his secretary, J. O. Jones.

Mr. Morgan was born in Athens, Tenn., June 20, 1824. His home in Alabama was at Selma, where the funeral will take place, the body probably being taken from here Thursday.

The senator had held a number of important offices, including membership on the Hawaiian laws commission and arbitrator on the Bering sea fisheries. His chief active interest in the senate in recent years had been in connection with the isthmian canal question. He was a persistent advocate of the Nicaragua route.

CLOUDBURST IN KENTUCKY.

Crops Suffer Great Damage from the Heavy Rains.

Lexington, Ky., June 14.—The third cloudburst within a week passed over central and eastern Kentucky during the night and Saturday morning, doing almost incalculable damage in crops, farm lands and lowlands along their course. In Clark, Montgomery, Bourbon, Bath, Fleming, Scott, Nicholas, Lee, Wolfe, Rowan, Carter, Boyd and other counties corn, tobacco and wheat lands were washed by the landsliding and opening of fissures several inches deep in the ground. In many sections crops practically are ruined.

The Kentucky, Big Sandy, Red, Cumberland and Licking rivers are rising rapidly. Several towns along the Licking river are threatened with inundation. All the rivers in the mountains are filled with logs, thousands of which will be lost.

Hailstones as large as guinea eggs fell here Wednesday night. Two valuable brood mares were killed in Scott county by lightning. One was Queen Louise, owned by George W. J. Bland, of Pittsburg. Trains for eastern Kentucky are running slowly, fearing washouts.

Miss Marian Flah Weds.

New York, June 13.—One of the most notable social events of the season was the marriage Wednesday afternoon of Miss Marian Flah, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Flah, and Albert Z. Gray, son of Judge John Clinton Gray. The ceremony occurred at four o'clock at St. Bartholomew's church. A wedding reception followed the ceremony at the Flah home.

MAYOR SCHMITZ IS DECLARED GUILTY

CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF SAN FRANCISCO IS CONVICTED OF EXTORTION.

Sensational Trial Ends—Defendant Shows Little Emotion When the Verdict Is Read—Judge Dunne's Charge to the Jury.

San Francisco, June 14.—Mayor Schmitz was found guilty of extortion, as charged in the indictment, by the jury which returned its verdict in Judge Dunne's court at 10:20 o'clock Thursday night.

As the foreman read the verdict Schmitz sat unmoved, with his left hand to his chin. He apparently did not understand, and asked Attorney Barrett:

"What is it?"

"Guilty," said Barrett.

Schmitz's hand dropped to the table, but he showed no other signs of emotion.

The morning of the last day of the mayor's trial was taken up with Mr. Campbell's closing address to the jury for the defense, a speech of great vigor. The afternoon from 2:33 o'clock until after five was consumed by Assistant District Attorney Heney in a fierce closing speech for the state.

Court's Charge Was Fair.

It was the sentiment, equally expressed at both ends of the long table where the opposing lawyers sat, that Judge Dunne's charge to the jury was as fair and as nicely balanced in the scales of judicial indifference as a judge's charge may be.

Judge Dunne, in defining to the jury what the law means by a threat in connection with extortion, said it must be such a threat as would naturally cause a man of reasonably firm mind to give up his property in fear. He cautioned that a threat in extortion need not be verbal or direct. It may be unspoken and merely implied, and come fully within the meaning of the law. He charged that even if Schmitz received part of the money paid to Ruef by the French restaurant men, but did not know at the time of receiving it that it had been paid under threat, the defendant must be acquitted.

Schmitz Ordered to Jail.

San Francisco, June 15.—Eugene E. Schmitz, mayor of San Francisco since 1901, convicted Thursday night by a jury of the crime of extorting money from the owners of French restaurants in the issuance of liquor licenses, asked Judge Dunne Friday to release him on bail until sentence is pronounced Thursday, June 27. The request was denied by the judge who directed that Schmitz be taken to jail. The court intimated that the mayor, like any other convicted criminal, should be locked up in jail.

SHOCKING TRAGEDY IN OHIO.

Man Kills Wife and Son and Shoots Mother-in-Law.

Ironton, O., June 14.—One of the most horrible tragedies ever enacted in this section of the state took place on Symes creek at about noon Thursday, when Charles Shafer shot his wife, her mother, and his little eight-year-old boy, the latter being instantly killed, while Mrs. Shafer died about an hour later. Her mother, Mrs. Thacker, will recover.

Family trouble is given as the cause of the shooting, and back of that is a long story of cruel and brutal treatment.

Shafer is at large, but is being hunted by 100 men with bloodhounds. He will be tracked if caught. He has always been regarded as a dangerous citizen.

War on Coal Trust Begun.

Philadelphia, June 13.—The suit of the United States government against the anthracite coal carrying railroads, which are charged with operating a monopoly in the production, transportation and sale of hard coal, was filed Wednesday in the United States Circuit court in this city.

BLOODY WAR EXPECTED

SITUATION IN CENTRAL AMERICA IS DISCOURAGING.

Zelaya's Attempt to Shift the Blame to United States and Mexico Irritates Officials.

Washington, June 15.—A sanguinary war—perhaps two wars or more, with as many revolutions added for good measure—is what the state department officials now expect to mark the summer of 1907 in Central America. They are much cast down over the sudden and unexpected failure of the joint efforts of the governments of Mexico and America to bring about a condition of permanent peace between the turbulent republics in Central America.

Official news of this failure reached the state department Friday from one of its representatives in Nicaragua, who forwarded the explanation of the president of that country of his participation in the attack on Acajutla. The exasperating feature of President Zelaya's message, according to the state department, was the way in which he sought to place upon America and Mexico the responsibility for the attack upon a friendly state by exclaiming that it was a necessary step in the execution of the plan for a union of the Central American republics.

As a matter of fact, no one of the officials pointed out, certainly the United States and probably Mexico would welcome a combination of these little states into one republic under some capable executive, but it has never for an instant been contemplated that such a union should be brought about by force.

San Salvador, June 15.—The United States gunboat Yorktown, now off this coast, is expected to capture, as a pirate, the Nicaraguan gunboat Momotombo, which recently landed a force of filibusters on Salvadorean territory, where they were defeated and fled.

President Zelnyn of Nicaragua is said to have sent other vessels to Central and to this republic, but they did not succeed in accomplishing their mission, as the coast is well guarded by the Salvadorean fleet, mobilized within the past few days.

PRESIDENT AT SAGAMORE HILL.

Is Warmly Received by His Oyster Bay Neighbors.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 13.—President Roosevelt and his family are at home at Sagamore Hill. The trip from Washington, which was begun Wednesday morning in a drizzling rain, ended in sunshine at five o'clock in the afternoon.

At Jersey City and Long Island City crowds surrounded the car, shouting greetings to the president, who from the train rear in turn greeted the assembly. Cape Town, Africa. The boy's mother died when he was a child. His father disappeared and he has not heard from him in years until to-day.

BOODLERS ARE PARDONED.

Lehmann and Hartman Are Set Free by Gov. Folk.

Jefferson City, Mo., June 15.—Julius Lehmann and Emil Hartman, former St. Louis councilmen convicted of boodling and sentenced to the penitentiary over three years ago, were pardoned by Gov. Folk Friday and released after having served about half their sentences. They are the last of the convicted St. Louis boodlers to leave the penitentiary.

DOUMA OF RUSSIA REBUFFS STOLYPIN

REFUSES TO SUSPEND SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS.

Dissolution Is at Hand—Deputies Accused of Many Revolutionary Crimes—General Strike in St. Petersburg May Result.

St. Petersburg, June 15—The dissolution of the lower house of the Russian parliament appeared Friday to be a question of only a few hours or at most of a day or two.

With only 130 opposing votes the lower house Friday night rejected Premier Stolypin's ultimatum for the immediate suspension of 55 deputies for membership in the social democratic party, and referred the subject to a committee. Although the committee has been instructed to report Saturday evening, it is known in advance that the decision on the main question will be adverse, and that the douma will accept the recommendation.

Situation Seems Hopeless.

In order to keep strictly within the legal limits, the committee may recommend the suspension of 16 leaders on condition that the government disclose the evidence against them, but there is not the slightest expectation on either side that the will save the situation.

An extraordinary session of the council of ministers was held Friday night to discuss the decision of the lower house. Up to a late hour no report had been received of the doings of the council, and no decree of dissolution had been issued.

May Proclaim General Strike.

The session of the St. Petersburg committee of the social democrats was attended by a large number of the accused deputies. The committee resolved on a proposal to proclaim a general strike in the capital. This meeting was held in secret, the police having occupied the headquarters of the party.

Remembering the fiasco of the strike called after the dissolution of the last douma, the committee is hesitating to adopt this measure, although delegates from the workmen in all quarters of the city report that the conditions are ripe for a successful industrial strike and that there is a possibility of extending the movement to the several railroads centering in St. Petersburg.

Deputies Are Accused.

Five minutes before the sitting of the lower house of parliament opened Friday President Golovin received a letter from Premier Stolypin demanding, in accordance with the regulations, that the house go into executive session to discuss weighty matters of state. As soon as the house was called to order the premier submitted an ultimatum saying that unless the demands of the government were granted, and granted immediately, the government would at first tacitly unable to cooperate with parliament.

He then yielded the tribune to M. Kamenshansky, the representative of the Kronstadt courts, who read a long indictment of the Social Democrats. The prosecutor charged 55 specific charges against M. Alexiasky, Prince Tzeretell, M. Dzhapardize, Gerue, Orel, Anukin, Bjelousoff, Arzimkoff, Kirienko, Lomatschidze, Lopatkin, Miltroff, Komar, Syeroff, Selmikoff and Vinogradoff. The charges against the deputies named included almost every crime in the revolutionary calendar.

The parliament, astonished, took a recess of an hour and after the various groups had discussed the situation, the matter was referred to a committee.

EDDIE GUERIN GOES FREE.

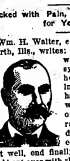
British Court Refuses to Extradite Notorious Criminal.

London, June 15.—Should the decision given in the divisional court Friday by the lord chief justice, Lord Alverstone, and two associates, hold good, a British subject convicted of crime in a foreign country who escapes to British territory cannot be extradited. The decision was given in the case of Eddie Guerin, who attempted to the United States from Devil's island, then come to England, where he was arrested and ordered to be extradited to France by a Bow street extradition court magistrate.

Guerin formerly resided in Chicago, where he was twice convicted of crimes, and went to France on his release. There he was sentenced to penal servitude for life for a bank robbery in Paris and was sent to Devil's island. A foreign consul general alons Guerin has been sent back to America.

The court decided that the extradition act did not apply to the case and discharged the prisoner.

BANDS QUIT G. A. R. PARADE.



Union Musicians Refuse to Play at Ohio State Encampment.

Canton, O., June 13.—Because a nonunion band had been engaged to take a part all the union bands engaged here at the state Grand Army encampment withdrew Wednesday afternoon just as the immense parade started in review before Gov. Harris and Commander Harman and staff.

T. G. Woodland, a veteran who came here to attend the encampment, died suddenly Wednesday from heart disease. His home was at Cleveland.

SUFFERED TORTURES.

Racked with Pain, Day and Night, for Years.

Wm. H. Walter, engineer, of Chatsworth, Ills., writes: "Kidney disease was lurking in my system for years. I had torturing pain in the side and back and the urino was dark and full of sediment. I was racked with pain day and night, could not sleep or eat well, and finally became crippled and bent over with rheumatism. Doan's Kidney Pills brought quick relief, and in time, cured me. GOOD IDEA FOR MATCHES.

Double Enders Popular Among Smokers in Mexico.

"Mexico may be behind us in some things, but she has us lashed to the mast when it comes to making matches," said a man just in from the land of the Montezumas as he handed out a new leaflet with a head on each end.

"I saw nothing but double ended matches while I was away, and I can tell you that they save one's record with the Recording Angel if you drag down in your pocket and find one match the chances are that you are sure of a light, because if one end goes out the other is left. These old time matches, just revived, that splutter brilliant sparks may be all right when it comes to pleasing the baby, but the fellow who puts on the market a double ended match will find a ready demand."

THE PRESIDENT TO EDITORS

Roosevelt Delivers a Notable Address at Jamestown, Va.

Speaks Before the Delegates to the National Editorial Association—Touches Upon Important National Questions.

Jamestown, Va.—The following is the address of President Roosevelt before the National Editorial association at the exposition here:

It is of course a mere truism to say that no other body of our countrymen wield as extensive an influence as those who write for the daily press and for the periodicals. It is also a truism to say that such power implies the gravest responsibility, and the man exercising it should hold himself accountable, and should be held by others accountable, precisely as if he occupied any other position of public trust. I do not intend to dwell upon your duties to-day, save that I shall permit myself to point out one matter where it seems to me that the need of our people is vital. It is essential that the man in public life and the men who writes in the public press shall both of them, if they are really good servants of the people, be prompt to assail wrongdoing and wickedness. But in thus assailing wrongdoing and wickedness, there are two conditions to be fulfilled, because if unfulfilled, harm and not good will result. In the first place, be sure of your facts and avoid everything like hysteria or exaggeration; for to assail a decent man for something of which he is innocent is to give aid and comfort to every scoundrel, while indulgence in hysterical exaggeration serves to weaken, not strengthen, the statement of truth. In the second place, be sure that you base your judgment on conduct and not on the social or economic position of the individual with whom you are dealing. There are good and bad men in every walk of life, and their being good or bad does not depend upon whether they have or do not have large bank accounts. Yet this elemental fact, this fact which we all accept as self-evident, when we think each of us of the people whom he himself knows in his business and social relations, is often completely ignored by certain public men and certain public writers. The men who thus ignore it and who attack wickedness only when found in a particular class are always unsafe, and are sometimes very dangerous, leaders. Distrust equally the men who is never able to discover any vices of rich men to attack and the man who confines himself to attacking the sins and shortcomings of rich men. It is a sure sign of moral and mental dishonesty in any man if in his public assaults upon iniquity he is never able to see any iniquity save that of a particular class; and this whether he is able only to see the crimes of arrogance and oppression in the rich or the crimes of envy and violence in the poor.

So much for what I have to say to you in your capacity of molders and guides of public thought. In addition I want to speak to you on two great movements in our public life which I feel must necessarily occupy no inconsiderable part of the time of our public men in the near future. One of these is the question of, in certain ways, reshaping our system of taxation so as to make it bear most heavily on those most capable of supporting the strain. The other is the question of utilizing the natural resources of the nation in the way that will be of most benefit to the nation as a whole.

Need of Foresight.

In utilizing and conserving the natural resources of the nation the one characteristic more essential than any other is foresight. Unfortunately, foresight is not usually characteristic of a young and vigorous people, and it is obviously not a marked characteristic of us in the United States. Yet assuredly it should be the growing nation with a future which takes the long look ahead; and no other nation is growing so rapidly as ours or has a future so full of promise. No other nation enjoys so wonderful a measure of present prosperity which can of right be treated as an earnest of future success, and for no other are the rewards of foresight so great, so certain, and so easily foretold. Yet hitherto as a nation we have tended to live with an eye single to the present, and have permitted the reckless waste and destruction of much of our natural wealth.

The conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life. Unless we maintain an adequate material basis for our civilization, we can not maintain the institutions in which we take so great and just a pride; and to waste and destroy our natural resources means to undermine this material basis. During the last five years efforts have been made in several new directions in the government service to get our people to look ahead, to exercise foresight, and to substitute a planned and orderly development of our resources in the place of a haphazard striving for immediate profit. The effort has been made through several agencies.

In 1902 the reclamation service began to develop the larger opportunities of the western half of our country for irrigation. The work includes all the states from the great plains through the Rocky mountains to the Pacific slope. It has been conducted with the clear and definite purpose of using the valuable water resources of the public land for the greatest good for the greatest number in the long run; in other words, for the purpose of putting upon the land permanent home makers who will use and develop it for themselves and for their children and children's children. There has been opposition, of course, to this work of the reclamation service; for we have been obliged to antagonize certain men whose interest it was to exhaust for their own temporary personal profit natural resources which ought to be developed through use, so as to be conserved for the permanent common advantage of the people as a whole. But there will be no halt in the work of preserving the waters which head in the Rocky mountain region so as to make them of most use to the people as a whole; for the policy is essential to our national welfare.

Operations of Land Laws.

The public lands of the United States should be utilized in similar fashion. Our present public land laws were passed when there was a vast surplus of vacant public land. The chief desire was to secure settlers thereon, and comparatively slight attention was paid as to exactly how the lands were disposed of in detail. In consequence, lax execution of the laws became the rule both in the land office and in the public mind, and land frauds were common and little noted. This was especially true when a system originally designed for the fertile and well-watered regions of the middle west was applied to the dryer regions of the great plains and to the mountains and the Pacific coast. In these regions the system lent itself to fraud, and much land passed [illegible] of the home maker. The department of the interior and the department of justice joined in prosecuting the offenders against the law; but both the law and its administration were defective and needed to be changed. Three years ago a public lands commission was appointed to scrutinize the law and the facts and to recommend a remedy. Their examination specifically showed the existence of great frauds upon the public domain, and their recommendations for changes in the law were made with the design of conserving the natural resources of every part of the public land by putting it to its best use. Attention was especially called to the prevention of settlement by the passage of great areas of public lands into the hands of a few men, and to the enormous waste caused by unrestricted grazing on the open range; a system of using the natural forage on the public domain which amounts to putting a premium on its destruction. The recommendations of the public lands commission were sound, for they were especially in the interest of the actual home maker; and where the small home maker could not utilize the land, it was provided that the government should keep control of it so that it could not be monopolized by a few wealthy men. Congress has not yet acted upon these recommendations, except for the repeal of the iniquitous lieu-land law. But the recommendations are so just and proper, so essential to our national welfare, that I believe they will surely ultimately be adopted.

In 1891 congress authorized the president to create national forests in the public domain. These forests reserves remained for a long time in charge of the general land office, which had no men properly trained in forestry. But another department, that of agriculture, possessed the trained men. In other words, the government forests were without foresters and the government foresters without forests. Waste of effort and waste of forests inevitably followed. Finally the situation was ended in 1905 by the creation of the United States forest service, which has stopped the waste, conserved the resources of the national forests, and made them useful; so that our forests are now being managed on a coherent plan, and in a way that augurs well for the future.

The mineral fuels of the eastern United States have already passed into the hands of large private owners, and those of the west are rapidly following. This should not be, for such mineral resources belong in a peculiar degree to the whole people. Under private control there is much waste from the shortsighted methods of working, and the complete utilization is often sacrificed for a greater immediate profit. The mineral fuels under our present conditions are as essential to our prosperity as the forests will always be. The difference is that the supply is definitely limited, for coal does not grow and trees do. It is obvious that the mineral fuels should be conserved, not wasted, and that enough of them should remain in the hands of the government to protect the people against unjust or extortionate prices so far as that can still be done. What has been accomplished in the regulation of the great oil fields of the Indian territory offers a striking example of the good results of such a policy. Last summer, accordingly, I withdrew most of the coal-bearing public lands temporarily from disposal, and asked for the legislation necessary to protect the public interest by the conservation of the mineral fuels; that is, for the power to keep the fee in the government and to lease the coal, oil, and gas rights under proper regulation. No such legislation was passed, but I still hope that we shall ultimately get it.

Preserve Mineral Resources.

In addition to treating aright for the benefit of the whole people the forests and the mineral beds, we should similarly try to preserve for the benefit of all the people the great stretches of public domain, some three hundred million acres in all, which are unfit for cultivation by present methods and valuable only for the forage which they supply. This vast area is now open to the free grazing of cattle, sheep, horses and goats, without restriction or regulation. When population has increased, as is now the case, such utter lack of management means that the public domain is turned over to be skinned by men whose only concern is to get what they can out of it at the moment, without any regard to whether or not it is ruined so far as the next generation is concerned. In other words, the range is not so much used as wasted by abuse; and as an incident conflict and bloodshed frequently arise between opposing users. With the rapid settling of the west the range is more and more overgrazed. Moreover, much of it can not be used to advantage unless it is fenced, for fencing is the only way by which to keep in check the absentee owners of nomad flocks which roam hither and thither, utterly destroying the pasturage and leaving a waste behind, so that their presence is compatible with the presence of home makers.

Prevention of Frauds.

For several years we have been doing everything in our power to prevent fraud upon the public land. What can be done under the present laws is now being done through the joint action of the interior department and the department of justice. But fully to accomplish the prevention of fraud there is need of further legislation and especially of a sufficient appropriation to permit the department of the interior to examine certain classes of entries on the ground before they pass into private ownership. The appropriation asked for last winter, if granted, would have put an end to the squandering of the public domain, while it would have prevented any need of causing hardship to individual settlers by holding up their claims. However, the appropriation was not given us, and in consequence it is not possible to secure, as I would like to secure, the natural resources of the public land from fraud, waste and encroachment.

So much for what we are trying to do in utilizing our public lands for the public; in securing the use of the water, the forage, the coal and the timber for the public. In all four movements my chief adviser, and the man first to suggest to me the courses which have actually proved so beneficial, was Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the chief of the national forest service. Mr. Pinchot also suggested to me a movement supplementary to all of these movements; one which will itself lead the way in the general movement which he represents and with which he is actively identified, for the conservation of all our natural resources. This [illegible]

The inability of the railroads of the United States to meet the demands upon them has drawn public attention forcibly to the use of our waterways for transportation. But it is obvious that this is only one of their many uses, and that a planned and orderly development is impossible except by taking into account all the services they are capable of rendering. It was upon this ground that the inland waterways commission was recently appointed. Their duty is to propose a comprehensive plan for the improvement and utilization of those great waterways which are the great potential highways of the country. Their duty is also to bring together the points of view of all users of streams, and to submit a general plan for the development and conservation of the vast natural resources of the waterways of the United States. Clearly it is impossible for the waterways commission to accomplish its great task without considering the relation of streams to the conservation and use of all other natural resources, and I have asked that it do so. Here, then, for the first time, the orderly development and planned conservative use of all our natural resources is presented as a single problem. One by one the individual tasks in this great problem have already been undertaken. One by one in practical fashion the methods of dealing with them were worked out. National irrigation has proved itself a success by its actual working. Again, actual experience has shown that the national forests will fulfill the larger purpose for which they were created. All who have thoughtfully studied the subject have come to see that the solution of the public lands question lies with the home maker, with the settler who lives on his land and that government control of the mineral fuels and the public grazing lands is necessary and inevitable. Each of these conclusions represented a movement of vast importance which would confer large benefits upon the nation, but which stood by itself. They are connected together into one great fundamental problem—that of the conservation of all our natural resources. Upon the wise solution of this, much of our future obviously depends. Even such questions as the regulation of railway rates and the control of corporations are in reality subsidiary to the primal problem of the preservation in the interests of the whole people of the resources that nature has given us. If we fail to solve this problem, no skill in solving the others will in the end avail us very greatly.

Now as to the matter of taxation. Most great civilized countries have an income tax and an inheritance tax. In my judgment both should be part of our system of federal taxation. I speak diffidently about the income tax because one scheme for an income tax was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court by a five to four vote; and in addition it is a difficult tax to administer in its practical workings, and great care would have to be exercised to see that it was not evaded by the very man whom it is most desirable to have taxed, for if so evaded it would of course be worse than no tax at all, as the least desirable of all taxes is the tax which bears heavily upon the honest as compared with the dishonest man. Nevertheless, a graduated income tax of the proper type would be a desirable permanent feature of federal taxation, and I still hope that one may be devised which the supreme court will declare constitutional.

Inheritance Tax.

In my judgment, however, the inheritance tax is both a far better method of taxation, and far more important for the purpose I have in view—the purpose of having the swollen fortunes of the country bear in proportion to their size a constantly increasing burden of taxation. These fortunes exist solely because of the protection given the owners by the public. They are a constant source of care and anxiety to the public and it is eminently just that they should be forced to pay heavily for the protection given them. It is, of course, elementary that the nation has the absolute right to decide as to the terms upon which any man shall receive a bequest or devise from another. We have repeatedly placed such laws on our own statute books, and they have repeatedly been declared constitutional by the courts. I believe that the tax should contain the progressive principle. Whatever any individual receives, whether by gift, bequest, or devise, in life or in death, should, after a certain amount is reached, be increasingly burdened; and the rate of taxation should be increased in proportion to the remoteness of blood of the man receiving from the man giving or devising. The principle of this progressive taxation of inheritance has not only been authoritatively recognized by the legislation of congress, but it is now unequivocally adopted in the leading civilized nations of the world—in, for instance, Great Britain, France and Germany. Switzerland led off with the imposition of high progressive rates. Great Britain was the first of the great nations to follow suit, and within the last few years both France and Germany have adopted the principle. In Great Britain all estates worth $5,000 or less are practically exempt from death duties, while the increase is such that when an estate exceeds $5,000,000 in value and passes to a distant kinsman or stranger in blood the government receives nearly 18 per cent. In France, under the progressive system, so much of an inheritance as exceeds $10,000,000 pays over 20 per cent. to the state if it passes to a distant relative, and five per cent. if it passes to a direct heir. In Germany very small inheritance are exempt, but the tax is so sharply progressive that an inheritance not in agricultural or forest lands which exceeds $250,000, if it goes to distant relatives, is taxed at the rate of about 25 per cent. The German law is of special interest, because it makes the inheritance tax an imperial measure, while allotting to the individual states of the empire a portion of the proceeds and permitting them to impose taxes in addition to those imposed by the imperial government. In the United States the national government has more than once imposed inheritance taxes in addition to those imposed by the states, and in the last instance about one-half of the states levied such taxes concurrently with the national government, making a combined maximum rate, in some cases as high as 25 per cent.; and, as a matter of fact, several states adopted inheritance tax laws for the first time while the national law was still in force and unrepealed. The French law has one feature which is to be heartily commended. The progressive principle is so applied that each higher rate is imposed only on the excess above the amount subject to the next lower rate. This plan is peculiarly adapted to the working out of the theory of using the inheritance tax for the purpose of limiting the size of inheritable fortunes, since the progressive increase in the rates, according to this mode, may be carried to its logical conclusion in a maximum rate of nearly 100 per cent. for the amount in excess of a specified sum, without being confiscatory as to the rest of the inheritance; for each increase in rate would apply only to the amount above a certain [illegible]

FAILED IN SMALL THINGS.

Congressman Evidently Was No Hero to His Wife.

There is a certain congressman who, whatever authority he may hold in the councils of state, is of comparatively minor importance in his own household. Indeed, it has been unkindly intimated that his wife is "the whole thing" in their establishment.

Representative and Mrs. Blank had been to Baltimore one afternoon. When they left the train at Washington, on their return, Mrs. Blank discovered that her umbrella, which had been intrusted to the care of her husband, was missing.

"Where's my umbrella?" she demanded.

"I'm afraid I've forgotten it, my dear," meekly answered the congressman. "It must still be in the train."

"In the train!" snorted the lady. "And to think that the affairs of the nation are intrusted to a man who doesn't know enough to take care of a woman's umbrella!"—Success Magazine.

PURIFIED LIFE INSURANCE.

Benefits from New Law, Which Remains Substantially Unchanged.

Through the influence of Gov. Hughes, the New York Legislature decided to make no radical changes in the new insurance law. It was pointed out by Gov. Hughes that the New York law has already accomplished widespread reforms, with proportionate benefits to policyholders, and that it should be given a thorough trial before any amendments were seriously considered. It is estimated that the cost of the mismanagement of the past did not average more than 20 cents to each policyholder, while the benefits to present and future policyholders will amount to many times more and be cumulative besides. The speed craze of the big companies and the excessive cost of securing new business was the most extravagant evil of the old managements. Under the new regime the cost of new business has already been greatly reduced, along with other economies.

The showing made by the Equitable Life Assurance Society in its report for 1906 was a strong argument against meddling with the new law. In the Equitable alone there was a saving of over $2,000,000 in expenses, besides an increase in the income from the Society's assets amounting to as much more. The ratios of the Equitable's total expenses to its total income was 19.42% in 1904, 17.38% in 1905, and only 14.48% in 1906. The dividends paid to Equitable policyholders in 1906 amounted to $7,289,734, which was an increase of more than 9% over 1905.

While the Equitable made a better showing than any other big company, all reported radical economies and under such conditions the Legislature wisely decided to leave the law substantially as it stands.

Forgetting Something.

When the train that conveyed President Roosevelt through Virginia on his last trip south stopped at Charlottesville, a negro approached the president's car and passed aboard a big basketful of fine fruit, to which was attached the card of a prominent grower.

In course of time the orchardist received a letter of acknowledgment from the White House expressing the president's appreciation of the gift, and complimenting the donor upon his fruit. The recipient of the letter was, of course, greatly pleased, and, feeling sure that his head gardener would be much interested in the letter, he read it to him. The darky who served in the capacity mentioned listened gravely, but his only comment was:

"He doan' say nothin' 'bout sendin' back de basket, do he?"—Success Magazine.

The Camera Fiend's Wanderlust.

As the sun day by day ascends the heavens and the actinic value of his light increases, rhapsodizes the editor of the American Amateur Photographer, there seizes us once more the fervor of the enthusiast. From the high shelf down comes the camera, the plate holders are loaded, and we tramp across the green fields looking for pictures—or pretending to. For half the cause of our wandering has naught to do with the black box we carry with us. The primitive instinct for change, the ancestral wanderlust, it is, that has seized us and driven us forth to nature.

WENT TO TEA

And It Wound Her Bobbin.

Tea drinking frequently effects people as badly as coffee. A lady in Salisbury, Md., says that she was compelled to abandon the use of coffee a good many years ago, because it threatened to ruin her health and that she went over to tea drinking, but finally, she had dyspepsia so bad that she had lost twenty-five pounds and no food seemed to agree with her.

She further says: "At this time I was induced to take up the famous food drink, Postum, and was so much pleased with the results that I have never been without it since. I commenced to improve at once, regained my twenty-five pounds of flesh and went some beyond my usual weight.

"I know Postum to be good, pure, and healthful, and there never was an article, and never will be, I believe, that does so surely take the place of coffee, as Postum Food Coffee. The beauty of it all is that it is satisfying and wonderfully nourishing. I feel as if I could not sing its praises too loud." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

EXPERT ADVICE ON EATING.

Authorities Tell Us What Foods We Should Consume and Avoid.

Cicero told us long ago that we should eat to live, not live to eat, and Prof. Gautier, of Paris, amplifies that wise pronouncement in the course of a very interesting article on "How We Ought to Eat." The professor is the sworn enemy of all culinary artifices the object of which is to stimulate taste, excite the appetite and induce a man to eat without hunger and drink without thirst.

These, he says, are prejudicial to the maintenance of health. When one has an appetite for plain bread, vegetables or meat unmodified by any seasoning then and then only can one be said to be really hungry. Another paternal recommendation which the professor makes is the old advice of our grandmothers, that we should always leave the table with a slight sensation of hunger not entirely appeased.

It appears that we lose every day from 85 to 100 grams of albuminoids, corresponding to 420 or 550 grams of muscular flesh or analogous tissue. An inhabitant of Paris, for instance, recuperates on the average to the extent of 102 or 103 grams a day.

As a guide to what we should eat the professor tells us that the best meat is that of animals fattened on pasture land—beef and mutton. Then comes poultry and pork fed on products of a vegetable origin, whether grain or herbaceous.

One should always avoid the flesh of animals fattened to excess on muscular flesh and also, to a certain extent, that of animals which are too young. Veal is not good for either gouty or arthritic people. It is not recommended for people with fragile, irritable, eruptive skin.

Fish, excellent in itself when it is quite fresh, is easy to digest, but it is not suitable to eczematous persons or those who have any other skin disease. Black meats or game excite the kidneys, predispose to gravel, to hepatic congestions and to arterio-sclerosis. One may live absolutely without meat; one can not do without vegetable aliments.

Prof. Gautier deprecates all exaggerations and sums up as follows: Boil your drinking water when an epidemic is raging; boil milk, cook beefsteaks sufficiently and sleep peacefully. A cup of light and savory smelling bouillon, a slice of roast beef properly cooked, a small glass of Bordeaux and even of Burgundy never killed anyone.

Eat with regularity and in accordance with the demands of hunger such dishes as have always been regarded as innocuous and remember that, as a rule, it is neither meats nor bouillon nor wine nor spices nor coffee which poison us, but their abuse.

DESIRE FOR A CHANGE.

A Childish Trait That Clings to Us in Later Years.

"When we were children," said the head of a big department store, "do you remember how delighted we were with new toys and how quickly we tired of them? I don't suppose that we tired of them quite so quickly as the children do nowadays, for we didn't have quite so many of them. But tire of what we had we did: it's only human nature, you know, to regard a thing as of diminishing importance when once it is in our possession.

"The application of what I'm saying is in relation to the same trait as shown by men and women. A trait which in my business life I've had plenty of opportunities to study. It's all a fallacy about our growing up in every way; there are lots of childish things that we don't outgrow, and never will, and this getting tired of toys is one of them. The toys change, that's all. One of the secrets of establishing successful trade is recognition of this fact. People don't want novelties so much because they are novelties as because a change is welcome, whether in wearing apparel, articles of ornament, house furnishings, or means of conveyance.

"I hate to think what will happen to the automobile business when airships come in. When we are used to a thing, we can't get in the least excited about it, and pleasurable excitement, I think, is what most of us young and old are after in this day and generation. I don't know that, in the last analysis, we are very much worse than our ancestors in this particular, but this age moves more rapidly than any previous one, and naturally, we show the effects. We simply have more chances to be off with the old and on with the new, and it's come to be a point of honor to avail ourselves of these chances up to the limit of our purses."

Treasure Trove in France.

A remarkable case of treasure trove has been reported to the French treasury. The find consisted of two large sacks of French crowns of the reigns of Louis XIII. and XIV. They had been brought to light in the course of some excavations carried out in the barracks at Romarantin. They are believed to have been buried underground for security during the wars and the famine that desolated France in the closing years of the Grand Monarque. The oldest date about 260 years back.

Secretary Taft made a big impress on the citizens of Minnesota on his visit to St. Paul last week, and he ought to, as he is big enough to fill the presidential chair.

This is the time of year that congressman Steenerson, is kept pretty husy addressing public meetings. He spoko at the Firemens Tounerment at Red Lake Falls Wednesday.

Old Rochefeller has got control of all the oil, and now he is trying to huy all tho land that joins him, better hlow in a quater for a years subscription to Appeal to Reason old mar.

The time for working roads is about here. Let every man do his duty when he goes on the road to work, and tako an interest in trying to do some labor to improve the conditions for traveling through the country

The agricultural society are out with their premium list for their sixth annui fair to be held at Thief River Falls August 7, 8, and 9th. We hope to see the farmers of the eastern part of the county take an interest in this fair and display some of there products While the season is late this year you should remember that it was as late in other parts of the county as it was in this part.

The man that will use a wart on the back of his neck for a collar button to save the expense of buying one is not in it for stiugy meaness, with a bachelor that will come up on this reservation take a claim, for speculation, prove it up as soon as he can, and get out of the country, then make an application to tho hoard of county commissioners to get set out of a school district because his neighbors who are staying in the country, and improving and building it up have built a school house to educate their children, and he don't want to pay his share of the taxes to help pay for it. We have a fow men of that class up in this country, but we hope to see our county commissioners look into these cases and hold the bachelor that took land for specnlation to his share of the taxes in his own school district.

To The Legal Voters Of Red Lake County:

Notice is hereby given, that a petition is on file in my office, signed by legal voters of said County to the nnmber of two thousand three hundred and forty two praying that the county seat of said county of Red Lake be changed to the City of Thief River Falls in said county, and that a special meeting of the county board will be held at the court house in the city of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake County, Minnesota, on Monday, the 1st day of July, A.D. 1907, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, to consider said petition, at which time and place any legal voter of said county may appear, in person or by counsel, and be heard.

Mr. Sunbeam.

Ay just kome home from Tief Rivey Falls where ay have heen visiting my old nabor Yon Yonson, and ay had prett good fun, foi all the feller ay meet say: kum have a drink or segar.

So ay ask my old nabor Yon; what make them fellers feel so good? Oh he say they nst got np petition to move county seat up here and build big court house.

Vell that neigt ven Yonson and ay kome up to saloon ve sit dare and hear them fellers taike about what good schem they vorke so as to get hig price for big court house and make all other land worth more. Then one feller say; that been the finest scheme ay ever see to lay it on to Red Lake Falls stealing the petiton so ve could get the farmers to sign new one to move county seat and ve not have to give them a court house same ve did two yar ago, How did they vork it? Then the other feller vink and lauht, and say. Oh that been easey nonght; you see Yon Eastman vill put any ting in his paper, so ve had him put it in paper that Red Lake Falls stole the petition and den all our fellers tell the farmers that they red in paper that Red Lake Falls stole petition. so ve got rid of the old ting and our promis to furnish court house for ten years and got up a new petition to move the county seat righ here on dis section, den you vill see that the county vill have to build new court house and pay vot the land is worth in Tief River Falls to build it on. Then he vink and laff; just so hard so hi n could.

Den oder feller say.; Better you look out for if the farmers find dis out some of dem vill take their name off from the petition. Then oder feller vink and laugh and say; Dey vont find it out nntil after they vote then they vill find out. Some farmers asked about dis when ve wanted hin to sign petition, but we always say; It been all rigt; just sign petion and give us a chance to vote ve vill fix dat all right. You bet ve vill.; Ve vill get de county seat and Red Lake county vill get the yob to build a new court house and pay good for land to put it on.

Then other feller say; better look out vat you say; who been them fellers ove dare?

Den he vink and laugh and say: Oh that been a couple of Norwegin farmers from the Reservation what nnderstoyost enought to sigh a petiton-and pay taxes.

Vell ay could hear no more; for my old nabor Yon begin to laff and the longer he laughed the worst he got, until he got vind enoug to sog to me in Norwegin:. Due Ole., Due hear dot? Den he commenced to laff more, then them fellers look at us a little and skip out quick,

Den Yon say; now Ole ay not like to have you write about this for ay like to have county seat np here, and ay say, but Ole Olson vill tell his old nabors on the Reservation about this scheme you bet. So here it is.

From your old friend!

Ole O. Olson.

We have published the above at the special request of our old friend Ole, who was offended by the estimation he was held in by the gentelmen in their conversation, and by the way that is what made Johnson laugh so, for he undonhtly see by Olies eye that them fellows had something comming.—Ed.

Alfred Swanson, John and Dan Sullivan were out rowing on the Red Lake River Wednesday evening.

G. Swanson of Deer Park and Herman Jones made this office a pleasent call Wednesday evening.

The new Highlanding Sunbeam steam boat will be ready to start running on the river in about two weeks.

Edward Singer who has been absent up in Canada for the past two months, is expected home next week.

Charles Clark is building a new barn to keep stage horses in when he starts carrying mail next month.

E. L. Witterman from Gully has bought an interest in the Plummer livery barn, and will move down there and start in business.

Miss Kuehnel will move the post office one mile further west soon, so as to be a little further away from Jacobsoc and a little nearer Jenson.

How about Jim O'Brien continueing as president of the Red Lake River Transportation Company, with the record he has against him?

J. W. Vrolson is going to put in a new store at Highlanding. He will start building as soon as he can get the lumber up by boat from Thief River Falls.

The Clearwater creamery appears to be in a prosperous condition this summer, and the farmers down that way will make a good profit on their cows this season.

The Red Lake River Transportation Company held a business meeting at the school house on last Saturday evening and will hold another one next Saturday evening commencing at 8 o'clock

Joseph Duchamp has taken an active interest in the farmers boat company and has taken more shares than any other one man for the company, and we certainly give Mr. Duchamp credit for being a hustler.

J. W. Walker was down to Plummer on Friday last, and took out license on his stallion "Dake." The license was promptly issued on examination as Dake would pass as first class in any part of the state, and our farmers are fortunate in having such a good horse in this locality

Ray Arndt, P. C. Wold, and A Eve went to Crookston Monday, where Mr. Arndt made final proof on his homestead, before the U. S. Land office Tuesday. They were accompanied as far as Thief River Falls by Mrs. Henry Arndt and Miss Ida Arndt, all returning home Wednesday.

A man that crossed the river at Parin's place on his way from Kratka last week reports that he heard a strange noise in the brush beside the road, and on investigation he saw a man with his head in an old fursenes, several hollering "James J. O'Brien, President of the Red Lake River Transportation Co."

Plummer now has a physician and surgeon, Dr. R. Clark having located there. They also have a newspaper, and the Clearwater Mercantile Co. will open up a general store there next week. Then they have "Sunny Brook John," where they can buy all kinds of liquid refreshments and thats all.

The Clearwater creamery received last week 7050 lbs. of cream.

OUR SCHOOL.

We received word from county superintendent McAnulty last week that the report of our school was correct and this means that we will get the state aid granted to rural schools, that have complied with all the requirements of the law This district has had eight months school the past school year, taught by a teacher with a first grade certificate and have a full library and text books required by the state law, and have complied with all other requirements of a rural school.

We feel justly proud of this as it shows that the people that settled on this reservation, are taking an interest in educating their children, and although it has placed the district a little behind on the start, yet it will now start on the road to recovery, as we have everything in fine condition and the expense out side of teachers wages will be very light for a number of years.

Some of the bachelors living on the outer circle of the district who took land for speculation and proved it up have showed a disposition to dodge out of the district and get into an other one but we shall make it our special duty to look after cases of this kind, and see to it that they stand right up to the rack and take their medicine. We had an attendance of 23 scholars in our school, whose parents are living here and building up the country to raise the price of their land, while they have gone back to some older settled part of the state to sit down and wait until we do it, but we are going to have school for the children and their fathers land will stay in District No. 37 and help pay the taxes, and when one of them gets out we will be right on deck before the board of County Commissioners to find out what they get out for.

LOVE AND A CAT

By Arthur Chamberlain

[Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.]

Pickham entered his bachelor apartments with a sigh of satisfaction. He had been a hard day at the office and he was particularly glad to get away by himself. He turned on the electric light, hung up his overcoat and hat, while visions of his cushioned easy chair beckoned him delightfully. There it stood, wooing him to its arms, and in it—Pickham's expression change; there, on its sacred cushion, lay a huge Maltese cat!

Pickham disliked cats. "Scat!" he said, sharply, with a fierce gesture. The cat opened its sleepy eyes and stared at him, rolled over on its back and, after apparently trying to stand on its head, went to sleep again.

It was simple enough to call the janitor, but Pickham felt that it would be a little absurd. Surely, he ought to be able to drive a cat out of his room without calling for help! He went softly up to the chair and reaching down took a gingerly hold on two corners of the loose cushion and, raised the cushion and slid the cat to the floor. "Scat!" he said again.

The cat deigned one glance at Pickham, stood up on all fours, gave a tremendous bunch to its back and such a gape that Pickham shivered, and stretched itself full length on its side on the big Turkish rug, while the end of its tail flapped lazily for a few seconds before it dropped flat. The cat was asleep.

Pickham rammed his hands into his pockets and glared down at the cat. Regarded simply as a cat, the animal was not objectionable. Its fur was a smooth sable gray; it had a plump, well-fed, prosperous air; moreover; in its present position Pickham could see that it was over a yard long. He would rather have taken up a baby than the cat—and he was not partial to babies.

He turned the chair-cushion over, to avoid possible hairs, and sat down. The cat was doing no harm, at least; and the simplest solution of the problem seemed to be to wait for the cat to wake up, when it might be lured into the corridor. Pickham gazed down at the cat—it was a magnificent specimen—and somethhat seemed to stir within him at the suggestion of companionship.

Pickham was in his thirties, and had spent the last 15 years in building up a profitable business; it had been an absorbing occupation, and aether cats nor women had taken his attention from it. Now, as he looked at the contented cat, stretched out upon the rug, he suddenly began to feel domestic.

A nice girl on the other side of the rug, with the cat between them—it really might be worth while. Pickham felt a sudden pang of loneliness. He glanced about his comfortable bachelor quarters, and they struck him for the first time as rather dreary. The furniture seemed angular and heavy; the effect was that of the interior decorator's exhibit in a shop window. He wondered how it would seem to have a workbasket, a reverse library table, or a woman's cloak that hung on a peg in the dining-room where he took his hat? He just back of its owner, who sat opposite to him. He remembered that one rainy day he had come home the owner hurrying along without an umbrella and had escorted her under his to the dining-room. He thought a little thinking how he had taken it all as a matter of course. Since then she had never slipped into her seat at breakfast without a little blush and a shy "good morning." Pickham suddenly reflected that he would miss that "good morning."

Just here something rubbed against Pickham's trousers-leg. He glanced down. The cat had waked up at last, and was evidently trying to attract his attention.

Pickham's feeling toward the cat being a good deal softened, he said: "Poor puss!" and hopefully opened the hall door. The cat did not budge; it merely lay back its head and cried "Meow!" with a somewhat strenuous pitch. Pickham left the door open and walked slowly back to the cat, who sat down, curved its tail about its forepaws and gazed steadily and expectantly at Pickham. It had all the grace and dignity of an assured social position, and Pickham almost blushed to think that he should have said "Scat!" to such a spontaneously animal. Nevertheless it was plain that the cat was not to be trifled with, and as Pickham gazed down at it it resolutely, the cat stood up, gave Pickham a severe glance, and again cried "Meow!"—this time with sharp imperiousness; and not daigning further remarks walked over to the closet door.

A light dawned upon Pickham; he opened the closet and took a jar of milk from the little refrigerator, and pouring a saucerful, set it down by the cat, who lapped it up expeditiously. When the last drop was gone, the cat purred contentedly, and as Pickham stooped to take up the saucer the cat rolled over on its back and, stretching out its head, intimated, as plainly as a cat could, that it would like to be petted. "Poor pussy!" said Pickham again, venturing, somewhat timorously, to scratch its head.

"Why, kitty!"

Pickham jumped up hastily and glanced at the still open door. A young woman was standing there, beaming with satisfaction, and he recognized his vis-a-vis at the boarding-house ahio. The cat, meanwhile, had mndo his way sedately across the room and was now rubbing himself against the girl's skirt.

"Please excuso me!" cried tha girl, stooping down to stroko the cat, "but I was so surprised! I've bed such a hust for him! You had cat!" The cat merely rubbed a little harder, purring vigorously. "He must have sacnked in with the janitor," went on the girl, "and you have been so kind to him! You've given him a great saucer of milk. Some men would have driven him out at once—but I never could like a man who wasn't fond of cats!"

"I—I—" stammered Pickham. "It's rethar a remarkable cat, don't you think? So—er—self-possessed?"

The girl's eyes twinkled, yet she answered soberly: "Kitty's been a great pet; he's never been struck and he just purrs when I scold him; so I dere say it isn't easy to frighten him. I don't believe he'd mind 'Scat' a bit."

"No," replied Pickham. "—that is—"

"Come, kitty!" said the girl, with a little blush, as if she felt that it was time to withdraw. "Good evening, and thank you," she said, and the door closed behind her. After a moment of indecision, Pickham opened the door and hurried down the corridor.

"Purdon me," he said, overtaking the girl, "but I wanted to tell you that I haven't cared for cats until this evening. Your cat converted me, I think. I don't want to be a bachelor; I'd like to be better acquainted with—with your cat."

The girl regarded Pickham steadily, while the cat nosed ingratiatingly at Pickham's boots.

"I though," remarked the girl, meditatively, "that I heard some one

"Thank You!" Said Pickham, Hastily. "I Shall Certainly Call."

say 'Scat!' earlier in the evening, but perhaps it was the janitor, or I was dreaming."

Pickham flushed, but he stood his ground. "I said 'Scat!' And now I'm asking the privilege of better acquaintance. Doesn't that show what a nice girl—a nice cat—can do for a man?"

The girl reflected. "If it is necessary to your hap—your preservance as well-doing—to know Marmaduke Stanford better, you may call upon him at suite 46, upper floor. He lives there with my mother and myself—my name is Stanford," she added.

"Thank you!" said Pickham, hearitly. "I shall certainly call."

"On the cat," amended Miss Stanford.

"Certainly," agreed Pickham, cheerfully. "On the cat."

Marmaduke, who had been looking somewhat bored, trotted over to the wall, pretending to have found a mousehole. "Good night," said Miss Stanford. "Come, kitty!" Marmaduke dawdled after her down the corridor, while Pickham watched until the waving tip of the cat's tail disappeared in the dusk.

Once back in his room, Pickham waited impatiently to the telephone and called up the fashionable florist. "Two dozen pink Mermeta," he ordered. "Send them to 1148 South Ninety-first street, suite 46. Name? Oh—er—Stanford. Good—hold on! Have you got any catnip? Yes, catnip! Ca-t-n-i-p! Fresh? All right, send a—a couple of pounds with those—yes! a couple of pounds! That's what I said. Good-by. To think," mused Pickham, "that I almost forgot the cat!"

To Observe Sea Gardens.

A glass tower resting on the bottom of the ocean 30 feet below the surface and extending up into the open air is to be built at Long Beach, Cal. The shaft will be constructed almost entirely of heavy plate glass with a glass room 13 feet square at the bottom reached by an elevator. This will give visitors an opportunity to observe the wonderful sea gardens.

Starts on Long Canoe Trip.

Ernest Thompson Seton has started canoetheasterly from Edmonton for a 1,000-mile canoe trip in Canada, with the barren lands beyond Great Slave lake as his destination. He has a companion and the trip will take six months.

Novelties in White Blouses

There are several novelties presented in white blouses, but most of the more attractive of these new models show dainty touches of hand work, which serve to give the blouse its distinction. For wear with tailored costumes, simple little dimity waists made to fasten down the middle of the front and with plenty of fullness, achieved by the use of fine hand-run tucks, finished with a pleat of fullness, caught in at the waist and the cuffs being scalloped and trimmed with a frill.

The first blouse sketched shows the introduction of color; this model having the yoke in the back and front embroidered in polka dots in graduated sizes, the yoke sections on each side and the cuffs being scalloped and embroidered to match.

The second blouse is intended for more dressy occasions and is of mercerized mull rather oddly cut about the yoke in little square tabs which are carried out in the sleeve decoration. Over the middle of the tumes, simple little dimity waists made to fasten down the middle of the front and with plenty of fullness, achieved by the use of fine hand-run tucks, finished with a pleat of fullness, caught in at the waist and the cuffs being scalloped and trimmed with a frill of embroidery to yoke depth, are very smart when worn with one of the detachable pleited frills.

The first blouse sketched shows the introduction of color; this model having the yoke in the back and front embroidered in polka dots in graduated sizes, the yoke sections on each side and the cuffs being scalloped and embroidered to match.

The second blouse is intended for more dressy occasions and is of mercerized mull rather oddly cut about the yoke in little square tabs which are carried out in the sleeve decoration. Over the middle of the finely button-holed down over an underfold section down the middle of the lace insertion and medallions and a design in hand embroidery were used as further trimming, the yoke being of fine silver Valenciennes and Cluny beading.

The third blouse pictured was of white cross-barred batiste made with a strip of fine batiste embroidery, this strip being edged with plaited frills of the batiste and with Valenciennes lace. Most of these blouses are worn with stiff turndown collars and little lace or silk ties.

DON'TS FOR THE HAIR.

Proper Care of Tresses That Will Be Well Repaid.

Don't forget to have the hair thoroughly cut and singed every three months. It is not sufficient to have the long hair clipped. But special attention should be paid to the weak new hairs that spring up along the central parthings.

Don't forget to brush the hair for ten minutes every night with a white bone bristle brush. This may make the head a little slender at first, but the tenderness soon wears off.

Don't wear pads or additional tails of hair and curls, unless absolutely necessary. Anything that prevents light and air getting to the roots of the hair is extremely bad.

Don't attempt to restore gray or faded hair yourself. It is best to leave it entirely alone. If dyeing is desirable, have it done by skilled hands.

Don't have the combings of five or six years ago made up as hair pieces as to color and texture that the tail is sure not to match. Rather buy a new switch to supplement nature's scanty locks, says Home Chat.

Don't use cheap hairpins or combs. They are so liable to drag and break the hair.

Potpourri.

A potpourri requires careful mixing, no one scent predominating unduly, the strongest being used in the smallest proportion. From your gardens you may gather as they bloom roses, violets, jasmine, geranium, pinks, sweet lavender flowers, lemon thyme, sweet marjoram, rosemary bay, red pinks, carnations, scented leaves of mint, sweet-scented myrtle leaves, sage, syringa flowers, woodruff, lemon verbena, tube roses, honeysuckle and every other flower or leaf of lasting fragrance. The old-fashioned cabbage, Provence's the damask and moss roses are the sweetest. Gather the roses on a sunny day and pull the petals apart, and when well dried or moldy ones, spread out on a tray or newspaper to dry in the sun, add to each other fragrant flowers, herbs, aromatic leaves and lavender. When dry have some bay salt, and place alternately layers of the dried flowers and leaves in a jar strewing each layer with the salt. This will form the "stock" of your sweet pot, and add to it in due proportion powdered orris root, gum benzoin and any of the spices, and essential oils and perfumes.—Boston Housekeeper.

Pretty Cushions.

The prettiest of cushions can be made with soft white poues embroidered with soft riches. On the cover sew little silk medallions and work daisy petals around the round disk. The soft ribbons one-eighth of an inch wide in the crepe effect are best for this purpose and it takes but comparatively little work to make a very elaborate cushion top. Colored ribbons are pretty and a huge bunch of chrysanthemums can be worked on the top, making each flower a different color.

A Novel Coat.

Summer coats we must have nowadays, however useless they may prove for warmth or service. The Frenchiest and most original one that has yet been shown is made an almost exact counterpart of one of Madame Butterfly's costumes; but instead of soft satiin the dark grey ground is of shiny chiffon. This is fairly covered with an exquisite design in palest gray embroidery. The gown over which it is supposed to be worn is of pale gray chiffon cloth, matching the embroidery.

On Summer Hats.

The intermingling of flowers in contrasting color is a charming treatment for summer hats when the colors are chosen with discrimination. Dark purple roses combine nicely with a few sprays of white jasmine. Clusters of gardenias look well with Neapolitan violets, and another favorite combination is of hyacinths mixed with small bunches of lovely rose red rosebuds.

THE YOUNG MARRIED WOMAN.

Sometimes Too Apt to Confide Others' Secrets to Her Husband.

The young married woman is very apt to forget that she has no right to tell her husband the secrets of others.

So she goes to him with the stories of her friends' private and joys, while it is wrong to tell them to him, and he is a bit apt to laugh, and, it is just possible, repeat them to others.

This may not happen, but it is very apt to do so.

When a girl is married she, to a great extent, loses her interest, and sometimes loyalty to her girl friends.

Then, too, what Harry or Tom says is bound to overshadow just what one little woman would conclude and so the girl with confidences to give is not receiving what she thinks she is.

The girl who thinks she needs a confidante would be wise to give a thought to this side of the question, before helag too liberal with her secrets.

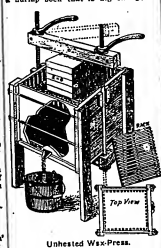
Trimmed Skirt Fashionable.

Trimmed skirts are fashionable, but the trimming is almost all about the end of the skirt in wide bands. If the material is heavy, as silk or cloth, then embroidery, lace or tnile forms the principal trimming, but in chiffon, net and all the gauzes a wide band of silk or satin at the feet, headed by a narrow band further up on the skirt, gives an attractive finish, besides protecting the sheer material to an enormous extent. Sometimes the band is of one silk all quite plain and again it is embroidered or finished with scalloped edges, and it may be the same width all around or gradnated toward the hock so as to keep the top of the silk the same distance from the floor all around. This plain band of silk or satiis is not restricted to the chiffon and lace gowns, but is also employed on afternoon dresses of cloth and voile.

Cloth Suit Underskirt.

With the same kind of skirt in view that has been fashionable now for some three or four years back, the underskirt or lining in a cloth suit is being matched anew at the hem and perhaps down a few inches along the seams, for the material is found to have better if left loose and then it is always better to have the added flounces of the lining outside the silk rather than under the hem of the petticoat.

FETE GOWN OF PINK.



With pink taffeta coat, braided with pink and white silk, and worn with a white embroidered mull dotted with pink, showing flounces of lace caught by pink ribbon bows and loaves. Pink satin girdle.

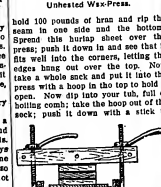
AN UNHEATED WAX-PRESS.



How to Construct Such a Press Entirely of Wood.

The drawings shown herewith make the construction of my wax-press plain writes a correspondent of Gleanings in Bee Culture. To begin rendering wax, first put the cleated rack into the bottom of the press. Take a burlap sack that is big enough to hold 100 pounds of bran and rip the seam in one side and the bottom. Spread this burlap sheet over the press; push it down in and see that it fits well into the corners, letting the edges hang out over the top. Now take a whole sack and put it into the press with a hoop in the top to hold it open. Now shovel your tub full of boiling comb; take the hoop out of the sack; push it down with a stick to make it fit on the bottom and in the corners. Hold up the mouth of the sack and the sheet over it. Put the follower on, with the blocks in top. Swing the cross-bar over and push the screw up through the hole in it. Put on the handle and turn both handles down, one at a time.

After the wax is pressed out, take off one handle; let the screw slip down even with the top of the press and unfold the first burlap so it hangs over edges. Now get hold of the top of the sack and pull it up some so it can cool a little. Then empty out the steaming mass, put the sack back and fill it again as before.

To boil the comb, use a four-hole stove with all the lids off. Put on a big tub containing two buckets of water, and add the comb as it boils, until the tub is nearly full. The water and free wax flow out of the press immediately, leaving only the slumgum to press.

HELP FOWLS TO LAY.

The Reasons Why Green Bone Makes Eggs.

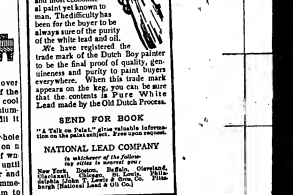
It is not enough that a given food contain a certain per cent. of lime or a certain per cent. of phosphates; it must also be decided whether these different chemicals can be assimilated by the hen. Dation, who is indisputable authority, says: "It is well known that inorganic substances, although they afford the necessary material for vegetation, are not sufficient for the nourishment of animals, which depend for their support upon elements already combined in the organic form, by the action of the sun's rays and plant life."

That market bones produce wonderful results when fed to poultry is indisputable. The lean meat and gristle form the white of the egg and about 16 per cent. of the yolk. The marrow and other fat on the bones supply the remainder of the yolk.

The lime phosphates in the bone yield all the necessary lime, salts for the shell and the necessary phosphates for the interior of the egg. When it is considered that all the above substances are found in green bone in a specially digestible condition, far more so than any food supplied by dry meat, corn or wheat, is it surprising that such glowing reports are so often heard about this new food for poultry?

With modern machinery obtainable on easy terms, poultry men should feed more liberally of green cut bone, especially to pullets and cockerels during the cold winter months when other lime food is hard to find.

HEALTH NOTES FOR JUNE.



Spring Catarrh is a well defined Spring disease. The usual symptoms are given above. A Bottle of Pe-ru-na taken in time will promptly arrest the course of the disease known as Spring Catarrh.

Lins Up for Land.

Duluth.—Although the next land opening at the local office will not take place for three weeks, a line already has been started. Anton Daskari was the first man to take up his position in front of the office. A companion of Daskari, who has been investigating the land, returned today in time to take the second place in the line.

The land which will be opened for settlement July 1 includes 2,000 acres of ceded Chippewa Indian lands in the Fon du Lac reservation. Although there is land for about twelve claims. Some of the land is said to be fine agricultural land and it is likely that before the three weeks are up a half a hundred or more applicants will be in line awaiting a chance to file.

Postoffice Robbed.

Twin Valley.—Robbers broke into the postoffice and blew open the safe, getting away with several hundred dollars worth of stamps.

The robbers scoured an entrance to the office by breaking the glass in the top part of the back door, which enabled them to put an arm into the aperture and draw the bolts and also turn the knob of a Yale lock which reinforced the donhle bolt. Using a sledge hammer and a chisel which they secured from a neighboring blacksmith shop, they knocked the dial off the safe, and inserted gunpowder. This was touched off with a fuse and the outer shell of the door was forced off. It was an easy matter to pry open the inner shell that was left, and the contents of the safe, consisting of several hundred dollars' worth of stamps and a small amount of change was taken.

Receipts From State Institutions.

St. Paul.—Receipts from the state penal and charitable institutions for May amounting to $52,903.05 have been received by the state auditor, and include the money of 1,410 inmates, as provided under the new laws. The individual receipts follow: Anoka asylum, $1,410.09; Hastings asylum, $1,501.33; Fergus Falls hospital, $3,830.05; Rochester hospital, $4,-585.27; St. Peter hospital, $2,046.82; Fairbault school for the feeble-minded, $4,747.77; Owatonna state public school, $4,182.25; Red Wing training school, $647.82; state prison at Stillwater, $21,199.74; twine receipts, $11,-073.01.

The actual receipts from the various institutions amounted to $25,495,-30, and the money belonging to the inmates totaled $27,412.83.

Mayors Must Enforce the Laws.

St. Paul.—Attorney General E. T. Young has won the St. Cloud "hid" case in the supreme court. A decision by Justice Brown was filed affirming the lower court in the quo warranto action against J. E. C. Robinson, former mayor of St. Cloud.

The decision holds that any mayor is under obligation to see that state laws are enforced. It is his duty, the attorney general may sue for civil damages, and may also bring proceedings to have the mayor ousted from office.

The Robinson case was appealed on a demurrer and will now go back to the lower court for trial. Only the civil case will be tried, as Robinson's term as mayor has expired. He is now a member of the state senate.

Aeronaut is Drowned.

Granito Falls.—Entangled in the ropes of his parachute, John Pregone, an aeronaut of Utica, N. Y., met death by drowning in the Minnesota river near this city.

Pregone, who was employed by a carnival company made the ascension at 5 o'clock in the evening. The wind quickly carried the balloon up the river, and when he had traversed about half a mile the aeronaut detached his parachute.

In some unexplained manner his arms and legs became entangled in the ropes, and when the parachute struck the water he was unable to save himself. The body was recovered later.

Pioneer Mason Dies.

Minneapolis.—Maj. Thomas Montgomery, grand secretary of the Minnesota grand lodge of Masons, died at St. Luke's hospital after a short illness.

Maj. Mason was born in Mount-Charles, Donegal county, Ireland, on June 4, 1841, and came with his parents to Minnesota in 1856. He enlisted in the Seventh regiment, Minnesota volunteer infantry, in August, 1861, and served through the Indian and Civil wars. He was appointed in 1868 grand secretary of the grand lodge, A. F. and A. M., and has been elected to that office each successive year.

Fall From a Train.

Hanley Falls.—George Lows of Cottonwood, returning from a ball game at Granite on the night train on the Great Northern, stepped off on the platform space, falling twenty-five feet, narrowly missing a rock pile on the river's edge. He thought the train was at the station when in fact it had stopped for a crossing and his coach was on the bridge crossing Yellow Medicine river. He was not discovered until late the next morning. Several broken ribs and internal injuries may result fatally.

New Experimental Farm.

St. Paul.—Minnesota is to have an experimental fruit farm, where work similar to that conducted in California by Luther Burbank may be carried on. The last legislature provided an appropriation of $15,000 to buy land, with a suitable maintenance fund, and those interested are looking for a place where the farm may be located. Two or three sites have been looked at, but none has yet been selected.

The land, which is to consist of a quarter section, is to be purchased by a board of regents of the state university, with the approval of the horticultural society. It will have to be located at some place not far from the Twin Cities, so that it may be accessible for supervision.

Changes in State Fair Officials.

Hamline.—C. N. Cosgrove, of La Sueur, was elected secretary of the Minnesota State Agricultural society, succeeding E. W. Randall. The whole official list of the organization affected by the resignation of Mr. Randall was made up at a meeting of the board of managers at the fair grounds.

B. F. Nelson, of Minneapolis, who has been first vice president, was made president in the place of Mr. Cosgrove, who resigned to become secretary. C. M. Griggs, of St. Paul, second vice president, was put up to first vice president, while J. J. Furlong, of Austin, was appointed second vice president.

Five Second High

St. Paul.—Five contestants tied for first place in the hand separator class in the June butter scoring contest conducted by the state dairy and food department. The final winner in this class will come as the result of a series of six of the monthly contests. The June winners had a score of 94, and those were: F. G. Weis, Pridham; Wm. Maberry, Wadena; Gus Krumpel, La Moure, N. D.; W. E. Thompson, Wayzata and P. G. Wohlhuter, Fairmont.

Burned by Varnish.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. M. Krouth, living at St. Anthony Park, was serious-ly burned at her home. A can of varnish which she had placed on the stove exploded and caught fire. Mrs. Krouth's clothing became ignited and before neighbors, to whom she screamed for help, could extinguish the flames, she was badly burned.

NEWS NOTES.

Winona.—Herman Richter, a tailor' committed suicide while alone in his shop by shooting himself. He leaves a family.

Owatonna. — Four houses were struck by lightning and one or less damaged. The storm was one of the most severe in the history of the city.

Austin.—Golden Rule, the famous performing horse which has been traveling with a circus, dropped dead here just after the afternoon performance. Death was due to diseased heart, the horse having been in the habit of chewing tobacco and smoking cigarettes.

Mankato.—The injuries which August Koch sustained two or three weeks ago by being caught in a belt and carried around the shaft at the tob factory have resulted fatally. He was forty years old. A widow and one child survive.

Crookston.—William Munch, the deputy game warden for the districts arrested Chris Bangen of St. Hilaire, charging him with fishing with a net in the Red Lake river at this place. Bangon was taken before Judge Nelson of St. Hilaire, found guilty, and fined $25 and costs.

Minneapolis.—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Lindstrom was attacked and killed on the river bank. In trying to protect her child the mother was also bitten. It is thought the girl will recover, although her face is terribly lacerated. The dog was shot by a policeman.

Northfield.—The annual commencement exercises of Carleton college were held. The graduating class numbers forty-six, the largest in the history of the college. Miss Elinor Hallowell of Northfield delivered the valedictory and an oration on "Realism in Fiction," and Miss Anna Cathcont delivered the salutatory and an oration on "The Significance of the Election Theory."

Duluth.—A decomposed body, found sitting upright in a stream near Split Lake, of the St. Louis river, has been identified as Isak Alleson, an aged Finlander, and foul play is suspected. He left Smithville with a jug of liquor one day last December and was followed by two men who had been drinking with him. It is thought they pushed him over the cliff into the stream.

Minneapolis.—Donald Babcock, a senior at the University of Minnesota is the winner of the Wyman prize of $50, offered by J. T. Wyman of Minneapolis to the undergraduate student writing the best 5,000-word essay on the subject, "The Influence of Immigration on the Development of the Northwest.

Faribault.—The dwelling belonging to Mrs. Dunham, at Millersburg, was struck by lightning and completely destroyed by fire. Mrs. Dunham lived in the house alone and barely escaped from the building. The loss is about $1,800.

MUST HAVE BEEN ASLEEP.

Mrs. Hickman was much concerned about her youngest son. He had developed a peculiarity of which he had previously shown no trace—that of walking in his sleep. In great distress of mind she told her husband.

"Samuel," she said, "do you know that Johnny is a somnambulist?"

"A what?"

"A somnambulist. He walks in his sleep!"

"When did he begin to do that?"

"I never noticed it until last night. After he had gone to bed and was sound asleep, he got up, dressed himself, went out to the coal cellar, and brought up a scuttle of coal."

"He did that in his sleep?"

"He did. I watched him. He didn't know a thing about it this morning, either. How can you explain such a thing?"

"Humph!" ejaculated Mr. Hickman. "I can't. But if he had gone out while he was wide awake, Lucinda, and done such a thing as that voluntarily, it would have been a good deal harder to explain!"

Here is a Novelty.

A street hawker recently introduced a novelty to keyholes.

He said: Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age.

Passer (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Hawker—A magnetized keyhole-plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary latch key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole is to take out your key and hang on to it.

How it Happened.

Uncounted ages ago, while the Egyptian sphinx was young and tender, there came a season much like this one.

The day being unusually warm, with a promise of warmer days to come, the sphinx changed her garments and put on lighter ones.

Within a few minutes the weather became 40 degrees cooler.

The sphinx sneezed with great violence, and her nose dropped off.

Petrified with astonishment, she remained rooted to the spot.

And has remained there ever since. —Chicago Tribune.

SYMPATHY FOR THE FISH.

Upton Sinclair's Amazing Parable on Charity of the Rich.

Upton Sinclair, in an address before a body of Chicago Socialists, said of charity;

"The average charity, the charity of the rich, seems rather futile to me. The rich oppress the poor enormously, then help them slightly. It is like the young lady angler.

"'Why,' said a man to this young lady, 'do you always carry a bottle of liniment with you on your fishing excursions?'

She sighed.

"'I am sorry,' she said plaintively, for the poor little fish. And so, when I take one off the hook, I always rub it all mouth with some liniment.'"

BLACK, ITCHING SPOTS ON FACE.

Physician Called it Eczema in Worst Form—Patient Despaired of Cure—Cuticura Remedies Cured Her.

"About four years ago I was afflicted with black splotches all over my face and a few covering my body, which produced a severe itching irritation, and which caused me a great deal of suffering, to such an extent that I was forced to call in two of the leading physicians of ——. After a thorough examination of the dreaded complaint they announced it to be skin eczema in the worst form. Their treatment did me no good. Finally I became despondent and decided to discontinue their services. My husband purchased a single set of the Cuticura Remedies, which entirely stopped the breaking out. I continued the use of the Cuticura Remedies for six months, and after that every scratch was entirely gone. I have not felt a symptom of the eczema since, which was three years ago. Mrs. Lizzie E. Sledge, 540 Jones Ave., Selma, Ala., Oct. 28, 1905."

WORKING WOMEN, WHAT THEY SHOULD KNOW

MRS. SADIE ABBOTT

MRS. PREE McKITRICK

Women for the most part spend their lives at home, and it is these women who are willing and ambitious that their homes shall be kept neat and pretty, their children well dressed and tidy, who do their own cooking, sweeping, dusting and often washing, ironing and sewing for the entire family, who call for our sympathy.

Truly the work of such a woman is "never done" and is it any wonder that she breaks down at the end of a few years, the back begins to ache, there is displacement, inflammation or ulceration of the abdominal organs, a female weakness is brought on, and the struggle of their wife and mother to continue her duties is pitiful.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, is the exact medicine a woman needs when strength is overtaxed. It keeps the feminine organs in a strong and healthy condition. In preparing for childbirth and recuperating therefrom it is most efficacious. It carries a woman safely through the change of life and in every way her strong and well assists her to be a good wife and mother.

Mrs. Sadie Abbott, of Jeannette, Pa., writes:

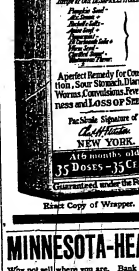
Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"I suffered severely with pain every month and also a pain in my left side. My doctor prescribed for me, but did me no good; a friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I wrote you in regard to my condition. I followed your advice and am a perfectly well woman. The pains have all disappeared and I cannot recommend your medicine too highly."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Succeeds Where Others Fail.

Mrs. Pree McKitrick, of La Farge, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:



"For six years I suffered from female weakness. I was so irregular that I would go from three weeks to six months, so I thought I would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

"So far I am once more well and can do my work without a pain. Any one who wishes, can write to me and I will answer all letters gladly."

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of actual cures of female ills. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

THE TASK OF CONVERTING TOKIO.

Tokio, Japan.—"If the missionaries are tackling this proposition, they have certainly got nerve," exclaimed a newly-arrived American tourist, after his first ride through Tokio. The immensity of this city of a million and a half of people, its impassivity, its impenetrable orientalism, and the unrelatedness of its parts one to another impress every visitor. He must be a hardy propagandist indeed who, without a sense of hopelessness, can undertake the task of converting Tokio to anything.

Yet Tokio is the key to Japan. It is more like Mecca to the Mohammedan than like Washington to an American, or Ottawa to a Canadian. The fact that this is the largest city of the empire means less to the native mind than that it is the home of his imperial majesty, the emperor, whom all Japanese regard with real reverence, as well as unquestionable loyalty and whom most of the people worship as a divinity. Here, too, center all national interests and enterprises; this is the commercial and educational capital. Tokio leads Japan. Hither every ambitious youth hopes to come; and the fact that a cook, an artisan or a student hails from Tokio gives him prestige wherever he may go throughout Japan.

Up-to-Date Methods in the Orient.

So, despite the herculean nature of the task, the missionaries have laid siege to this strategic city. And, considering that there are missionaries still living and resident here who came to Japan when there was not a single Christian in the empire, the present situation is very creditable. While it is easily possible for a tourist to pass through the city and find not the slightest vestige of missionary activity or Christian life, it is impossible for him to reside here for a week, and to become reasonably familiar with Tokio, without being brought into frequent contact with evidences of the presence and work of the Christian propaganda. It is a false impression, sometimes given by overzealous missionaries that this city is being stirred and moved by Christianity; equally false is the sweeping declaration by visitors that there are no signs of missionary work to be seen in Tokio.

As a matter of fact, there are almost as many forms of religious work to be found in Tokio as in Philadelphia or in Chicago. Walk along the streets on a clear Sunday, and you will find Japanese preachers talking to interested crowds, just as on Boston Common. A man wearing the conventional Salvation Army cap (although inscribed in Japanese characters), but otherwise dressed in native garb, lifts his cap as you approach, bows politely, and in flowery language, invites you to buy the copy of the Japanese "War Cry" which he extends to you.

Setting the Japanese to Singing.

As you pass native houses you occasionally hear childish voices swelling to the familiar strains of Moody and Sankey hymns, and you know that one of the numerous Sunday schools in Tokio is in session. Going to and from these are met boys and girls carrying the thick, pudgy red hymn books, and you recall that within two years 100,000 copies of this book have been sold, although there are only about 50,000 Protestant Christians in the empire. Mission workers say that the Japanese did not know how to sing at all, except a few Chinese songs of limited register to accompany the samisen and the koto, and now some of the mission school graduates perform the most difficult of instrumental and vocal music, and one is sure to hear brass bands executing the airs that were popular in America a few years ago. Not everybody who is heard whistling or singing a Christian tune is necessarily a Christian, for it appears that this newly-awakened ability of the Japanese is due primarily to the missionaries. It is especially interesting to hear a crowd of Japanese youngsters singing a temperance song to the tune of "John Brown's Body Lies a Moldering in the Grave."

On a street car you may inquire the way to one of the larger Christian churches, and if the conductor himself does not know, some one of the passengers will volunteer the information. This, at least, has been my experience; and in all the citations in this article I am confining myself carefully to my own personal experiences and observations. Arrived at the church, you find an ordinary congregation of 700 persons, four-fifths of whom are students, listening intently to a sermon nearly an hour long.

Greek and Roman Catholic Churches.

In all Tokio there is no more conspicuous building than the Russian Orthodox Christian church building, with its great dome. There are 30,000 members of this body, all of them a monument to the work of one man, Bishop Nicolai, who has labored here alone, or with only one other European helper, for 30 years. His character has been equally effectual with his intellectual ability and his diligence in spreading his church.

During the war he had to go into retirement, being a Russian, and the cathedral was guarded constantly by the Japanese authorities, lest misguided patriots burn or sack it. Bishop Nicolai gave himself largely to literary work, but his priests did most acceptable service in ministering to the Russian prisoners, who were of their own creed.

The romance of the Roman Catholic Church in Japan—one of the fine stories of all religious history—must be told in another connection, but here in Tokio the church is represented by a cathedral, which, next to the Greek church building, is the most imposing ecclesiastical edifice in the city. The total Roman Catholic membership in Japan is 59,000, and the missionaries are nearly all French. There are schools conducted by nuns and by the teaching orders, and a notable amount of philanthropic work is done, including the maintenance of two leper hospitals, one in Gotemba and one in Kumamoto.

A Tokio Bible Class.

In Tokio there is a leper asylum, started by Miss Youngman, a Presbyterian missionary, but maintained by an American and European religious organization which works for the lepers of the east. Under this same auspices is Miss Riddell's leper asylum at Kumamoto. Miss Riddell, who is a Church of England missionary, is the only foreign lady in Japan ever decorated by the emperor.

The Tokio leper home is managed by two native Presbyterians, Mr. and Mrs. Seishio Otsuka, whose refinement and Christian character is written on their faces. They have been in charge of the home since its opening, 12 years ago, and the devotion of the 56 inmates to them is apparent even to a visitor. There are constant experiments being made for the cure of these unfortunates, but thus far all seem to be in vain. The most that can be done appears to be to make the lepers as comfortable as possible and to keep their bodies in the best possible condition by frequent medicinal baths. They suffer no pain, although they are in all stages of leprosy, from the little children and sturdy young men who show no outward taint of the disease, to the blind and helpless victims whose members have been entirely eaten away.

After the Men Who Run Things.

Mention of one form of special work suggests many others. There is here a rescue home for girls from the Yoshiwara, an asylum for the insane (although this, the only one in Japan, is not under distinctively Christian auspices), a prison-gate home, free kindergartens, and "rescue missions," after the type familiar to all large American cities. There are also special missions to railroad men, to policemen and to post-office workers. These last, now separate missions, are the outgrowth of a Bible-reading league for Japanese, at present numbering 10,000 members, started and long maintained by one of the foreign physicians of Tokio, who, out of his lucrative practice, personally supports numerous missionary enterprises.

In Tokio there are several independent missionaries, who are not connected with any denomination or missionary board. The usefulness of these is a mooted question among American churches. My own observation leads me to conclude that they make more stir in the homeland, where their money is being raised, than they do here. They are usually temporary, since they depend upon one man, and cannot continue beyond the term of his personal residence here. He, in turn is so busy keeping alive the interest of his supporters, that he has little time left for actual work among the Japanese. As an illustration, I may cite the case of one man, personally an upright, honorable and pleasant gentleman, whose publication (intended only for home consumption) gives the impression that he is arousing Tokio to a veritable revival. Yet that man has been here nearly a decade and does not speak the language, so that he is personally useless as a preacher to the Japanese. In the light of conditions in this country, I would say that the only effectual missionary work that can be pursued is that conducted on a broad basis and a long-continued plan by the great churches of Japan and of Christian lands.

Taking Religion to Get English.

A building that is the center of no small work is the big brick Young Men's Christian association, which also has branches and dormitories in many of the educational institutions here. The Young Women's Christian association has lately come to Japan and is opening dormitories for young women students. Both these organizations do Bible class work.

This suggests a characteristic phase of mission work in Japan—the conducting of Bible classes. Every missionary, from the newest recruit to the oldest veteran, has a measure of this to do. Some of the Bible classes are as large as many congregations. The secret of all this is, as is apparent to everybody concerned, the desire of the Japanese to learn English. The eagerness of the natives in this particular is nothing short of a craze. Frequently I have had young men accost me and enter into conversation, purely for the purpose of practicing their little stock of English. Sometimes this sort of thing is rather trying, but the missionaries have had their patience well trained. They take the Japanese on any terms and find, they say, that out of Bible classes attending from a purely selfish motive, have come many of the most earnest converts and Christian workers.

Other mission lands have many missionary hospitals; in Japan there are only two, both maintained by American Episcopalians, one at Osaka and one here. The reason for this is that the Japanese have their own physicians and hospitals. St. Luke's hospital in Tokio, is fully endowed, and could not well be abandoned. As a matter of fact, it is so popular and successful that it is entirely self-supporting. It has fine quarters near church for Europeans and large boy's school on the Protestant Episcopal compound.

Baseball and Missions.

Often I hear the question raised as to whether Christianity is having any practical effects upon the character of the converts. That is not so simple a question to answer as would at first appear; the missionary is really working for his converts' grandchildren. Yet I must admit that I have run across cases that are not without meaning. After speaking at the oldest university in Japan, an institution distinctively not Christian, I was entertained at luncheon by the president, and six of the leading professors were invited to be present. One of these was a man who in appearance strikingly resembled the young college Y. M. C. A. men in America, and he himself was an active Christian worker, and responsible for the religious organization existing in the college. I learned that his standing was high among the professors and his influence among the undergraduates pronounced.

On another occasion I met a middle-aged man who has invented a process for making articles of wearing apparel—neckties, shawls, purses, hats, fancy vests, etc.—from wood shavings. He said he was about to introduce his novel wares into America. Questioning him further, he said that about 15 years ago he became a Christian, that awakened in him a desire to better himself and to do something for Japan. The result is this invention.

Perhaps the most curious of many unexpected evidences of Christianity in this city is the crack baseball team in the Waseda university, an institution with more than 7,000 students. The Japanese have taken ardently to American sports, and this particular team made a successful tour of the Pacific coast last year. It owes its efficiency to Rev. F. Merrifield, a Baptist missionary who was a star on the University of Chicago championship baseball team a few years ago. Mr. Merrifield goes three days a week to Waseda to coach the team for the sake of the opportunity thus given him to do Christian work among the students.

Of many forms of this sort of indirect missionary work I have learned directly and indirectly. One night I met with a fine body of business and professional men who are organized into an "English Speaking society," and hold their meeting in the home of a Quaker missionary. There are dozens of sewing classes among the Japanese women missionaries. Some missionaries take the children of prominent Japanese into their homes to teach them the American way of living. The son and heir of the late Gen. Kodomo, the foremost military figure in Japan, has, with the son of another general, been dining weekly at the home of one of the Young Men's Christian association secretaries.

Pluck.

How often you hear one business man say of another who has been successful: "Ain't he lucky?" Luck has nothing to do with anyone's success. It is pluck.

Pluck and enthusiasm are the powers which make the winner. With these two qualities, which are invariably found together, a man will succeed.

Business men who have achieved greatness in their line are those who possess an abundance of enthusiasm.

A possession that is better than anything else to a man is that determination of character known as pluck, and an enthusiastic confidence that he will succeed.

To persevere against great odds, and to make a victorious fight in the face of almost impossibilities, it requires pluck which is not governed by impulse.

To cultivate pluck one must encourage steadfastness of purpose. When a thing is begun it should be finished.

The trouble with most of us is not so much that we have a hard row to hoe but that we dislike hoeing.

Opportunity knocks once—and often a dozen times—at every door, but you have no kick against the fates if you have no kick against the fates if Opportunity knocks, finds you lost in a pipe dream and turns away never to return.

Bacon said: "The mold of a man's fortune is in his own hands."

All men cannot be captains of industry. All men cannot succeed phenomenally. All men, it seems, cannot succeed even moderately, but all men can make an effort to succeed.

We must not stop striving to reach a higher and better place until we are willing to sink to the bottom. If we simply expect to float and not try to swim we might just as well quit. It would be well for us to keep as a motto before us: "Perseverance and pluck conquer all things," for it bears close relationship to the subject chosen. If we regarded the little opportunities in life more seriously and made the most use of them we would be better able to master the golden opportunities.

Let It Be Known.

You may know that you have the best assorted stock in town, but the public will not know it unless you tell them about it; they are not clairvoyants. First use the newspapers liberally, then circulars, personal letters, talk to them when you can catch them in your store, at their homes—anywhere. The first and last thing to bear in mind about advertising is that it is as wide as human nature in its appeal.

Advertising is the mighty engine of success, and without it the business world would be minus its dynamo of energy.

Push All the Time.

If it pays to push when business is good, it pays to push when business is bad.

If it pays to push when business is bad, it pays to push when business is good.

If it pays to push at all, it pays to push all the time.

Therefore, don't let it die.

When everything is coming your way, push to make it come the faster.

When everything is going the other way, push to make it come back to you.

Push all the time and you'll feel the better for it, and make more money.

It takes hard thinking and hard work to increase business in the face of strong competition. But the business is there, and somebody will get it—you or your neighbor, or perhaps your competitor in the next town. Which shall it be?

Help your employes increase your business.

Be Business Throughout.

A joke is a joke, but business is no joke, and it is mighty hard to make the two mix.

A man once said: "It pays to advertise most businesses, but mine is different." The sheriff sold him out, and now he works for his successor, who does advertise.

Success.

The secret of most successes lies in the man rather than in the method.

Making people want the goods is, after all, about as near the secret of it as there comes to being any secret. Make the public want what you have to sell and the sale is half made.

Epitaph of a failure: "He worked overtime dodging work."

That Man with the Overalls.

When the man with the overalls comes into your store don't turn around and take your time to wait on him. Don't snub the man with the overalls in order to wait upon some elite of your town—that is, if the overall man came into your store first. Your overall man usually stands by the home town. He works in the shops, in the stock yards, in the factories and in the mills. His dollar is just as good as the dollar given to you by the man who tries to put on all kinds of airs in your town. The old American eagle on the silver dollar given to you by the man attired in overalls counts for just as much and screams just as hard as the bird on the dollar turned over by the man who belongs to the "upper tens." Besides, if the man in the overalls wants credit until Saturday night or until the first of the month, you'll stand to win to get the cash from him when he says he'll pay you. Don't give him the marble heart. You want his trade. He needs dry goods and groceries, and he will spend his money with you if you treat him right.

Turn to and bury the mail-order house monopoly under the sod of local prosperity. You can do it by spending your money with the local merchants. If you give them an opportunity they will treat you fairly, and they, like yourself, represent the interests of the home town.

Business Sickness a Common Complaint.

Stuck in a rut, are you? Same old rut, boss doesn't appreciate your efforts. Interest in your business wearing thin at the edges? Eh? Thought so! Well, what are you waiting for?

You know nothing really comes to the fellow who waits, except the "push." Some people never "get there" unless they're pushed.

If you're sick of your job you're doing yourself and your boss a bad turn by hanging on. Start looking around for another job—that'll keep your mind liquid. Wonderful what a pick-me-up job-hunting is to some people. If you get "turned down" two or three times you'll begin to think what small potatoes you really are after all, and that's good tonic for business sickness—the first sign of recovery, in fact.

Your present job will, maybe, acquire a fresh interest to you, and you'll come at it again like a two-year-old.

If you were born with a square chin and the normal amount of gray matter you'll probably want to get ahead of the procession. There is only one sure way, and that is "know how." A fellow with "know how" never loses interest in his job. He wouldn't get the "know how" if he did.

It's marvelous how interesting business is when you get the proper spirit. Some men obtain more genuine pleasure from business than they do from play. If you want to enjoy business—study it—soak yourself in it, and imagine it's play.

You won't have to imagine long, and when you've got the spirit of the game you couldn't be kept out of it with a pickax.

Fashion Is Ever Changing.

Mrs. Shopper—Is that hat that was $35 this morning the same price still?

Milliner—Certainly! Why not?

Mrs. Shopper—Well, it's not such a new style as it was then.—Judge.

TABLE DELICACIES

RECIPES RECOMMENDED BY GOOD COOKS.

Fruit Punch a Pleasant Mixture for Warm Afternoons—Utilizing Left-Over Meat—To Revive Crispness of Cereals.

Fruit Punch.—One-half can grated pineapple, one-half dozen oranges, one-half dozen lemons; strain the juice of the oranges and lemons, add the pineapple; sweeten to taste. Ice to chill, then pour into a punch bowl and serve in glasses.

Left-Over Dish.—Use a cupful of cold meat (boiled is better than roasted or fried) and some broth or gravy. Cut the meat in dice; place in the broth on the stove to heat. Take flour, shortening, and baking powder, as for rich biscuit; mix and roll out, cutting into rounds rather thinner than for biscuit. Cut out the center of every other round (use a napkin ring for this), moisten the top of a whole one with a little water, and place one of the rings upon it, fill with the hot meat and set in a hot oven to bake. Reserve a portion of the gravy to pour over them when done. If you have no gravy to begin with, put the meat on to boil a few minutes in water, well seasoned with pepper and salt, with a small spoonful of butter; then thicken slightly before dipping into the little patties. If carefully and daintily baked these are attractive and appetizing.

Make Cereals Crisp.—When cereals lose their crispness put them on the radiator in the original paper package for an hour or so. The heat is sufficient to make them as crisp as when fresh, and saves gas necessary for heating the oven. The flavor is not injured if the packages are left on the radiator over night, but improved by the gentle heat. Crackers that have lost their freshness also can be made crisp and delicious in this simple way.

Bread in Hash.—A few pieces of bread chopped with the meat and potatoes in making hash lends a pleasing variety.

Boston Madelines.—One and one-half tumblers of sugar, one and one-half tumblers of flour, one-half tumbler cornstarch, one-half tumbler butter, three-fourths tumbler milk, yolks of eight or nine eggs, two teaspoons baking powder. Flavor with orange extract. Bake in deep patty tins. Make frosting from yolks of two eggs with sugar beaten, into which add grated orange peel.

Put Veal in Dripping Pan.—Instead of frying your breaded veal chops in the ordinary way, put them in a dripping pan, with a little lard or butter, and bake in the oven.

Uses for Green Peppers.

Egg salad served in green pepper cups is most attractive. The eggs, of course, should be chopped, and one end of the pepper cut off to make the cup stand firmly on the plate.

Another use for peppers is placing them in grapefruit glasses, deeply sunk in crushed ice. Care should be taken to select peppers with stems, and these form handles to the lids of the peppers, which, when lifted, disclose an oyster or clam cocktail within. The seeds must be removed, leaving considerable space for the cocktail.

Angel Parfait.

Place over the fire in a small saucepan one-half cupful each of water and sugar, stir until the sugar dissolves, then boil without stirring until it threads. Meanwhile beat until stiff and dry the whites of three eggs and add to them slowly the hot syrup after it has been taken from the fire for about half a minute. Beat well and flavor with vanilla. Put into a mold and pack at once in ice and salt for about four hours.

Stuffed Celery.

Take good sized but tender stalks of celery, cut them in six-inch lengths and stuff them with a paste composed of some tasty cheese that has been creamed and to which some chopped nuts and a little Worcestershire sauce have been added. As a variation, the Worcestershire sauce is sometimes omitted, and the paste is made by the addition of a little mayonnaise. To make this dish almost any kind of creamy cheese from a good American to a Parmesan may be used.

To Make Muttonettes.

Cut from a leg of mutton slices half an inch thick. On each slice lay a generous spoonful of stuffing, made with bread crumbs, beaten egg, butter, salt and pepper; roll up slices; pin with toothpicks to keep dressing in; put a little water and butter in baking pan. Put in muttonettes and bake in hot oven three-quarters of an hour. Baste often. When done, place on hot platter, thicken the gravy; pour over the meat. Garnish with parsley, and serve.

Strawberry Nectar.

To one quart of mashed strawberries, add the juice of one lemon, two tablespoons of orange juice, and three pints of water. Let it stand three hours; then strain upon three-quarters of a pound of powdered sugar and stir until dissolved. Serve ice cold.

Coffee Bags.

Get one yard of cheesecloth, fold to make it double, then sew in squares to make little bags to put your coffee in. Every morning take a fresh one, and this keeps the coffee pot nice and clean, your coffee always nice and clear, ready to serve at once.

Washington Day by Day

News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

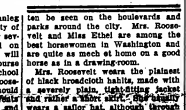
SUMMER CAPITAL AGAIN LOCATED AT OYSTER BAY

WASHINGTON.—The "summer capital" of the United States has once more been transferred to Oyster Bay, where the president has gone for a long and muchneeded rest. The "summer capital" will be located as usual on the second floor of Moore's provision store building, at the corner of Main and South streets. Secretary Loeb's home this year is the pretty E. N. Townsend cottage, up the Cove road, near Christ Episcopal church, where the president and his family attend weekly worship.

The president's home, Sagamore Hill, is some three miles and a half from the village offices, and in order to keep the executive in touch with the work of his administration, as well as to secure the very necessary presidential signature to commissions, orders, and important letters, the secretary makes daily trips to and from the Roosevelt residence. Mr. Loeb makes most of these journeys on horseback, carrying the official documents and correspondence in saddle bags slung over Ephraim's back. "Eph" is the western saddler that Secretary Loeb got from Congressman Cocks about a year ago, and he has proven a worthy successor to Skoot, the fine saddle horse the secretary formerly rode, but which unfortunately "went wild" one day and came within an ace of creating a vacancy in the secretarial job.

According to Secretary Loeb the president will spend a very quiet summer at Oyster Bay this year. Visitors at Sagamore Hill will be few and far between, and unless they are close friends of the family they will be required to give a pretty good reason for their coming if they are allowed to intrude upon the president's vacation rest.

MISS ETHEL MAY SOON ENTER CAPITAL SOCIETY

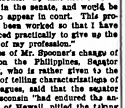


WASHINGTON society is beginning to speculate on the possibility of Miss Ethel Roosevelt, now in her seventeenth year, being presented at the New Years next. Although she will not have finished her school courses here in the National Cathedral school for Girls the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, it is said, feel that she should see as much of Washington official and entertainments as possible, and she will not leave school, but will appear more generally than heretofore.

Miss Ethel is budding into a very handsome woman and has all of the frank charm of her sister, Mrs. Longworth, added to vivacity. She is a devotee of horseback riding and when in the city she and her mother can often be seen on the boulevards and parks around the city. Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel are among the best horsewomen in Washington and are quite as much at home on a good horse as in a drawing-room.

Mrs. Roosevelt wears the plainest of black broadcloth habits, made with severely plain, tight-fitting jacket and rather a mannish skirt. She usually wears a sailor hat, although through the winter she appeared with a derby. Over her hat and face she always wears a thin black chiffon veil, which is tied down closely over the hat and about the neck.

Miss Ethel frequently wears a black suit with white shirt waist, with black and white sailor hat.



STORIES ABOUT SENATOR SPOONER ARE RECALLED

TO other senators Mr. Spooner has said that during his 16 years of service in the senate he had made only about $5,700 from his law practice. "I have been retained in cases," he said, "but I could not cope with the delay of the courts. A case would be set during vacation, but invariably the lawyer on the other side would manage to have it continued to December or thereabouts. By that time I would be busy in the senate, and would be unable to appear in court. This process has been worked so that I have been forced practically to give up the practice of my profession."

Apropos of Mr. Spooner's change of course on the Philippines, Senator Carmack, who is rather given to the practice of telling characterizations of his colleagues, said that the senator from Wisconsin "had endured the annexation of Hawaii, pitied the taking over of the Philippines.

The mock combats between Mr. Tillman and Mr. Spooner have long been one of the set farces of the senate. Spooner is about the only man in the senate for whose good opinion Tillman seems to care. The rude South Carolinian has been made to feel the waspish sting of the Wisconsin man's tongue so many times that he has come to have a respect, not unmixed with terror, for his opponent. During the Brownsville debate Mr. Spooner and Mr. Tillman exchanged heated personalities. The senate went into secret session on that occasion to administer a sharp rebuke to Tillman. A day or two later Mr. Spooner and Mr. Tillman were parading around the chamber together, arm in arm, laughing and chatting as though nothing unpleasant had ever happened. On one occasion, last winter Mr. Tillman peremptorily ordered Mr. Spooner to "sit down." Mr. Spooner retorted that Mr. Tillman was a "rude man." Mr. Spooner used to get a sort of "gallery fame" from these encounters with Mr. Tillman which he very much resented. The South Carolinian had a habit of interrupting Mr. Spooner's speeches to ask questions, which caused the latter the most keen and obvious annoyance

PRESIDENT SPENDS BUT LITTLE IN TRAVELING

HOW much do the president's traveling expenses amount to? This question interested the country last session when, upon the enforcement of the anti-pass legislation, the railroads were prohibited from continuing the old practice of furnishing the president a private car or a special train when he desires to leave Washington.

It was roughly estimated that the president could get along on $35,000 a year as traveling expenses, and congress appropriated that amount as an experiment. The president recently left Washington for his summer home at Oyster Bay, and the close of the present fiscal year will find him there. It is found that when allowance is made to cover the expense of the second trip which the president made to the Jamestown exposition and of the trip to Oyster Bay fully $17,000 will be turned back into the treasury as the unused portion of the appropriation.

The trip which the president made to Indianapolis cost about $1,000 and his other trips have brought the total up so that his traveling expenses for the present fiscal year will not exceed $8,000.

There has been a material change in the style in which the president travels. When the railroads furnished the transportation all arrangements were lavish in the extreme, the railroads vying with each other in the entertainment provided. Special trains were quite common, and special schedules were frequently prepared for the president. Now it is different. The president, paying his own way, travels quietly. His Pullman bills are not large, his car is hitched to regular trains, the service is simple, and

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

HAS EYES ON WHITE HOUSE

Jesse R. Grant, son of Gen. U. S. Grant, is being mentioned as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president of the United States. He is not only willing to accept the nomination, but is ready to come out openly and make a frank and determined effort to get it. This statement has been made with Mr. Grant's knowledge and consent by persons who are in close touch with him and thoroughly acquainted with his political plans. Those who know Mr. Grant personally believe that if he could get the nomination he would make a strong candidate for the Democrats, because they think he would be able to unite the factions of the party. The conservative elements of the Democratic party, they say, ought to have more faith in him than in any other candidate so far mentioned.

As the son of Gen. Grant he is regarded by his friends as certain to get a large vote from federal veterans in the north whom no other candidate could entice from the Republican ranks.

Mr. Grant is a resident of New York city where he lives the simple life. He devotes his mornings to doing nothing in particular, as he has nothing to do. Every afternoon finds him in the Manhattan club, a Democratic stronghold. Here he smokes till dinner time.

Jesse Grant is not without opinions. His favors tariff revision, he thinks trusts harmless, he believes in restricting immigration, closing the gates to all but agriculturalists; he sees no danger in great fortunes and thinks the average American citizen is the best informed man in the world.

LEADING LEGAL LIGHT

Uriah M. Rose, one of the most distinguished figures in the large delegation of noted Americans to The Hague international peace conference, has been for many years regarded as the most scholarly lawyer in America. The man who is to-day a world-famed authority on international law and a powerful advocate of the new code of arbitration for settling the disputes of nations, was born 73 years ago in the backwoods of Kentucky. At the age of 19, when Abraham Lincoln was winning fame as a lawyer, young Rose began his brilliant career before the bar of the "Blue Grass" state.

While he has always been prominent in politics and a member of the national Democratic central committee for years, he has studiously refused public office. For the past quarter of a century he has been in the foremost rank of the Arkansas bar and ranks as one of the leading legal lights of the nation, serving for three years as president of the American bar association. Judge Rose has been a life-long student of international conditions. He has contributed many articles on American and European jurisprudence, particularly noteworthy among these being his papers on "Controversies of Modern Continental Jurists."

Judge Rose is a fine Greek scholar, a lover of considerable importance and usefulness to the delegation, as much of the conferences will be conducted in French.

AMERICAN BAYREUTH PLANNED

Mme. Lillian Nordica will establish on the Hudson, near New York, a Bayreuth in America. With a part of the great fortune the noted singer will erect the Lillian Nordica Festival house, which will be to this country what the famous operatic institution founded by Richard Wagner, and now maintained by his widow, is to Europe.

The site for the institution was purchased recently for $100,000, and Mme. Nordica expects that the opera house will be ready for its formal dedication one year from next summer.

The Lillian Nordica institute of music, where American young men and women who aspire to operatic honors will be taught by the foremost teachers in the world, is inclosed in the plans of the famous singer. In a statement in which she announced her plans, Mme. Nordica said:

"Call my object philanthropic if you may, but the idea of founding here in my own country an American Bayreuth has been my life's ambition. All the years I have been singing I have dreamed of such an institution. Now I am able financially to start the great project, which I know will be an institution which after I am dead will continue to grow and enlighten the people of this country, who are now awakening to the benefits to be derived from a musical education such as was not dreamed of ten years ago.

"In this plan of mine I am assured of the hearty cooperation of men and women of wealth. The latter years of my life I hope to give entirely to seeing the grand institution grow until it can have no rival.

"The buildings that will be a part of the American Institute of Music alone will cover four acres. They will be erected close to the Lillian Nordica Festival house. In connection with the institute there will be dormitories and houses where the students at little expense will be able to live while pursuing their musical studies.

"Europe will contribute teachers, and they will be paid for their services more than they can hope to earn abroad.

"The Lillian Nordica Festival house will be in every way an exact reproduction of the theater erected by Richard Wagner. The Wagner operas will be given there in the summer with the greatest artists in the world."

PICTURESQUE ADMIRAL RETIRES

Command of the New York navy yard in Brooklyn was the other day relinquished by Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan to Rear Admiral C. F. Goodrich. Rear Admiral Goodrich was formerly a member of the Endicott board of fortifications, president of the navy institute and commander in chief of the Pacific fleet.

Admiral Coghlan retires from active service. He declared if he had his life to go over again he would reenter the United States navy; that it is the finest organization of its kind in the world, and that it holds out greater inducements to the young men of this country than does the navy of any other nation. Admiral Coghlan thinks that our navy should be made bigger and stronger. He said:

"Peace in perpetuity, about which so much is being said just now, may be possible, but it is not reasonably probable. Be prepared to whip or be willing to get whipped is the position in which every great nation stands to-day. Let us keep peace while we have it. The only way to do this is to keep building battleships and adding to the numerical strength of the navy."

Admiral Coghlan thinks the United States ought to have the most powerful navy afloat. He was lead in his praise of the United States Naval academy and also of the men who are now enlisting in the navy. "These blue jackets come largely from farms, he said, and they are selected with extreme care as to their physical fitness.

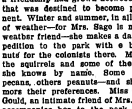
NEW FLORAL DECORATIONS IN MILLIONAIRE'S ROW

NEW YORK.—Either the lateness of the season or the fickleness of New York taste has had the effect of changing very much the appearance of the city this spring as regards its floral decorations. The use of pansies is noticed as a novelty. They appear in front of the Cornelius Vanderbilt house, where there are beds extending along the whole Fifth avenue block from Fifty-eighth to Fifty-seventh street. Along the outside of these beds are thin lines of pink English daisies forming a pretty contrast with the purple and yellow of the heartsease.

The same flowers are used in the Sloane house, six blocks further down the avenue. There no daisies disturb the monopoly of pansies.

Mrs. Oelrichs has decorated her house this year with pale pink hydrangeas, which form an appropriate garniture to the French architecture of the building. Hydrangeas also appear for the first time on several other houses. Mrs. Edward Berwind has them mixed with geraniums and daisies, to ornament her house.

ONE of the landmarks of the city, the old William E. Dodge home in Madison avenue, is making way for an Italian garden between the homes of J. Pierpont Morgan and his son. In the rear he will build a great gallery to house his wonderful art objects, which form one of the greatest private collections in the country.



The William Dodge home was built of brownstone, in the severely plain and impressive style of the middle of the last century. It was during the life time of the senior Dodge the gathering place of many interested in social and religious progress. Many philanthropic schemes were formulated and executed under its roof. The work of demolishing the old house has begun.

When completed the Italian garden will be one of the show places of the city unless Mr. Morgan conceives its beauty to his own eye before building a high wall about it, which is not probable. It will be laid out in formal fashion with shrubs and flower gardens. At intervals there will be some of the pieces of famous statuary which Mr. Morgan has gathered abroad. The garden will have a frontage of about 75 feet in Madison avenue.

NOTABLE WOMEN FRIENDS OF CENTRAL PARK PETS

MRS. RUSSELL SAGE has been more or less conspicuously in the limelight ever since her husband died, and the country is watching with interested approval her disposal of the Sage fortune. But while she finds satisfaction in these larger gifts she has a small pet private benevolence which affords her as much pleasure as her millions. In the summer of 1904 Mrs. Sage, then recovering from a sprained back and hip, the results of a fall on slippery steps, was ordered by her physician to rest and amuse herself in Central park, which is but a block from her home. Before many days she began to take an interest in the squirrels and birds in the park and soon became an ardent lover of the little arboreal creatures. Her devotion was returned in full, and by the time the doctor declared her entirely cured Mrs. Sage had practically adopted them that was destined to become permanent. Winter and summer, in all kinds of weather—for Mrs. Sage is no fair weather friend—she makes a daily expedition to the park with a bag of nuts for the colonies there. Most of the squirrels and some of the birds she knows by name. Some prefer pecans, others peanuts—and she humors their preferences. Miss Helen Gould, an intimate friend of Mrs. Sage, accompanies her to the park whenever she finds it possible, and whenever they interview their small pets there is much chattering and twittering about the goodness of their thoughtful lady friends.

THE exactions of high living have claimed another victim. "Dandy Jim," a sybarite of the canine race and the only dog in the world to possess a personal fortune of $10,000 and that wore diamonds, died the other day in his home, 332 East Forty-second street, having succumbed to an attempt to live up to his exalted position.

As to the precise cause of his death, unhappily there is no doubt. "Got too fat to breathe," is the verdict of the physicians who attended him in a sudden seizure of apoplexy that followed a light luncheon of chicken and mayonnaise of salmon, topped off with a pound of chocolate creams.

The daily programme of luxurious living which proved too heavy for his advanced years was a part of the programme laid down by his late mistress, Miss Ellen Ane Griffin, a spinster who for many years was known as "the hermit of Union square." She dictated all other canine pleasantries than that of "Dandy Jim" and her housekeeper, Mary McGivney.

It is a favorite story among the women in the neighborhood of her old home that the death of the man whose wife she was to have been broke her heart, so she lavished the affection which might have been given to children upon an ugly little black and tan spaniel, who snapped and snarled at all things human and canine that came within his reach.

"Dandy Jim" accompanied his mistress on her drives in the park and dined with her in fashionable restaurants from dishes designed for epicures.

ORDER OF ACQUITTAL REFUSED BY COURT

HAYWOOD DEFENSE REQUIRED BY JUDGE WOOD TO PRESENT EVIDENCE.

Opens Its Case Monday—Prosecution Rests After Having Offered Final Testimony as to Remittances to Orchard and Adams.

Boise, Idaho, June 22.—When the state Friday closed its case against William D. Haywood, charged with the murder of Frank Steunenberg, the defense made an unsuccessful attempt to secure from the court an order directing the jury to acquit the prisoner. Judge Wood's ruling, which requires the defense to meet with evidence the case that the state has presented, was made at 5:15 o'clock, and it was then arranged that Haywood's counsel should make their opening statement and present their first testimony on Monday next.

State Winds Up Its Case.

When court opened Friday morning it was stipulated that the record should show that the date of the draft sent by Haywood to Jack Simpkins late in 1905 was December 21, and after that the prosecution proceeded to show by a handwriting expert that George Pettibone, using the names of "J. Wolff" and "P. Bone," made two remittances of money to Harry Orchard at San Francisco through the Pacific Postal Telegraph company in the fall of 1904. The state next called Jim Seaborn, a colored horse trader, who swore that he sold a horse and buggy to Orchard in Denver in 1905, and identified Haywood as one of the men who rode with Orchard. After that the defense admitted that in June, 1903, Haywood sent $75 to Steve Adams at Ogden and when the accessary showing had been made on the record the prosecution formally rested.

The motion for an instruction to the jury to acquit was by agreement presented at the afternoon session and the jury was sent back to the jury house out of hearing of the argument.

Pettibone and Orchard.

The prosecution succeeded Thursday in again showing a direct connection with the store of George Pettibone in Denver and Harry Orchard at work on the Bradley crime in San Francisco, and promised to make the connection with Pettibone personally by handwriting experts who will be called Friday. Original records of the Pacific Postal Telegraph company were produced showing that in September and October, 1904, remittances of $97.50 and $48 respectively were made, the first by "J. Wolff," and the second by "P. Bone," from 1725 Stout street, in Denver—the address of Pettibone's store—to "H. Green," in care of Peter L. Huff, at 211 Taylor street, San Francisco.

For the rest it was a day of reading, with Senator Borah as first reader. Judge Wood admitted many of the strongly worded articles of the Miners' Magazine in which Frank Steunenberg was bitterly denounced.

Date of $100 Draft Fixed.

It was stated Thursday night that the prosecution had received a telegram from Denver showing that the date on the draft for $100 sent by William D. Haywood to Jack Simpkins was December 21, 1905. Orchard testified that when Simpkins left Caldwell after the first attempt on the life of Frank Steunenberg he asked him to get $100 for him. The unsigned letter which Orchard got at Caldwell after his arrest, and which he said was written by George Pettibone, one of the codefendants, informed him that "that" had been sent to "Jack" on December 21, 1905, and that he should have received it. The state produced the drafts sent by Haywood to Simpkins and among them was one for $100 sent on some date in the 20's of December, 1905, but the particular day could not be made out because the second figure had been cut out by the perforator used on the draft.

Detectives were detailed to further trace the $100 draft and the telegram from Denver states that the bank records show that December 21 was the date of issue. The testimony involved is of such importance that the state may delay closing its case until it can produce it, or it may close with the reservation that it be permitted to make later proof of the matter.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN COMPANY TO BE INVESTIGATED.

Interstate Commerce Commission Takes Up Charges Filed by Philadelphia Shipping Agents.

Washington, June 20.—The interstate commerce commission Wednesday decided to institute a proceeding of inquiry and investigation into the affairs of the Hamburg-American Packet company, which is charged by Peter Wright & Sons, general agents at Philadelphia of the Cosmopolitan Shipping company and the Cosmopolitan lines, with pooling and maintaining monopolies in restraint of trade.

The inquiry is expected to be one of the most stupendous ever undertaken and of a character different from any that ever before has engaged the attention of the commission.

The inquiry will have to deal with an alleged combination between railroads in the United States and the German shipping concern and therefore interests every American producer, manufacturer or shipper aspiring to introduce his goods to foreign consumers.

According to the complaint on which action was taken by the commission, the Hamburg-American Packet company has built up a complete monopoly of the east-bound traffic originating in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, Duluth, Cleveland and other manufacturing centers of the United States intended for interior ports or places on the continent of Europe. The complaint reviews what it claims to be unfair methods in stifling competition.

IS ARRESTED FOR FRAUD.

Ira B. Smith, Prominent Milwaukee Merchant, Is Accused.

Milwaukee, June 20.—Ira B. Smith, a member of the wholesale grocery firm of Smith, Thorndike & Brown, which recently went into involuntary bankruptcy, was arrested Wednesday afternoon on a warrant sworn out by Oliver C. Mason, a real estate broker.

Smith is charged with obtaining money under false representation of his firm's finances. He went to the municipal court voluntarily and was admitted to bail in the sum of $6,000. In the schedule of assets of the defunct firm Smith was shown to be indebted to the firm to the extent of about $100,000.

Mr. Smith for many years has been one of the most prominent business men in the city. He was president of the Merchants and Manufacturers' association and has been a prominent clubman.

DES MOINES TO TRY NEW PLAN.

Adopts Modification of Commission System of Government.

Des Moines, Ia., June 21.—By an overwhelming majority the citizens of Des Moines Thursday adopted what is known as the Des Moines plan of government, a modification of the commission form of government adopted some years ago in Galveston, Tex.

The new plan provides for an elimination of the ward system, with its aldermen, mayor and other elective officers, and the election by the city as a whole of five commissioners, all of whom shall give their entire time to city affairs, one as mayor and the other four as heads of department. All other officers are made appointive.

SENTENCED FOR LAND FRAUDS.

Jail and Fines for Huntington, Todd and Hoyt.

Omaha, June 21.—Thomas H. Huntington and Ami B. Todd were sentenced by Judge Munger in the United States district court Thursday to pay a fine of $1,000 each and to be imprisoned in the Douglas county jail for three months. Fred Hoyt was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and to stand committed to the Douglas county jail until the fine is paid.

The sentences are the result of the conviction of the three men after a ten days' trial on an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud the United States out of possession and title to large tracts of land in Sheridan and Cherry counties, this state.

Filipino Registration Heavy.

Manila, June 22.—The registration of Filipino voters began Friday. While complete returns are not available, reports indicate that the total registration will be heavy. No reports of disorder have been received. American residents are generally registering also. Carl Hass is the only American candidate for the assembly. He has been nominated from Manila. The registration will continue four days.

Cabrera in Good Health.

New York, June 22.—Dr. Ramon Bengoechea, consul general of Guatemala at New York, said Friday regarding the report from the City of Mexico that President Estrada Cabrera is dying of blood poisoning: "The report that President Cabrera is dying is incorrect, for late last night I received a cablegram from our minister of state that President Cabrera was in excellent health."

OPERATORS STRIKE IN SAN FRANCISCO

QUIT WORK THERE AND IN OAKLAND TO ENFORCE DEMAND FOR MORE PAY.

Union Is Not Recognized by Employers—Trouble Will Be Local So Long as Men Are Not Brought in from Outside Cities.

San Francisco, June 22.—Strike-ridden San Francisco had another strike added to the list Friday afternoon, when the telegraph operators employed by the Western Union and Postal telegraph companies left their keys at 3:30 o'clock and walked out of the offices. Three short blasts from a police whistle gave the signal and at the sound the operators arose from the tables, put on their coats and quit their jobs.

The Postal and Western Union main San Francisco offices are located close together in the Ferry building. Since the fire the main relay office of the Western Union has been at West Oakland, where about 150 men and women are employed. In the San Francisco office about 20 operators are employed and at outside branch offices about 20 more. The Postal company has 60 operators in its main San Francisco office. Employes of both companies, with the exception of one in each office, stopped work at the signal.

Strike for More Pay.

The operators in San Francisco and Oakland were dissatisfied with the letter from President Clowry of the Western Union, published Thursday, and insisted that their demands for a 25 per cent. increase in wages should be granted.

President Small of the Commercial Telegraphers' union arrived here Thursday and, after considering the situation, ordered the strike unless the increase was granted. Both the Western Union and Postal officials declined to grant the increase or to consult with the union. They expressed their willingness to consider and act upon any requests presented by their employes as individuals, but this has not satisfied the men and the walkout resulted.

The superintendents of both companies have nothing to say about the strike. They state that the matter will have to be adjusted in New York and have simply issued notice to the public that messages will be accepted subject to indefinite delay. President Small of the union will remain here and advise the strikers.

Strike May Be Purely Local.

So long as an attempt is not made to bring in operators from outside points the strike will be purely local. If, however, the company attempts to bring in outside men operators in other cities will be called out. In order that the strike may be confined to San Francisco and Oakland, it is announced that operators in other cities will be allowed to work with so-called "unfair" operators in San Francisco and Oakland who did not go out with the strikers.

Mayor of Gotham Turns Sod for Great Engineering Undertaking Which Will Cost $162,000,000.

New York, June 21.—With a small silver trowel Thursday Mayor McClellan turned a sod of earth among the hills two miles back of Peekskill-on-the-Hudson and by this act began the great engineering undertaking which will cost $162,000,000 and will eventually furnish Greater New York with 500,000,000 gallons of water daily, besides the quantity available from the Croton and other present sources of supply.

From the small and simple beginning by the mayor will in time be constructed the Catskill aqueduct, 150 miles long, which will connect the Ashokan reservoir in the Esopus valley with every borough of this city, including even Staten Island.

The year 1930 is generally fixed upon as the date, but it is probable some part of the supply will be available before that. The city authorities view this question largely from the side of New York's growth in population, and they estimate that by 1930 this city will number 7,000,000 souls, using daily 1,000,000,000 gallons of water, part of which will be supplied by the Croton system.

FRENCH CABINET IS UPHELD.

Deputies Give It Free Hand to Suppress Riots in South.

Paris, June 22.—By a majority of 104 the chamber of deputies Friday afternoon voted confidence in the government and gave the ministers a free hand to employ the measures they think best to establish the sovereignty of the law in the disturbed departments of the south.

After the terroristic events of Thursday the aspect of Narbonne Friday was comparatively calm. Soldiers were everywhere in such great force that the inhabitants were at least temporarily coerced into activity.

Two more regiments of infantry and two of cavalry arrived at Narbonne Friday morning and detachments of artillery are on their way there.

The receipt of a dispatch from Beziers later in the day, announcing that the mutinous battalion had decided to return to the rest of the regiment, caused decided satisfaction in official circles, as it was hoped that the action taken would head off any further open insubordination among the troops.

MAN CRAZED BY LIGHTNING.

Struck While in a Tree, He Loses His Reason.

Detroit, Mich., June 22.—Special dispatches tell of a severe electrical storm that passed over the lower peninsula of Michigan late Friday. At Kalamazoo Frank Stirner was struck by lightning while trimming a spruce tree. One of his shoes was torn off and he was badly burned about the body. The shock left him clinging to the branches of the tree bereft of his reason.

George Hawley, a farmer, was struck by lightning and killed while plowing in a corn field near Kalamazoo, and Mrs. Stephen Curtis was struck by lightning and killed while talking to her husband in their kitchen at Onaway, Cheboygan county. Mr. Curtis was stunned, but not seriously hurt.

LANDS CONVENTION COMES TO TAME END

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED ARE NOT SO RADICAL AS WAS EXPECTED.

Public Lands Declared Trust to Be Disposed of to Actual Settlers—Forest Reserves Commended—Letter from President.

Denver, Col., June 21.—The public land convention came to an end late Thursday afternoon with the adoption of a series of resolutions which were not so radical as expected. A letter from President Roosevelt was a feature of the day's session.

The resolution over which there was the most dispute read:

"We oppose any change in the existing laws and customs as to grazing livestock on the public domain, outside of forest reserves."

The resolutions say that experience has demonstrated the wisdom of the policy of treating the lands of the nation as a public trust to be disposed of in all cases and wherever possible to actual settlers. The people of the west are unalterably opposed to any change in this wholesome and beneficial policy. Forest reserves should only be created where they do not infringe this policy. In all cases the rights of the states and the people of the states to the free and unhampered use of all waters within forest reservations should be not only permitted but encouraged, and no charge should be imposed thereon.

Forest Reserves Necessary.

The necessity of forest reservations is recognized and reasonable regulations by the government commended. The resolutions, however, favor the prompt elimination from forest reservations of all lands not timbered or suitable for reforestation or reasonably necessary to conserve the flow of streams used for irrigation. It is especially urged that the reports of special and secret service agents of the land department and of the department of agriculture shall be made under oath. A modification of any existing orders which prevent bona fide filings on any of the public coal lands is demanded. The national irrigation law is heartily endorsed.

It is asked that congress legislate appropriately with respect to school lands in reservations so that each state deprived of these lands may receive its full quota of lands, or its equivalent, for the purpose for which they were originally intended.

It is finally demanded that in states wherein forest reserves are situated and not desired and are excessive, the reservation should be reduced to reasonable limits whether the land restored contains timber or not.

Letter from President.

Secretary Garfield made a long argument in support of the position assumed by his department. He read a letter from President Roosevelt, which was addressed to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson when it was expected he would be present at the convention. The letter, in part, follows:

"There has been placed in my hands a paper purporting to be issued by the program committee of the public lands convention to be held at Denver. The preliminary discussion of the general subject in this paper contains several statements to which I desire to call your especial attention, as they not merely misrepresent the attitude of the administration, but portray that attitude as the direct reverse of what it really is.

"The first and most important of these statements is to the effect that there has been a change in the public land policy of the government, which change will result in depriving the western states of the right to settle the public lands with citizens. This allegation directly reverses the actual facts. The government's course now pursued is to carry out the traditional homemaking policy of the United States as to its public lands. And the men most interested in opposing the action of the administration are endeavoring to upset the traditional course of the government and are doing all in their power to turn the public lands over to be exploited by rich men and powerful corporations whose interests are hostile to those of the homemakers."

WOMEN AS MOB LEADERS.

Six Arrested for Attempt to Lynch Man at Assumption, Ill.

Assumption, Ill., June 22.—Six women were arrested Friday on the charge that they were implicated in the attempt to lynch Alfred Bonland, a miner, last Monday night. Bonland was accused of being a bigamist. The woman who claimed to be his first wife was arrested charged with having been a mob leader. She was released later on her own recognizance under the condition that she remain away from Assumption. Bonland was tried recently and acquitted of the charge of bigamy.

The women arrested Friday were Mrs. Gus Dysart, Mrs. Prudent Rogers, Mrs. Paul Ducha, Mrs. Caroline Mowington, Mary Bndman and Mary Buboyce.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

New State Fair Buildings.

Hamline.—The State Fair grounds will be about the busiest place in this part of the state from now until the fair opens on Sept. 7 with the work laid out by the board of managers. Awards were made to the extent of $75,000, and other work was put in line for immediate commencement.

Most important was the main dairy building which is to be a handsome pressed brick structure, of very substantial construction and will stand on the eastern edge of the grounds near Snelling Avenue and beyond the present farm machinery building. As it is to be equipped with a mammoth refrigerator and completely lighted, the total cost will be several thousands more than the main contract.

Next comes the Poultry building which will be of pressed brick and will be very large in ground area though not as high in facade as some of the structures. The main idea is to secure space and light. It will stand on the now forty acres purchased this spring and north of the present machinery building.

The construction of these two buildings will force the farm machinery division of the fair further north and at the fair of 1907 it will extend from the present beginning near the grand stand quite to the extreme north end of the grounds.

$30,000 Paid in Wolf Bounties.

St. Paul.—Checks were sent out by the state auditor reimbursing the county auditors for the amount paid by them on state bounties aggregating $9,721.50. This makes about $20,000 which has been paid out by the state for wolf bounties since the beginning of the fiscal year on Aug. 1, 1906.

The largest amount paid to any county this time is $1,420 to Marshall county. The other counties receiving fair amounts were: Beltrami, $848.50; Otter Tail, $742.50; Roseau, $667.50 and Kittson, $607.50. Watonwan and Faribault counties came in for $3 each this being the smallest amount paid to any of the counties which has paid bounties. Ramsey county did not get anything, Hennepin got $132.50 and Washington $50, and St. Louis county $292.60.

Logger Drowned.

Sandstone.—Ben Elstad, a riverman, while loading logs here, accidentally fell off a log and although he was an experienced swimmer, he was drowned. He was only five feet from the boom. His brother, Mike and six other men were near when he fell, but they at first paid no attention to him, as it is a common occurrence for the men to fall off the logs. He rose to the surface and swam near enough to keep his nose above water, but he did not get nearer to the log. Mr. Joy noticed this and ordered to give him assistance with a pole, when without any outcry he went to the bottom and did not rise again. The body was recovered and shipped to Grantsburg, Elstad's home. The man was unmarried.

Saves Own Life.

Minneapolis—With his clothes covered with burning oil, David Clendenning saved his life by jumping into a large vat of water in the shops of the Northwestern Stove company, 312 Hennepin avenue. While other workmen Clendenning was boiling an oil preparation when it tipped over and the oil caught fire and was thrown to all parts of the room. Clendenning's clothes took fire, but his prompt action in plunging head first into the near-by vat prevented injury, although he lost both eyelashes and his moustache. The flames did slight damage to the building.

Lo and Dog in Grave.

Mankato.—Dr. R. M. Dodds of this city, while at Swan Lake, was presented with a number of relics that had just been found in an Indian grave. The grave was discovered by a farmer while plowing and contained the skeletons of an Indian and a dog, together with numerous articles in a good state of preservation. A peculiar shaped ax head was one of the things found. It was a custom of the Indians to bury the favorite dog and many of the hunting implements and other belongings with the dead braves, so that they would be prepared for the "happy hunting grounds."

Shot His Sister.

Owatonna.—Edith Gansewitz, the fifteen-year-old daughter of former State Senator Gansewitz, was shot and instantly killed by her brother, while on a holiday jaunt. The boy, who is fourteen years old, supposed the rifle was empty and pointed it at his sister and pressed the trigger. The ball struck the girl in the heart, causing instant death.

Crushed Under Wagon.

Hat Grand Rock.—Adolph Querin, he three-year-old son of Karl Querin, residing fifteen miles north of this place, met death in a terrible manner. An employee on the farm was starting to Onio with a load of grain. Adolph climbed on the load and was given a ride some distance from the residence. Then the driver told him to get off the rear of the wagon. After waiting a brief time the driver started up the team and stopped when the child screamed. The boy was found to be fatally crushed and died in half an hour.

Boy Loses Arm.

St. Paul.—Benjamin Soots, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Soots, while picking corn with a team in a large machine in the Blackhawk Linen mill at St. Paul Park, had his right hand caught in some knives in the machine. The rollers drew in the entire arm, so it was mangled and crushed the entire length before the boy was rescued. Dr. Crandall took the boy to St. Joseph's hospital, where the arm was amputated at the shoulder. The same machine caused the loss of part of an arm to an operative a few weeks ago and the loss of a finger to another a week ago.

NEWS NOTES.

Paynesville.—Edward Braden, the eight-year-old son of Mrs. Mary Braden of this village, was drowned in the Crow river near this place.

St. Paul.—Gov. Johnson appointed Joseph P. Bewley of Stillwater a member of the state board of equalization from the new Nineteenth judicial district.

Elk River.—The body of a men found in the river near here has been identified as that of Dan McCarthy, who was drowned March 26 at Watat working on a dam.

St. Paul.—Seventy-one members of the graduating class of the state university law school were admitted to the bar by the state supreme court. Chief Justice Start administering the oath.

Faribault.—Arthur Filler, sixteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Filler of this city, was drowned in Cannon Falls river while swimming. He was taken with cramps, and his comrades were unable to rescue him.

Minneapolis.—W. F. Bechtel, former president of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Company of Minneapolis, was found guilty of grand larceny in the first degree by a jury which had been out for twenty-eight hours.

Minneapolis.—Harry Burns, who tried to kill his sweetheart, Mabel Schroder, three weeks ago, after he had previously tried to commit suicide because she would not marry him, was given an indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary.

Sleepy Eye.—Henry Hummel, one of the engineers in the Sleepy Eye mill, while trying to lighten a belt, was caught in the machinery and mangled and then hurled forty feet. One leg was lacerated and an arm broken, and the outcome of the accident is uncertain.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota agricultural experiment station will undertake a number of experiments in killing wild mustard by spraying the field infected with a solution of sulphate of iron. Experiments will be conducted at Truman, Georgetown, Ada, Crookston, Warren and Kennedy.

Minneapolis.—John Kurch, who was run over and badly mangled by an engine at Tenth avenue south and Third street died in the city hospital. He was struck by an engine while stepping out of the way of another train. Both arms were amputated after the accident and he died from the shock.

St. Paul.—While riding in an automobile driven by Walter Hill, son of James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railway, Fred Schroeder, a liveryman, was accidentally killed by falling out of the automobile, the wheels of which ran over his head. It is thought Schroeder was seized with an attack of appoplexy.

Eveleth.—While a party of young men were out on the lake in a rowboat they intended to change places. The boat was overturned, but all managed to cling to the bottom. A gasoline launch picked up all of the party but Harold McNulty, who was taken with cramps and was drowned before assistance could reach him.

Star Lake.—Adolph Vogel, five years old, saved the life of his two-year-old brother, who had fallen into the lake and was in imminent danger of drowning. The little fellow had been playing out on a boat landing and fell into the lake about a rod from the shore. Clifford who witnessed the accident, waded out from the shore and succeeded in dragging the half-drowned youngster to dry land.

Brookston.—Two men and a boy were seriously injured by the premature explosion of dynamite with which they were blowing up stumps. The accident occurred on the Isaiah Orser homestead, near here. Orser and C. M. Rose, a neighbor, received injuries which will cause them to lose an eye apiece, while Orser's young son was badly hooked, but is not believed to be permanently injured. The injured were taken to a Duluth hospital for treatment.

St. Paul.—There are sixty-five cavalry horses being held in quarantine at Fort Snelling on account of fourteen suffering from equine scabies. This is an infectious disease, and which knocked him down and picked him about the head and face.

Orer, in St. Johns river near the country, in Idaho, ranged a wild and woolly bunch of long-haired cow punchers, whose knowledge of the world was confined mainly to trips after cattle into surrounding counties. into this reckless but withal community there came the smooth-tongued representative of a wild west show, who hired several cowboys at a high salary to take a hair-raising act, the chief feature being that they should appear to be thrown from their horses and dragged by the feet.

After they had practiced in a corral for a while one of them loosened himself and rising from the dirt, disheveled and dazed, inquired:

"Say, mister, ain't this rather dangerous? We might get killed."

"That's all right," chirped the show's representative cheerfully. "Your salary will go on just the same."—Lippincott's Magazine.

THE REORGANIZED NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The new Board of Trustees of the New York Life Insurance Company, chosen by the policyholders under the Armstrong laws, has taken charge of the company's affairs and has begun the work of reorganization.

In choosing the principal officers of the company, the Board has adhered to the idea that a life insurance company should be managed by life insurance men. The new president is Darwin P. Kingsley, a college bred man of good New England stock, who has been in the company's service in a variety of capacities for a period of nearly twenty years. In the parlance of life insurance, he "began with the rate book" and has advanced step by step to his present position.

The first vice president of the company is Thomas A. Buckner, who has served the company for more than a quarter of a century,—indeed has never had any other business connection.

Associated with these men are others long trained in the company's service, such as expert in his own department of work. Wm. E. Ingersoll, who has for many years had charge of the company's great interests in Europe, is one of the second vice presidents, and will continue at the head of the company's office in Paris.

Rufus W. Weeks, who has been in the company's service for nearly forty years, takes a part to Mr. Buckner as vice president, and continuous as chief actuary of the company.

The policyholders have expressed their belief in this company in no uncertain terms. The upheaval in life insurances within the last two years has resulted to a great deal of misunderstanding and policyholders, alarmed on hints which were not very definite to them, have been disposed to give up their contracts at a heavy sacrifice. This has not been true in the New York Life to any great extent. The company had $3,000,000,000 insurance on its books when the life insurance investigation began, and while the laws of the State of New York allow a 10 percent any company to write over $150,000,000 a year (which is about one-half the New York Life actually did), the company's outstanding business still exceeds $2,000,000,000.

Policyholders generally will be still further reassured by this action of the Board, as it places at the head of the company to protect their interests one of thorough training and unexception-able character.

Injury from Mosquitoes.

New Jersey has many places ideal in situation and accessibility, and such place developed rapidly to a certain point and there it stood, halted by the mosquitoes that formed in the surrounding marsh lands. Country club, golf, tennis and other attractions ceased to attract when attention was necessarily focused on the biting or stinging pests that intruded everywhere, and the tendency was to commut. But the owners were not ready to quit without a fight, and an improvement association was formed which consulted with my office and followed my advice. In one year the bulk of the breeding area was drained, mosquitoes have since been absent almost entirely; one gentleman, not a large owner, states that his property had increased $50,000 in value, and new settlers began to come in. This year one of the worst breeding areas of the olden day was used as a camping ground, and 100 new residences are planned for next year.—Prof. John B. Smith, in the Popular Science Monthly.

But, They Had Not.

At a political meeting the chairman asked at the close if any candidate's speech whether "any gintis man has anny question to ask?"

Some one rose and propounded an inquiry mildly critical of the prevailing political belief. A politician, he said, waved a club and struck him on the floor. The chairman looked round and asked quietly: "Anny other gintleman a question to ask?"

Advanced.

"Hiram," said Mrs. Kornkob to her husband, who was reading the Weekly Screech, "they say that Jones man who has taken the farm next to ours is mighty intellectual."

"I guess he is," replied Farmer Kornkob. "He knows four different almanacs by heart."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

And Willing.

William was the good boy. He was studious-and-modest, and economical.

He went into business, and by hard work and much self-denial at last acquired a modest competency.

George was a gay, careless, easy-going fellow, who never applied himself seriously to anything, but enjoyed life as he went along.

One day, however, when he had nothing else to do, he invented a mouse trap. It was a simple little affair, but operated on a new principle, and was different from any other trap in use.

He showed it to his brother Will Him.

"Bill," he said, "if you will lend me money enough to patent this thing and put it on the market I'll divide all the profits equally with you."

"Bill," answered William, glancing carelessly at the trap: "There's nothing in it."

Thus repulsed, George went to a shrewd capitalist, who at once invested $5,000 in his invention.

And lost every cent of it.

William was right.—Chicago Tribune.

To Remove the Temptation.

"It is easy to see what ails you, Ferguson," said his family physician, after a brief examination. "You are smoking too many cigars. You will have to quit the habit entirely, or you will be a nervous wreck."

"I'll do it, doctor," said Mr. Ferguson, "although that comes pretty tough. I've been just laid in a box of perfectos. Is there anything else you want me to do?"

"Yes. Eat plenty of nourishing food and spend as much time as possible in the open air. By the way, Ferguson, there is no reason why those cigars should go to waste. You may send them to me."—Chicago Tribune.

An Important Discovery.

"My wife," he remarked, "has made a very important discovery."

"Indeed," said his companion, "what is it, sir?"

"A new substance that is apparently indestructible."

His companion recalled the fact that the wife had been a professor of natural science at one time in her college, and inquired if she had been long at work upon the invention.

"No," he replied, "and it came about quite by accident. She was trying to make a sponge cake."—The Royel.

His Business.

"And what are you in for?" asked the kind old lady, stopping before cell 476.

"Alas, mum," replied Davy the Dip with a sigh, "it was all because I was tryin' to get up in the world."

"You poor man. And what was your line of work?"

"I was a porch climber, mum."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

EDNA MAY MARRIED

ACTRESS BECOMES BRIDE OF YOUNG MILLIONAIRE

Rise of American Girl, Who for Years Has Been Idol of London Theater-Goers, from Back Row of Chorus.

London.—Edna May, the American actress, was married the other day at the registry office at Windsor to Oscar Lewisohn, son of Adolph Lewisohn of New York, in the presence of a few relatives and intimate friends. The honeymoon will be passed in a motoring tour on the continent.

Edna May, now Mrs. Oscar Lewisohn, has probably been the most talked-about and written-about young woman who ever won her way from the back row of the chorus to the spotlight of popularity on two continents. It was about 1897 that a slip of a girl came to New York and applied to George Lederer for a position in the Casino chorus. No one knew her. She had no backing and no backer. She came from Syracuse, where she had been born probably 17 years before. Her name was Pettie, and her father, Edgar G. Pettie, was a letter carrier. She was winsome and demure, and after the rehearsals she tried her voice he put her on the "waiting list" which meant that she could attend all the rehearsals, stand up on all the music and then, possibly, get a position at $12 a week in the back row of the chorus. After a few weeks she secured the position at the back of the stage. After a lot more hard work and waiting she was promoted to the second row and then received $15 a week.

Then came her opportunity. Mr. Lederer put "The Belle of New York" on the stage, and Miss May was cast for the supposedly secondary part of the Salvation Army Maid. But from the rising of the curtain she charmed little maid in the poke bonnet became the star of the play. The musical comedy ran for months, and Edna May continued to increase her popularity.

While both she and the comedy were at the height of their popularity Mr. Lederer decided to transplant both to London. And in the English capital her success was even greater than in New York. Her pictures appeared in all the shop windows; jewels and flowers were tossed to her on the stage; a South African mining company presented her with shares that were worth over $25,000 in real money; the prince of Wales was introduced to her; her engagement was reported to half the British peerage; she wrote o book that was published and she was constantly seen in company with dukes, duchesses and members of the lesser nobility. The cablegrams declared that she was undismayed by all the attentions showered on her and that she remained sweet, demure and winsome, which won her as many admirers among the women as among the men.

Shortly after her first success she was married to Fred Ryan, a bicycle rider, but their life was not happy together, and after a few years she got a divorce in this city. Then later went on the stage and married again.

The little songstress, notwithstanding her popularity among the "Johnnies," kept her name singularly free from scandal. In 1902, however, the cables told that she had been named as a corespondent by Countess De la Warr in her petition for divorce, but the charge was indignantly denied and was never proved.

Many times she was reported engaged to young Cavendish, heir presumptive to the dukedom of Devonshire. There was no doubt of the devotion of young Cavendish, but nothing ever came of the rumors of marriage.

Rumors of engagements to many men of prominence both in England and this country were matter for gossip from time to time, but each was successively denied. These rumors only served to keep the little Americano, who had been called the "London-faced ingenue," prominently before the theater-going public, and her salary jumped from $15 a week to $200, and in recent years she has lived like o princess in London and her fashionable suburb.

Miss May has returned to America several times, but her greatest popularity has been on "the other side."

Oscar Lewisohn is about 25 years old, e graduate of Harvard, and reputed to be very wealthy.

NEW USE FOR EIFFEL TOWER.

Wireless Messages Sent from There Over Long Distances.

Paris.—Recent experiments with a wireless telegraph installation on the Eiffel tower gave extraordinary evidence of the great distances covered by the Hertian waves. The operators at the tower were sending a message to Bizerta, Tripoli Yenadyre, 700 kilometers away, and found to their amazement that the same message was received at Bizerta, 1,425 kilometers away. This is the more remarkable when it is remembered that the Eiffel tower is by no means a perfect station for long-distance work, and that the receiving instrument at Bizerta was supposed to be capable of receiving only the waves from a comparatively short distance.

The guard room at police headquarters is becoming the tethering place for dogs, says the Springfield Union. A handsome collie followed four women down street last evening and when they got inside they told him to take him back home, they brought him into police headquarters and asked that he be taken home by a policeman. One of the women, who lives in State street, owns the dog, and she explained that she was on her way to a whist party and couldn't go back home with the dog because she might miss "a couple of hands of whist at the party."

The dog remained in the quarters till the woman came after it late last night.

ADMIRAL COGHLAN RETIRES.

Officer Who Fought with Dewey at Manila Leaves Service.

New York.—Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan has retired from the service and has command of the Brooklyn navy yard. He was succeeded by Rear Admiral Casper F. Goodrich. Admiral Coghlan's retirement for age occurred months ago, but owing to important work in hand he was requested to remain at the yard for a time longer. He will live in New York for the present.

Admiral Coghlan was with Dewey in the battle of Manila bay and has a splendid naval record. He acted as toastmaster at after dinner speaker. He acquired a rather dubious fame a few years ago by reciting at a dinner a German dialect poem entitled "Hoch der Kaiser," in which Emperor Wilhelm was ridiculed as coasidering himself the most important men on earth.

Admiral Goodrich is one of the best known officers of the navy, and has held more important positions, perhaps, than any other officer in the service. He has the distinction of having the ordeal when the Olympia was shot in the engagements around Santiago de Cuba, and he also fought the last great land engagement of the navy with Spain, that in front of Manzanillo. He was appointed to Annapolis from Connecticut in December, 1861.

Rear Admiral Coghlan declares if he had his life to go over again he would reenter the United States navy; that it is the finest organization of its kind in the world, and that it holds out greater inducements to the young men of this country than does the navy of any other nation.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Thief River Falls editors got re-enforced by the addition of Joe Duchamp, T.S. Jacobson, and PRESIDENT Jim O'Brien, and their record is DUN, DUN, DUN, and THE SUNBEAM comes out just the same.

A farmer who sells out as old age approaches and goes to town to live, generly makes a mistake. So long as a man is living on his own farm he is respected in the community. He is made to feel that he is one of the substantial men and is welcome everywhere, but when he moves to town, he is classed with the pinching, penurious sort. Who haven't a dollar to spend and are of no use to themselves or to the community. Men don't get old like they used to; it isn't fashionable any more.

Fire Them Out.

At a boat meeting of the boat company on last Saturday evening, a disnute arose between T.S. Jacobson and Jim O'Brien, about which one went out to get the bottle to sober up on in the morning, at the time they were down collecting for the Company, and bolping John Eastman to draw up resolutions about Hunt and THE SUNBEAM.

It appears they slept in the same room and after they went to bed their thirst overpowered them to such an extent that they had to have just one pint more, so one of them had to go to the saloon and get it, and which one went was what they were disputing about last Saturday night, as it made some difference with the settlement with the company, which one went. It may be surprised by respopible people that they were in this wim the next morning to help John fix up resolutions about Hunt and THE SUNBEAM.

Such men are a disgrace to any respectable company and the sooner they are given an opportunity to go way back and sit down, the better it will be for the company, then they can again their resolutions for John as its President and Secretary of the Red Lake River Transportation Company.

He Got One Vote:

At the boat meeting last Saturday evening, August J. Wentzel was elected for Clerk of the new boat Highlanding Sunbeam. The elder Hanson was chosen as pilot and young Hanson as engineer, and D. Kolstrand for the man. We are of the opinion that it would have been hard to find a set of men more fitted for their different positions than those elected.

James O'Brien received one vote for clerk of the boat, and as he has been, up to the present time a member of the Board of Directors, it is easy to see where the vote came from, but we will do Mr. O'Brien the justice to say that if he had taken a little time to consider the matter he would not have voted for himself.

We ask the indulgence of our readers for devoting so much of our space to the Red Lake River Transportation Company this week, but will say in conclusion that we call take the three to-wit James O'Brien, T. S. Jacobson, Joseph Duchamp, and their record is, (excuse us for quotation John, but you are a pretty fair editor) "FINE, SWELL, FRIEND," and the Red Lake River Transportation Company shines as a monument over the graves of the schemers, to the honor of Hunt.

The attorneys in the county seat removal case are to have another inning next Monday. Of course the people can be spectators but it is quite an expensive show for the tax payers to take in, but they have no choice in the matter as there is no admission fee to come in but they will have to "dig" before they get out.

To The Legal Voters Of Red Lake County.

Notice is hereby given, that a petition is on file, in my office, signed by legal voters of said County to the number of two thousand three hundred and forty two praying that the county seat of said county of Red Lake be changed to the City of Thief River Falls in said county, and that a special meeting of the county board will be held at the court house in the city of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake County, Minnesota, on Monday, the 1st day of July, A.D. 1907, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, to consider said petition, at which time and place any legal voter of said county may appear, in person or by counsel, and be heard.

Dated June 11th, A.D. 1907.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Do your Notary Public business at the SUNBEAM office.

Mark's Lung Balsam with tar, will cure your cough.

Thief River Falls will celebrate the 4th of July.

Applications to make your final proof are written out free, at this office.

FOR SALE, 20 cords of wood, by James Colman, Sunbeam Landing.

Dan Patch passed up river yesterday on their way to Little Oak.

Nels Olson from Garnes is doing carpenter work for Walt McAndress this week.

Ole Overum and Alfred Manfierstein were down to Thief River Falls, and returned Saturday.

C. L. Clark and Jim Colman made a flying business trip to Thief River Falls and returned Tuesday.

Andrew Ellingson has his ferry running now in good shape, but there is no road to it from the south side yet.

We had another refreshing rain storm on Friday evening last, which has kept the grain and grass jumping upward.

Walt McAndress took last Friday's boat to Thief River Falls to order some extra lumber for his new house returning by team Saturday.

We are having our share of trouble fixing our roads this week as there is no repairing to do but all new ones to make through the wilderness.

Hay will be rather late this year, as the grass got such a late start this spring that it will not be big enough for hay until the latter part of July.

T. S. Dale has just bought one of them high grade De Laval cream separators of Carpenter and Webster the McIntosh dealers, and will now ship cream to Thief River Falls by boat.

Mostrom Bros. of Hilda passed by here Sunday with a big raft of oak bridge planks which they were selling to the townships. The lumber was first class oak well sawed and good timber.

Andrew Ellingson received notice last week that he had been awarded the contract to carry mail from Hilda to Highlanding. He will employ Liot Sigvadson as his carrier, for the present.

We are going to celebrate the 4th at Rhoda with our Deer Park friends and as there is nothing doing in Highlanding this year, we suppose others up this way will take in the big ball at Rhoda.

The New steam boat was to be ready by July 4th, but there seems to be another hitch in the thing, but it will certainly be ready for shipping the fall crop but if it should may be ready for next spring.

We can not find out where our township's share of the money appropriated by the state for roads and bridges went to, but Highlanding township needs their share as much as any of the rest of them and we propose to give the matter a little attention and find out what has become of the dee.

M. E. Hyland will finish his mail contract with the government tomorrow, and C. L. Clark will carry the mail on this route from Sunbeam to Lillo after July 1st. Mr. Hyland has performed first class work as carrier, and has not missed a trip since he made his contract, rain, snow, or sunshine, good roads, or bad roads, Mcdrin and Eddie have brought the mail through regular and have certainly done creditable work for the government and given good service to the patrons of the offices served on.

And he will have to holler Ex President next week.

Eddie Hyland is grubbing and doing road work here this week for W. G. Hunt.

Jim Colman was taking some snap shot views of Sunbeam and vicinity Wednesday.

Mrs. A. W. Shosten had the misfortune to loose a valuable work horse last week.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Sullivan and Miss Mary Sullivan, May and Stella Arndt drove up to the big city of Brunkeberg last Sunday afternoon.

It is reported that quite a large number of the voters up this way withdrew their names from the Thief River Falls county seat removal petition.

The Dan Patch will be run as an excursion boat July 4th up to Hilda and return. The charges from Sunbeam to Hilda and return are to be 50 cts.

Stephen Singer of Rhoda made this office a pleasant call Wednesday afternoon. He says the people down there are making big preparations for their 4th of July celebration.

Perhaps now that Jacobson and Jim are out of the Red Lake River Transportation Company they might get a job of signing resolutions for John Eastman as Ex Secretary and President.

Rev. E. A. Moetue of Deer Park passed by here yesterday morning on his way to Grafton N. D. He has some farming interests out there to look after and expects to be absent for about to week.

NOTICE. It has been reported by some parties to injure his business, that Dr. J. E. Engstad of Grand Forks, had removed to Minneapolis. There is no truth in this statement as Dr. Engstad is still located in Grand Forks, and should he at some future time remove to Minneapolis, announcement of the fact will be made in the papers.

James O'Brien was fired bodily as President, and Peter C. Weld was unanimously elected to fill vacancy, and now things are running smoothly and harmoniously again in the company and it can be said to be the close of round 2nd of John Eastman and charge on the office of THE SUNBEAM.

When he makes another one he will have to raise a new army of raw recruits as the last one he had has been completely rooted.

At the meeting of the directors of the Red Lake River Transportation Co. last night, Wm. A. Swanson and Alfred Swanson were elected to fill vacancys on the board of Directors caused by the resignation of D. Kolstrand and Angust Wentzel, who resigned as members of the board to fill their positions on the new steam boat. Ole Howard was elected for Treasurer to fill vacancy, caused by the resignation of Mr. Wentzel.

There is to be a 4th of July celebration at Rhoda with a full program of an old fashioned celebration, a large bowery is being constructed, where there will be a ball afternoon and evening, an oration will be delivered in the forenoon and a programe of sports in the afternoon, with a grand display of fire works in the evening. As this is the only place there will be any doings in this immediate locality; let every one turn out and enjoy themselves for a day.

We recieved the sad news this week that Kristi Lovejahl of Gully died of consumption last week. Chris was a very bright young man and highly respected by all who know him and his early death is a severe blow to his relatives and friends. He had an attack of Typhoid fever last fall which later turned into consumption, and although he went to St. Paul to take treatment by a specialist, he recieved no benefit and the end came last week.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After all ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus forthwith sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little beef-tea or thick flour gruel is taken.

Not Housewarming.

"But," said the persistent suitor, "if I were to prove to you that I would go to the ends of the earth for you—"

"Then," replied the Boston girl, "you would have to prove to me that the earth really has ends, and that, you know, is quite impossible."—Philadelphia Press.

Ending a Tyranny

By J. L. Harbour

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

A little old man with stooping shoulders stood before the door to Maria Fay's kitchen, washing dishes.

Suddenly a high-pitched, strident voice came down to him from the open door of the stairway leading from the kitchen to the rooms above.

"Pa!" screamed the voice.

"Yes, M'ri!."

"You got them dishes done yet?"

"Just shout; hm! I've got the skillets to wash yet."

"Seems to me you're turrible pottery this morning."

"There was more dishes to wash than common, M'ri!," replied the old man, in a gently deprecating tone.

"Well, finish 'am up just as soon as you can, and then mop up the kitchen floor and give the dining room a real brisk sweepin'. We must start in on our reg'lar housecleanin' next week."

A suggestion of a frown came into the old man's ruddy face. His hated housework, and his aversion to housecleaning amounted to real loathing. Maria prided herself on her thoroughness, and her warfare against dust and dirt was fierce and noncompromising. When her mother died, Maria had promptly decreed that she and her family should live with Pa. The old man's mild objections had been roughly overridden, and for less than a week after her mother's death Maria and her husband and their four noisy, unlovely children had invaded the old man's home, his house being larger and better than the home of the Pennys.

From the day of Maria's arrival in his home Pa had been "set aside" so far as his authority had been concerned. A men of e gentle and yielding spirit, who loved peace and harmony in his home, he had felt that it would be better to yield to the domineering Maria than to be in a state of constant contention—which is what he called it—with her. His rebelled in spirit when Maria decreed that he was now too old to be at the head of the farm work.

One day e telegram ceeing telling Silas Penny of the death of his father in a town 50 miles distant, and Maria and Silas departed to attend the funeral. Silas, like Maria, was an only child, and when he came home he brought his mother with him. She had felt that it would be better for her to remain in her own home, as she was a woman of but 65 years and to excellent health. But Silas had protested that it would be better for her to "break up" and make her home with him. He had already figured it out, with the help of Maria, that it would be cheaper to have her live with him, for her small farm could then be rented and his mother could "save up" the money and thus increase the amount of the estate Silas was to receive when she died.

Pa's sympathy went out to Lucinda Penny, the moment he knew that she was to be on inmate of her son's home, and before a week had passed Lucinda had come to the definite opinion that it was a "burning shame" the way Pa had to work, to "make his keep," for his daughter. Naturally enough, the old couple soon began to give voice to their sympathy for each other and to bewail the cruel decree of fate that had placed them in their unhappy positions.

Thus a year passed, and Maria had grown more tyrannical than ever, and Silas grumbled openly if his mother spent any of her small income. Lucinda bore her unhappy lot in silence, and only she knew of the tears she shed in the secrecy of the poor little room in the attic to which she had been relegated by Maria. Pa was her only confident.

One day Silas and Maria announced their intention of taking their children the following week and driving over to Penrose, 20 miles distant, to spend several days with a cousin of Maria's named Hugh Ray.

"I reckon, Mother, that you and Pa could do for yourselves a few days, couldn't you?" asked Maria at the breakfast table.

"I should think likely," said Pa before Lucinda could reply, and then he added, with grim sarcasm: "Of course we're poor, weak critters, who can't do much more than crawl to our woodpile and carpet loom, but I reckon we might skeer up strength enough to skirmish around and git us a bite to eat, feeble and worthless as we are."

Marie's face flushed, and Silas frowned and made a serious stab at a slice of bread with his fork, but, although he would not admit it, he had a wholesome fear of his father-in-law and did not care to cross swords with him.

Almost numberless were the commands as to the things they must and must not do given to Lucinda and Pa by Maria and Silas the morning they left home.

The moment the wagon containing Silas and his family started from the barnyard e humorous twinkle came into the wrinkled face of Pa, and he shook one fist after the retreating family and said:

"Scat!"

"Scat!"

Then he turned to Lucinda and said gayly:

"When the cat's away the mice will play.' Not e deroed thing they told me to do while they was gone am I going to do! Nor you shan't do a thing they told you to do, Lucindy!"

They were like a pair of children freed from irksome parental restraint. Pe put on his apron and helped to prepare the dinner. Now and then his cracked voice rose in snatches of merry song. His spirits were at highide when they sat down to the table set between the two front windows where sunshine flooded the room.

"This is great, Lucindy! I feel as if I was about 20 years old. I reckon that if M'ri' and Si' could see us now they'd feel that they'd no cause to worry 'bout us not being able to take keer of ourselves."

Suddenly he dropped his knife and fork, brought his two calloused palms together with e resounding clap, jumped to his feet and said:

"Good Lord!"

"Why, what is it, Pa Allen?" asked Lucindy.

"This!" he cried, running to her side and putting one arm around the back of her chair, while he leaned over her and said eagerly and rapidly:

"Lucinde! why can't we keep this up right along? Why not? Listen to me! This house is mine—mine. This farm is mine. By ev'ry law of right it should be mine to do as I please with while I live. I spent the best years of my life toiling to earn it. It is wrong, wrong, wrong that my home should be invaded in this way, my just rights ignored. And it is equally wrong that you should have been made to give up your own home and to be situated as you are. It is all wrong, and for it to force us to submit to it. Lucinda, you have lived more than a year in this house with me, and you know that I love peace and that I em e well disposed man. You wouldn't be afraid to trust your happiness to my keeping, now would you, Lucindy?"

She looked up at him and said frankly:

"No, I would not."

"Nor would I be afraid to trust my happiness to you after what I've seen of your kind and gentle ways. Lucinde, we're not such very old people. We may have many years of life before us, and we have the right to make them happy and peaceful years. Why never can be that under the rule of our children, who have no right to run over us. Marry me, Lucinda! Let us be one—this very day! I'll hitch up after dinner and we can drive over to Elder Penfield's end come back man and wife!"

"I—I—why, it, don't seem as if I could, Pa Pe Allen."

"Yes, you do now! You got to!"

The bridal pair were standing at the gateway of their home when

He Walked Into the House with His Arm Around Lucinda's Waist.

Silas and his family returned three days later. Maria's keen eye was quick to note the triumphant look on her father's face, and the unwonted and apparently defiant air with which he held up his head. She noted that he held Lucinda's hand in his, and that Lucinda also held her head high and looked fearlessly into the face of Silas. The moment the wagon came to a standstill, Pa said without a tremor in his voice:

"You needn't git out any of you. You'll find everything you brought to this house and even more in your own house down the road. I carried them there while you were gone. They should never have been taken away, and brought here. This house and all that's in it is mine—mine and Lucindy's, and—"

Maria and Silas had alighted from the wagon and stood, with their baggage in hand, just outside the gateway ready to enter.

"In the name of sense," began Marie; but her father threw up his hand with the warning gesture she knew she must heed, and added:

"Silence, M'ri! We have no reproaches for any one upon you; we have no hard feelings even. We are too happy for that. We're just as happy as a pair of birds and bridegroom should be. Yes, we're bride and bridegroom. Better hurry on home now, for it looks like real shower."

He walked into the house with his arm around Lucinda's waist and a radiant smile on his wrinkled face, while Silas and Maria, dazed into speechlessness, drove on to their own home, writhing under a deserved sense of utter defeat.

The gown on the standing figure is of champagne colored tussah silk. The skirt is slightly gathered at the top and finished at the bottom with a wide band of the material, above which are rows of light blue galons. The tablier is of flat guipure and appears to extend over the front of the corsage. The corsage is finished around the neck with a band of the blue panne, the ends crossed in front and ornamented with the passementerie motifs and jewels. The chemisette is of lace; and girdle is of the blue panne, fastened in front with a buckle.

The skirt of the other costume is of striped mousseline voile made with groups of plaits in the middle at the front and back and finished at the bottom with a flounce set on in blocks in front.

The bolero, something new and very complicated, is of cerise silk. It forms straps at the bottom which pass from the plaits in front underneath motifs of velvet and embroidery. They are slashed open on the outside, where they are bordered with little puffings of lisse on mousseline de noie. They are finished at the bottom with plaits and straps, the letter ornamented with tassels, as are those on the bottom.

The double shawl collar is trimmed with a strep of the material which is ornamented with embroidery and edged with velvet. The chemisette is of lisse or mousseline de soie tucked crosswise in the middle, the tucks opening out on each side. The girdle is of taffeta.

FOR REDUCTION OF FLESH.

Exercise That Will Bring About Desired Symmetry.

Massage can be of great use in the reduction of the abdomen and hips. The exercise about to be described is highly recommended by one who has had much experience in giving and directing exercises for fleshy reduction and the improvement of bodily symmetry. When beginning it one should be careful to get used to it gradually, as it puts a great strain upon the muscles and is apt to make one quite lame, the same as the first horseback ride. One should be extended upon the floor supporting oneself by one hand, while the other is placed upon the hip. While holding this position raise the body gradually from the floor until the whole weight is supported by the hands and feet. It is easy to get the body from the floor as far as the knees, but to bring it to the full position just described is not easy at first. It should be tried first on one side and then on the other.

A good exercise for the reduction of the abdomen is that of throwing the heads above the feet with the palms outward, the arms extended, and the body thrown back as much as possible and then, bending forward at the waist, keeping the knees straight and trying to touch the floor with the fingers. It is difficult to do without bending the knees.

The following exercise is much easier and is effective. One lies extended full length upon the floor, with the feet together and the arms folded upon the breast. Raise, first one leg, stiffly extended, and then the other. This will strengthen the muscles of the lower extremities. The third movement, which is simple, is to bring the legs, kept closely together, into a position as nearly as possible at right angles with the body.

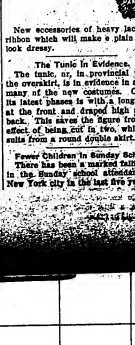
It takes some time to describe these exercises, but after they have been learned it will not take long to do them; each should be repeated a certain number of times daily.

The great point in order to attain beneficial results is to be faithful in keeping them up persistently.

WALKING SUITS OF LINEN.

Made Very Attractive in All Kinds of Designs.

Attractive walking suits are developed in striped linens, a novel effect being produced when the stripes run around. This is very pretty when the stripes are inconspicuous, preferably of two or three tones rather than a mixture of colors. The skirt is then kilted; the narrow plaits are more effective and, if one wishes the latest thing, the coat, jacket or blouse with he of a plain color matching the shade most prominent in the plaid. An attractive plaid in a blue and green, in which the two colors shaded and united into each other imperfectly was the foundation of e recent importation. The plaits in the skirt all turned toward the front, which was formed of a box pleit, very narrow at the top, and the coat was a jaunty little affair of dark blue and green changeeble cloth—made in Eton form with epaulettes, revers and collar cut in one and forming a narrow yoke piece, to which the blouse material was gathered. The Eton fastened down the front with cord and loops and buttons, and the bottom was finished with e shaped piece which, like the yoke and front piece, was piped with blue silk and machine-stitched. The girdle of blue silk to match the plaids was drawn through an oval-shaped buckle of dull gold.



Word About New Belts.

The belts of the season! One pauses to contemplate, but to pause too long is to become bewildered by the variety and winsomeness of the designs and styles offered. A narrow belt of black patent leather clasped with a modest pearl or brass buckle is quite as fashionable as the wider and more expensive belt of seal equipped with gold buckle, or the wide steel studded belt of black elastic, the adoption of which by smart dressers promises to insure an elastic belt furore by the time summer arrives.

Checks and Stripes.

Although many fancy suitings are being used, there is no doubt whatever that plain colorings in the tailor-made gowns hold the land. In fancy effects checks predominate, the gray and white and black and white stripes and checks being in the lead.

DRESS ACCESSORIES.

New accessories of heavy lace and ribbon which will make e plain waist look dressy.

The Tunic in Evidence.

The tunic, or, in provincial terms, the overskirt, is in evidence in a good many of the new costumes. One of its latest phases is with a long point at the front and draped high at the back. This saves the figure from the effect of being cut in two, which results from a round dribble skirt.

Fewer Children in Sunday School.

There has been a marked falling off in the Sunday school attendance in New York city in the last five years.

NERVOUS COLLAPSE

IS OFTEN PREVENTED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Taken When the First Warning Symptoms Are Noticed Much Needless Suffering May Be Saved.

Are you troubled with pallor, loss of spirits, waves of heat passing over the body, shortness of breath after slight exertion, a peculiar slipping of the heart beat, poor blood, cold extremities or a feeling of weight and fullness? Do not make the mistake of thinking that these are diseases in themselves and be satisfied with temporary relief.

This is the way the nerves give warning that they are breaking down. It simply means that the blood has become impure and cannot carry enough nourishment to the nerves to keep them healthy and able to do their work.

Heed, along, will sometimes give the needed relief. The tonic treatment by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, however, prevents the final breakdown of the nerves and the more serious disease which follow, because the pills act directly upon the impure blood, making it rich, red and pure.

Mrs. E. C. Bradley, of 103 Parsells Avenue, Rochester, N. Y., says:

"I was never very healthy and some years ago when in a run-down condition, I suffered a serious shock, caused by a misfortune to a friend. It was so great that I was nutified for work.

"I was just weak, low-spirited and nervous. I could hardly walk and could not bear the least noise. My appetite was poor and I did not care for food. I couldn't sleep well and once for two weeks got scarcely an hour's sleep. I had severe headaches most of the time and pains in the back and spine.

"I was treated by two doctors, being under the care of one of them for six months. I got no relief and then decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I soon began to feel better and the improvement was general. My appetite became hearty and my sleep better. The headaches all left and also the pains in my back. A few more boxes entirely cured me and I was able to go back to work. I felt splendid and although I had never been sick."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are invaluable in such diseases as rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance and even partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Historic Island for Sale.

Rassay island, in the inner Hebrides, which lies between the mainland of Scotland and the Isle of Skye, has failed to find a purchaser at the upset price of $125,000 placed upon it. Its name is the Scandinavian for "the island of the roe deer," and the shootings, with the ruinous house and grounds of the southern end, constitute the chief value of the island. Near the northern end are the ruins of Brochet castle, the residence of its ancient chiefs, the MacLeods. At one time Rassay has a place not in England literature it is mentioned in Boswell's "Journey" to the Western Islands of Scotland."

Good for Evil.

Ooe Sunday e teecher was trying to illustrate to her small girls the "Return good for evil." To make it practicel she said:

"Suppose, children, one of your little playmates should strike you, and the next day you should bring him an apple—that would be one way of returning good for evil."

To her dismay one of the little girls spoke up quickly:

"Then he would strike you again to get another apple!"

A Lesson of the Fourth

W. D. Nesbit.

The red firecracker in her hand—(Beside her lips 'twas duller.
"Twas in her hand, you understand;
I bet compare the color.)
A frown was on her gentle brow;
"Be careful, please!" I shouted.
"Best let an expert show you how."
"Just, like a man!" she pouted.

"Firecrackers are," I gravely said,
"Alike with risk and danger.
They strike at the devoted head
Of friend, or passing stranger.
They must be handled with dispatch
Or all the risk is doubled.
First, one must try to find a match."
"Just like a man," she bubbled.

"You light the match and touch the fuse
And when it is ignited—"
She seemed to tremble in her shoes,
But said she was delighted;
That this was quite the best of jerks—
"See how the fire has wrigled Until by turns it flames, then sparks."
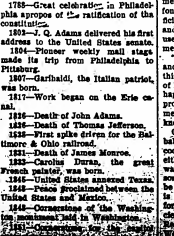
"Just like a man!" she giggled.

I held the cracker, while her eyes
Grew wide and wide with wonder.
I said: "In this one must be wise
And not make upon the order.
Observe, now, that I hit it drop
Just when the flame was gliuted
Close to the charge. Now I will pop."
"Just like a man!" she hinted.

MAKING FIREWORKS

IT HAS DEVELOPED INTO A BIG AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

And It Has All Been Worked Out from the Ancient Chinese Firecracker — How They Are Made.



The manufacture of fireworks has developed from an imitation of the Chinese firecracker to an industry of vast proportions in the United States. Also from the humble and comparatively harmless cracker, the product has been developed along the most complex yet scientific lines until the master of ceremonies at a full fledged modern fireworks exhibit must needs be a man with a comprehensive knowledge of the explosives he is handling.

The Chinaman, having invented gunpowder a few thousand years before it came into use in the western world, invented the firecracker so long ago that the incident of its birth has been lost in the shuffle of history, but, curiously enough, the Chinaman in this respect has stood at the initial point of development, as he has in every else that pertains to his life. He still makes good firecrackers, the size and of the same model and power as he has used for hundreds of years. The American, having stolen the idea, proceeded to develop it along lines truly indicative of the American character —flamboyant, pyrotechnic and real. The Chinese cracker is a small affair, considerably more so than the cracker to buy which the average child in the gray dawn carrying water to the elephant, but at Chinese New Year's and other festival times a string of their firecrackers suspended from the end of a bamboo pole will explode—many of them—and there will be no "sizzlers" nor blanks found in the string. Which goes to show that the hand-made Chinese article is still honestly made and that, western methods of cheap machine manufacture have not invaded the cradle of the firecracker.

But as all things American have developed to prodigious proportions, leaving in the past the memory of simplicity, so the firecracker of history each year finds a smaller place in the demonstrations of America. Instead there have come the rocket, the bomb, the set piece and the appliances for pouring forth torrents and volcanoes of multi-colored fire. It is the manufacture of these goods that has grown to such size and commercial consequence.

The preliminary in the manufacture of nearly all fireworks is the making of the case. The quality of paper varies from the commonest strawboard to the finest bank note paper. Cases for skyrockets require a fine grade of paper called rope board. The paper is first pasted and then rolled over a mandrel. The drying process takes four or five days and the case then is ready for for charging. They vary from two to 20 inches in length and from one-quarter of an inch to two inches in diameter. The loading of skyrockets, up in the last four or five years, has been done by hand, but the machine now takes the place of the hand loader. A spindle placed in the center of the case causes a cavity as the material is packed in around it. The materials are powdered, then, dampened down until it is of rock-like hardness and then the spindle is withdrawn. When the rocket is fired the large surface of material in the spindle cavity, catches fire at once, causing a tremendous pressure of gas which pours out of the spindle cavity, causing the rocket to shoot skyward. The colored stars, which form the head of the rocket or bomb, are composed as follows: Red, nitrate of lime, chloride of potash and shellac; green, nitrate of baryta; yellow, oxalate of soda. Purple and blue are composed of various proportions of copper, while the making of the other tints are trade secrets.

The "Indian chief" is started in the following way: Many lay figures are placed on platforms, each one with a fuse connecting with a fuse leading to the ground. The fuses are lighted in succession, and the figures, one after another, disappear in a cloud of smoke and flame.

EXAMPLE OF TRUE CHIVALRY.

Modern Lover Proves Himself Equal to Heroes of the Past.

There was a moment of profound silence. He was the first to speak.

"You are richer than I am," he faltered, with emotion.

She bowed her head, replying nothing. But now the true nobility of his character manifested itself.

"Yet for all that I am no better than you are!" he cried, and folded her to his breast.

And when, her conscience accusing her, she tried to tell him that her father her father but four of her uncles were Pittsburg millionaires, he sealed her lips with kisses, and would hear nothing—Puck.

THOUGHT CHILD WOULD DIE.

Whole Body Covered with Cuban Itch —Cuticura Remedies Cured at Cost of Seventy-Five Cents.

"My little boy, when only an infant of three months, caught the Cuban itch. Sores broke out from his head to the bottom of his feet. He would itch and claw himself and cry all the time. He could not sleep day or night, and a right dress is all he could wear. I called one of our best doctors to treat him, but he seemed to get worse. He suffered so terribly that my husband said he believed he would have to die. I had almost given up hope when a lady friend told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used the Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment and he at once fell into a sweet sleep, and he slept with ease for the first time since two months. After three applications the sores began to dry up, and in just two weeks from the day I commenced to use the Cuticura Remedies my baby was entirely well. The treatment only cost me 75c, and I would have gladly paid $100 if I could not have got it cheaper. I feel safe in saying that the Cuticura Remedies saved his life. He is now a boy of five years. Mrs. Zana Miller, Union City, R. F. D. No. 1, Branch Co., Mich., May 17, 1906."

With a Proviso.

"When universal peace is finally established," said Alfred H. Love, the president of the Universal Peace union, in an interview in Philadelphia, "then many a man who now ridicules the peace movement will claim to have been its lifelong champion. It always so. We thump and kick a poor, weak, struggling movement at its inception, and when it has succeeded and no longer needs our help, we give it the most solicitous support. There was once a young lad who was betrothed, a very poor young man, was about to set out for South America to seek his fortune in the rubber trade. As he took his leave of her the night before his departure, he said, tremulously: 'And you will be true to me, Irene?' 'Yes, Heber,' cried the girl; 'yes—if you're successful.'"

Ambiguous.

At the death of a much-loved pastor some years ago the vestry of a prominent New York church resolved to place a tablet to his memory in the vestibule of the church. So tells Harper's Weekly. In due time the tablet appeared in its place, where it still remains. It has engraved on it few smiles; for, after reciting a list of the former pastor's virtues and labors, it closes with the quotation:

"Now the people of God have rest."

A Spider That Fishes.

Prof. Berg, in Buenos Ayres, has discovered a new species of spider that fishing at times. DOCTOR'S FOOD TALK Selection of Food One of the Most Important Acts in Life.

A Mass. doctor says: "Our health and physical and mental happiness are so largely under our personal control that the proper selection of food should be, and is one of the most important acts in life.

"On this subject, I may say that I know of no food equal in digestibility, and more powerful in point of nutriment, than the modern Grape-Nuts, four heaping teaspoons of which is sufficient for the general part of a meal, and experience demonstrates that the user is perfectly nourished from one meal to another.

"I am convinced that the extensive and general use of high class foods of this character would increase the term of human life, add to the sum total of happiness and very considerably improve society in general. I am free to mention the food, for I personally know of its value."

Grape-Nuts food can be used by babes in arms, or adults. It is ready cooked, can be served instantly, either cold with cream, or with hot water or hot milk poured over. All sorts of puddings and fancy dishes can be made with Grape-Nuts. The food is concentrated and very economical, for four heaping teaspoons are sufficient for the food needs of one adult. THE TABLET, INDUCED A CHILL.

Results Given in Hospital Tent Must Have Been Pleasant.

The captain tells a story which runs somewhat like this: In camp one morning the first sergeant reported that Private B—— had a chill. "Is it a serious case?" asked the captain. "Well, sir, I don't know just how serious it is, but it's a big one, for it seems to be all over him, and he weighs 200 pounds. On seeing him the captain found him looking rather blue, and instructed the first sergeant to send him to the hospital tent, and when a corporal.

Soon after breakfast the captain saw the corporal and asked him how the man was getting on. "Oh, he's all right now," was the reply, "I took him to the hospital tent, and when I saw what kind of medicine the doctor gave him I had a chill too."—Army and Navy Life.

The Mules Understand.

A story is told of Senator Knute Nelson, who spent some of his early years in a logging camp. He tells of the difficulty necessarily of certain emphatic language in order to make mules move. "All varieties of cursing were in demand in that camp: Scandinavian, German, Italian—but none of the words used seemed to have the explosive force to adjust the tempo of the mule to the desired pace. Along came a stripping Irishman, who used some popular expletives, usually indicated in print by blank, blank, or asterisks. The mules moved. 'There's a language all mules understand,' said the Irishman —'and it's not me mother tongue, either.'—Joe Mitchell Chapple, in National Magazine.

NATURE PROVIDES FOR SICK WOMEN

a more potent remedy in the roots and herbs of the field than was ever produced from drugs.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines and Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., in her study of roots and herbs and their power over disease discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

is an honest, tried and true remedy of unquestionable therapeutic value.

During its record of more than thirty years, its long list of actual cures of those seemingly hopeless cases of weakness, entitles Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person and every thinking woman.

When women are troubled with irregular or painful functions, weakness, displacements, ulceration or inflammation, backache, bearing-down, nervous prostration, indigestion or nervous prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

No other remedy in the country has such a record of cures of female ills, and thousands of women residing in every part of the United States bear willing testimony to the marvelous virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable compound and what it has done for them.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided hundreds of thousands to health. For twenty-five years she has been advising gratuitously thousands of sick women by virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's vow free of charge. She is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and has for sixteen years before her decease advised under her immediate direction. Address, Lynn, Mass.

STUDENT IMMORALITY IN JAPAN.

Tokio, Japan.—Tokio is a nest of problems. Here the "Far Eastern Question" has its focus. And an interviewer feels that it is by no means eso abstract question, but an interwoven mass of perplexities, each with a relation to the other. Out of the whole I have tried to extricate the two that appear to be fundamental—education and morality; and both have a direct bearing upon the missionary and religious situation which I am studying.

Tokio is the greatest student center in the world, with more than 50,000 students of the higher branches. Here young Japan, infatuated with the western learning, has concentrated its ambitions. The streets teem with young men and women students. The procession of these that may be seen any day along the most by the imperial palace is the most significant spectacle in all Japan. It is the crux of the nation's aspirations. If do not wonder that the elder statesmen are shaking their heads and looking grave over it; for reasons which I shall presently show.

So great is the craze for education that, although the rather loose figures of the Japanese government give 94.43 per cent. of the population of school age as under instruction (or the American educator bere figures it as 69.05 per cent., according to western methods), there is not room in the institutions of higher grade for all the applicants. Japan has only eight colleges and two universities. Each of these has a very large enrollment. I heard the other day of 1,000 students being examined for entrance into a class that could admit but 70. The rejected students feel disgraced, and this is one cause of the suicides that are so common among this class of the Japanese.

It is freely stated that much of the modern education is quite superficial. Certainly the students prove a perfect feid for the exploitation of socialists and other agitators. There are not places in the nation for these educated young men commensurate with their ambitions. So there is considerable political as well as social unrest.

One striking result of the craze for education is the universal desire to learn English, which is regarded as the language of progress and civilization. There is no similar desire for French or German. The higher public schools teach English, and tens of thousands are learning it, somehow. Train boys, railroad men, waiters, shopkeepers, editors, students, fellow passengers in trains—all of whom Japanese have come to me since I have been here for help in English. Any good-natured foreigner could keep busily employed 24 hours a day instructing the Japanese in the mysteries of English. Recently I visited a mission night school in Kobe which was literally jammed with young men employed during the day as teachers, clerks, etc. Not only were the rooms crowded but outside of the doors and windows stood clumps of eager students, each having paid the tuition fee. The mission force was inadequate, and two outside helpers, Europeans, had been engaged temporarily. It was highly edifying to hear an enthusiastic young man teach his class, as model sentences, "There are many dogs in England. I have got a dog." It is only fair to the missionary force to say that they themselves are college bred men and women.

Leading a Nation to School.

It was the missionaries who introduced higher education into Japan. One of them, Dr. Hepburn, drew up the government's educational adviser and led in the organization of the present school system. The first of the Japanese institutions of higher learning was the Doshjha, founded by the runaway youth, Joseph Hardy Neesima, who was trained in a home and is now esteemed by the nation as one of its great men. The Doshisha, which is located at Kioto, is the most famous of mission schools in this country and it is still doing excellent work, with about 600 students. The average age of the latter is lower than formerly, as seems to be the case with all long-established mission schools.

Must Mission Schools Go?

The intensely national spirit among the Japaneso, together with the creation of the new educational system, has largely altered the status and character of the mission schools. Whatever changes the future brings, it is evident, however, that from the mission schools Japan has received a tremendous educational impulse, a host of trained workers, and a company of unselfish counsellors. Furthermore, it must be admitted that at the present time great service is being done by the mission schools, which are maintained throughout the empire by the various denominations in such numbers and variety that space cannot be spared even to mention what they severally are, more than a few remarkable cases.

The size and scope of these institutions—of which the Doshisha at Kioto, the Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian and Joint Methodist Episcopal schools at Tokio, the German Reformed school at Sendai and the Southern Methodist school at Kobe, may be cited as conspicuous examples—is beyond the knowledge of the people of America. That one country should contain such tremendous influences to the upbuilding of another is certainly an evidence of the altruistic character of Christian missions. While it is true that by far the larger proportion of the graduates become Christians it is also true that a disinterested philanthropic work is done by those schools in behalf of the Japanese.

At present there is need for all the schools that can be established. The demand for education is greater than the facilities. But steadily the conditions are changing and students will soon cease to attend mission schools merely for the reason that they can find room elsewhere. What, then, is to be the future of the mission schools, maintained at so great cost? The missionaries make prompt answer that it is needed to provide the nation with Christian leaders and teachers; if Christian colleges are a necessity in America, they say, much more so here.

But I find educational experts drawing the deadly parallel. They declare that, from an educational standpoint, the mission schools are now generally inferior to those maintained by the government. Even in the study of English a government examineer assured me, the mission schools, despite their high proportion of foreign teachers, are below the level of other schools. Mission workers themselves say that all persons who come out to be teachers should be required to possess a teacher's certificate, as well as a college education. I am told that the Kobe college for young women, maintained by the Congregational Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior, Chicago, and the Presbyterian school for young women, Tokio, still rank among the leading girls' schools in Japan; but even these feel the changed conditions. On all sides I hear that the Congregational kindergarten and training school for kindergartners at Kobe, conducted by Miss Howe, really leads in this form of instruction, and it would rank with the best institutions of similar nature at home.

What Japan Wants from America.

In conference with a score of Japanese leaders, only two white men besides myself being present, I hurnily asked what Japan thinks of the missionaries, and what form of mission work now needs doing. By common consent their spokesman was a man whose conspicuous work has won him a decoration from the emperor, and as his judgment coincides with the views expressed to me by other candid Japanese, I quote it as typical:

"Japan most needs help in education and philanthropy. If mission schools are to be maintained, let them be first-class as schools. But if American really wants to help us most especially she should send teachers, strong, able, Christian teachers, to enter the various middle and higher government schools throughout the empire. Every one of these would welcome such a one to teach English. Then by his influence and by personal work, which after all is what counts for most, he could do untold good in shaping Christian character among the students. Japanese respect teachers, and especially foreign teachers, and such men would have more weight than those whose business it is to come ont and try to make Christians."

This man had in mind something seven further advanced than the work of the Young Men's Christian Association teachers. The letter are men selected by the international Y. M. C. A., with headquarters in New York. These men receive no mission aid whatever; they have an absolutely independent relation with the government and are supported entirely by their salaries. But by means of Bible classes, personal conversation, the introdoction of the students into their homes to learn foreign ways and the creation of foreign friendships they are doing an immeasurable service for Christianity. Japan is eager to increase the number of these men and, as one of the teachers said to me, "There is no better place in the world for a qualified American who wants to do a great educational work than right here."

Student Immorality.

The whole student problem in Japan must be viewed from a moral side. While morals and ethics have a place in the curricula of all higher schools, they have not an equal place in the conduct of the young people whom they are supposed to affect. The minister of education and other national leaders are frankly alarmed over the situation, and they hardly turned to the Young Men's Christian Association for help. The latter with the Young Women's Christian association, is erecting a self-supporting dormitory where many have safe homes. Statesmen who are themselves agnostic rationalists declare that the students must have some religious motive for the desired morality.

Even the daily papers are wrestling with the subject of student immorality—a contradiction of the statement made by some visitors that the recent shocking revelations have not caused a ripple of interest in Japan. The newspapers are constantly talking about the dormitories and student boarding houses, the latter especially. It has been shown that hundreds, even thousands, of girl students purchase their education at a price that would seem incredible to western ears. For instance, it is admitted that nearly all of the 1,500 Chinese students here attend homes in Japanese girl students' or pseudo students. The Chinese students—most of whom, by the way, have wives at home—do not necessarily more immoral than the Japanese, but they are possessed of more money. In the average case with a Japanese college man, including tuition, board, books, clothes, etc., are less than 15 yen a month, which is seven dollars and a half. The average expenses of a Chinese student in Tokio are estimated at a minimum of 30 yen. The expenses of a girl student are less than those of a man.

The terrible situation here with respect to school girls is not, as has been carefully explained to me over and over, because Japanese girls do not prize virtue; but because they prize other things, as education, and feelty to parents far more. Girls are sent into Tokio from the country to get an education who have no idea where they are going to board or to attend school, and lack the money to do either.

In all this it is to be remembered that the attitude of the Japanese toward the relation of the sexes is very different from that of the occident. The social evil is licensed, (though by no means confined to houses licensed) and it is not common for a parent to sell his daughter into a life of shame. Ninety-eight per cent. of prostitutes in the empire are secured in this manner. "Sold" is not the word employed here; the keeper insists that the father is to be repaid out of the daughter's earnings. The former takes good care that the deal is not wiped out until he is ready to let the girl go. The latter never thinks of rebelling, for filial obedience is the first article of the Japanese creed. Yet it is significant that no swords; knives or sharp weapons are allowed in the "Sold" section, which is the name of the district set apart for this purpose, for the protection of the keepers from themselves. It is said that the average number of visitors to this quarter of Tokio is no less than a quarter of a million a month.

I can believe this, because of what I have seen. The night I visited the Yoshiwara, in company with a missionary, the streets were so crowded that policemen stood in the middle of the road, holding aloft lanterns to divide the traffic, which is entirely pedestrian.

Two inexpressibly shocking aspects of that night's experience especially impressed me. One was the presence of boys and young men, thousands of them in student dress, who openly frequented the Yoshiwara. On each side of the main street were rows of cages. Two hundreds of these line the streets of the Yoshiwara, each containing from 1 dozen girls upward. True, the cages are beautifully gilded and lacquered, some of the rear panels being real works of art; and the girls are elaborately dressed in gaudy gowns, each sealed before a toilet box where she perfects her painting and powdering in public. The cages are cages, and the poor painted creatures within human beings, kept like fowls for public inspection and sale.

One hour in the Yoshiwara is sufficient to turn any white man forever against the licensing of the social evil. Adjoining the Yoshiwara and a part of it, is the hospital for derelicts. Everything is minutely regulated by a special department of the government. The latest official statistics show that than 50,000 licensed prostitutes in the empire, with more than 30,000 gaisha girls in addition. Taking all classes of prostitutes, there are said to be, according to the latest publication on the subject, "How the Social Evil Is Regulated in Japan," no less than 2,000,000, or five per cent of the population, or ten per cent. of the female population of all ages!

In the light of the foregoing, it is said that one of the problems tasks undertaken by the missionaries, and especially through the girls' schools, is the creation of a Japanese girls' conception of morality in the Japanese mind. A missionary is also largely responsible for the agitation which resulted in the law a few years since, giving the enslaved girls a right to life of escape from a life, under certain difficult conditions. A rescue home is maintained in Tokio by the missionaries and the W. C. T. U., and three others throughout the empire by the Salvation Army. The most tangible and promising efforts for the betterment of moral conditions among the students are those undertaken by the Christian Young Men's Association.

SAFEGUARD THE HOME

GOOD CITIZENS ARE THE BULWARK OF THE NATION.

EDUCATION AND PROTECTION

Two Vital Things to Be Considered by Those Who Would See the Greatest Progress and Advancement.

Where is found the greatest advancement and civilization there is also found among the people the highest type of fealty and love of home. The American homes are the most substantial pillars of the nation's greatness, and in American citizenship is found the bulwark of our republican government.

Where the home life is ideal, there is found genuine patriotism which is always commensurate with the progress of the home and the domestic happiness of the people. How important it is then that every safeguard be thrown about the home, which is the hotbed where are produced for development all the strength that is necessary for the perpetuation of a government and the maintenance of a nation's greatness.

The student who will study into conditions of the countries that are continually wrecked by internal turmoil, such as Russia and the Central American republics, will discover the homes are far from ideal homes, and that there is an absence of the love of country that should be found in the hearts of its citizens. There is a duty that involves upon all, and which is due to the generations growing and to come. The duty is to surround the home with such environments as will make it attractive and develop in the growing youth the highest qualities of manhood and womanhood. Where the people are oppressed by monarchy and feudalism there is no incentive to develop the highest side of life. But in America where all are upon an equal plane and opportunities are open to every one, where labor and its people are secure in their rights to homes, there is every reason why each one should make the greatest endeavor to found for himself and his progeny a residence place that will be a source of interest and be an incentive to higher mental and social development.

Education is all important and no other country in the world offers to all such glorious advantages as the public school system as does the United States. It is important that the home be located near good schools. The public schools are generally found where there are good homes and good towns. The quality of citizenship of a community can generally be gaged by the standard of its educational institutions. The importance of the home builder that the town wherein he is located or which he may reside near, be one that possesses the best. Better that this town be, the better will be its educational facilities for the young. It is essential to the prosperity of a community that it be realized by all residing within it that the more and higher the standard be, the greater will be its advantages both as to education and otherwise. By support of the meritorious the home is made better in every way. Patriotic citizens will make it their first aim to build up the best schools possible and then their state and nation. One who is loyal to home is generally faithful to the performance of all the duties that good citizenship implies.

Who Makes the Town?

The editor of the paper at Coyle, Okla., asks in large letters, "Who makes the town?" Such a town requires the work of many people. It is surely not the man who earns his living in the town and then spends his earnings elsewhere; not the farmer who sells his produce to the home merchant and then takes the money to the express or post office and sends it to the Chicago mail order house for goods he needs; nor the minister who is paid for preaching by the business interests of the place, and then spends spare time in working up grocery clubs for an outside concern. No, brother, these men do not make towns.

Gov. Folk on Home Trade.

"We are proud of our splendid cities and we want them to increase in wealth and population, and we also want our country town to grow. We wish the city merchants to build up but we also desire the country merchants to prosper. I do not believe in the mail order citizen. If a place is good enough to live in it is good enough to make his money in, it is good enough for him to spend his money in."

Misfits in Songs.

"I'm going to see a new American play," says the man starting. "It's by an English author. All the best American plays these days are written by English authors."

"I hope they are more progress than the songs they write," remarked his friend. "Have you forgotten the English song that had a chorus about the 'Cotton fields way down in Old New Jersey?'"

Killing the Small Towns.

It is impossible to build up towns without there being business to employ the people who settle there. The mail order system of doing business is killing off the small town, and as a result the farmers residing near them suffer by having a poor market, and poor schools and other blessings that go hand along with the live town. Now about this for farm values as a result of the mail order system:

NO TIME FOR STUDY.

People Who Are Either Too Busy or Too Indolent for Self-Improvement.

That person who takes no interest in affairs of his fellow men, who fails to keep himself informed as to what is transpiring around him, is far from being either progressive or well-informed. These days when papers and magazines are so plentiful and so cheap, there is little excuse for the average person not keeping closely in touch with events, and particularly keeping well informed as to what is transpiring that may affect his own individual interests.

One of the great beauties, and an extraordinary privilege of our American form of government, is the right of every citizen to take a part in public affairs and particularly in governmental transactions. How many follow party leaders, perhaps blindly, and too late find that they made errors through not having understood the situation? How many who are negligent in the study of measures that are brought up for consideration by the state and national legislative bodies, and too late find that unwise laws were enacted that directly oppressed certain classes to the advantage of others? How many people are gathered in by alluring promises made in the finely printed literature sent broadcast through the country for the purpose of exploitation of fraudulent stock companies, put through not keeping informed as to the means and methods employed by designing men to entrap the unwary? It is conservatively estimated that each year more than $50,000,000, are taken from the earnings of the people just through the operations of fraudulent mining, oil, insurance and like concerns. It would be impossible for the promoters of such frauds to exist were the people careful readers of the newspapers and the magazines, the pages of which are filled with accounts of the doings of "get-rich-quick" schemes.

These days there is every opportunity for self-improvement. Rural delivery carry papers to the most remote farms, and telephones connect the farmhouses in the average community. If the people were only to utilize the means so close at hand, and to take the time to read, and endeavor to keep themselves informed on, set them, there would be less cause for complaint on the part of those who perchance get their "finger bitten." It is evident from the success that exploiters of schemes meet with, that the majority of people lack good business judgment, or that they are blinded by some inherent gambling desire. It is always a safe plan to avoid any investment that offers more than legitimate returns on an investment. The proposition that will pay even ten per cent. a year, and where the principal is secured, can be safely said that may be required for its operation, without calling upon the general public to help. In the multiplicity of kinds of investments, the ones that are a "gamble," such as mining, and the like, are frequently presented in the attractive columns of the papers. The basis on which the promoters work, is the fascination of the people to seek great returns for little money. It is the same sentiment that allows many to become victimized, located in different parts of the country to dispose of cheap goods at enormous profits through holding out to the people the promise of extraordinary values. The well-informed man will let all kinds of investment schemes that are designed to drew money from the pockets of the people, and will also refuse to accept any sign in the matter not whether the metter of barter he stocks and bonds or the necessaries of life.

Contrary to Home Building.

Trade is the life of a commercial town. Any system that diverts this trade is injurious to the community. Here then is the crux of the whole system. By drawing the trade from the towns, the principal support goes, and with it the general prosperity and employment for the people, the school system, and the churches and all the advantages that the town affords to the people of the community. Not alone this but home markets are destroyed and with them the farm value of the land reduced. Have the importance of home trading and home support instilled into the minds of the farmers in general, and there will be a rapid falling off of the catalogue house patronage.

Importance of Good Roads.

Roads in a town that are good leading to it is blessed. Surely there is no more disagreeable thing, nor anything that will more injure the business interests of a place than impassable boggy roads. There is a little excuse in the rural districts for poor roads. It may in the beginning be somewhat expensive to put the roads in first class shape, but it will prove that the saving in wear and tear on wagons and horses will repay all the extra expense. And it is the town good roads that do his trading when it is necessary to go hob deep in mud to the nearest town.

Adulterated Foodstuffs.

Recently a number of samples of coffee, extracts and canned goods sent out by a prominent grocery company were examined by chemists in Missouri and in South Dakota and found to be greatly adulterated. These goods were sold at prices as high as the local grocers charge for the best class of articles. Those who are careful of health should not buy foodstuff that comes from the mail order houses, or from any other source where the price is

Sporting Gossip.

The truly American sport of trap shooting gains greatly in popularity with each successive year, and 1907 promises to be a record breaker. Many golf clubs are adding shooting grounds, while gun clubs increase and multiply in every section of the country. The regular season lasts from early spring until the hunting season, but the enthusiasts keep it up the year round. Live bird trap shooting still has some adherents, but the general tendency is towards the "clay pigeon." The forerunner of the "clay pigeon" was the glass ball, filled with sand or feathers, to show when broken; but shooting them was too easy, and neither in shape nor light did they resemble birds. The targets cost when first thrown on the trade as $5,000,000 are thrown annually, it would look as if trap shooting had come to stay. As to the number of shells used, only a rough estimate can be made. There are from 80,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 clay shells fired each year in the United States; but the majority is, of course, for game. A recent gun club equipment, "the Tower trap," the first of which, in this country, was erected at Pinehurst, N. C., where the sport is exceedingly popular. These towns have long been need in Europe, the idle being to produce conditions somewhat similar to those experienced by the sportsmen when shooting rocketing pheasants. The tower is 50 feet high, and in the top are two expert traps, right and left. The puller is protected by a thick plank partition, which also hides the trap from view. Five different kinds of targets may be thrown—right, left, overhead, unknown right and pairs. In these events, with the exception of the "overhead" bride, the shooter faces the tower at the usual distance. In the overhead shooting he stands back to the foot of the tower and directly under the trap. Tower shooting will bother the best shooters at first. Known angles to right and left are not easy, and every here a knack for breaking overhead targets, but the unknown angles baffle most shooters, and "doubles"—two targets shooting off in opposite directions at the same time—call for quickness and an eye for as few posses. They are by no means impossible, and some remarkable records are made with the new trap. The sport is no more expensive than golf or kindred games. Anyway the "game is worth the candle."

Jesse Harper has accepted the position of head coach athletics for another year at Alma college at Alma, Mich. This news was received with much delight by the student body. Coech Herper hee turned out the best teams this year that Alma has ever had in its history. Harper is strong in all branches of athletics. He graduated last year from the University of Chicago. He was a player on both the football and baschall teams, being captain of the baseball team. Herper is a believer in clean athletics. No one has ever been allowed this year on any of the teams. A man must be a gentleman in athletic work, as well as in class work, he believes.

Jimmy Cockman, Newark's third baseman, and one of the best major league managers make a big mistake by not securing Canadian territory when in the west. Cockman says that Canada is full of good material, especially near Guelph, Ontario, where he resides. According to statistics furnished by Cockman there are bat eight Canucks playing professional ball in the United States, including himself, all of whom have made good. From Guelph come Cockman, Bill Bernhard, of Jack Chesbro's new pitching recruits, and Congalton, Cleveland's heavy-hitting outfielder.

Two other ball players who come O'Hara, Baltimore's floorfooted left fielder; Archer, catcher for the Detroit Americans, and Nig Clarke, Cleveland's star backstop. Crystal, the former Providence twirler, who is now pitching winning ball for New Orleans, in the Southern league, hails from British Columbia, where he is interested in a salmon fishing enterprise. Harvey Williams, who was brought out by Ed Barrow, the Toronto manager, last season, and who was farmed out to Albany this spring, is a resident of Toronto.

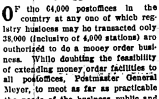
Gossip of People and Events Gathered in Washington

"RUBBER" LECTURES JAR NOTABLES OF CAPITAL



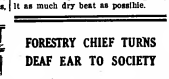
WASHINGTON.—Official Washington—that is, the top layer of it—is up to arms against the lectures of the "Seeing Washington" automobiles. It is oil very well to be president, or an ambassador, or a cabinet officer, and there are times when it is not unpleasant to feel that the eyes of the multitude are centered upon one; but to be pointed out to rubbernecking visitors as an object of interest is a little disquieting to one's sense of dignity.

For instance: "There upon your left, ladies and gentlemen," says the lecturer, "you see the Hon. William Howard Taft, secretary of war—the large gentleman walking rapidly with the portfolio under his arm. Mr. Taft always walks. He is accounted one of the handsomest men in Washington and one of the biggest in more ways than I care to mention, and he has been chosen by President Roosevelt to be his successor."

Or suppose you were George Bruce Cortelyon and were pointed out as a man who wore his hair pompadour, or William Loeb, Jr., and heard it announced that you weren't as serious as you looked; or if you were an author. However, these are but mere incidents or illustrations. The thing that has brought the top-notch officials to bay is that some of the rubbernecks lecturers have taken to pointing out members of the families of prominent men when they go abroad in carriages.

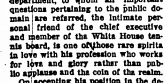
Officials say that the lecturers know the corriages by the conchmen, but ore frequeotly mistaken as to the identity of the occupants. It is very annoying and embarrassing, they assert, and something will have to be done to stop it.

POSTOFFICE EXTENDS THE MONEY ORDER SERVICE



OF the 64,000 postoffices in the country at any one of which regulatory business may be transacted only 38,000 (inclusive of 4,000 stations) are authorized to do a money order business. While doubling the feasibility of extending money order facilities to all postoffices, Postmaster General Meyer, to meet as far as practicable the needs of the business public and promote its convenience in the transmission of money through the mails recently issued a sweeping order, which said in part:

"Recognizing the fact that there is a demand on the part of the public for this extension, the department expects to be aided in carrying out its policy in this respect by the earnest cooperation of its employes and of postmasters and all others connected in any way with the postal service.



"It must be understood that the department will not brook interference on the part of its officers or employes with the policy above outlined, and it is enjoined upon all connected with the service to use every effort to promote the use of postal money orders for remittances by mail. Failure on the part of any postmaster or post office employe to adhere to the requirements of this order will endanger the official position of the delinquent."

Postmaster General Meyer will recommend to the next congress that legislation be enacted providing for the introduction of postal notes for sums not exceeding $2.50, or perhaps $5.00, which may be issued without the filing of a written application or the sending of on advice, and be obtainable, not only at all money order post offices, but at many of the smaller post offices, where it may not be feasible to issue money orders.

WAR ON WOOD BEETLES STARTED BY GOVERNMENT

FOR centuries, and in many instances for the "powder post" wood beetle been discussed and planned against. Many government experts of many countries have studied this pest of seasoned woods, but little progress has been accomplished towards its destruction. Our own government is now taking a hand in investigating the "powder post" beetle. The beetle attacks seasoned wood only, especially the white or sap portion, and so alarming has become the ravages that makers of furniture and vehicles are at great annual loss owing to the silent and steady boring and bedding in the dry material. Hickory, oak and ash are the woods generally most affected. These beetles are silent flres tearing down the fences, and barns and homes of men. They feast in the polished furniture in the parlor, and gnaw at the coffins in the undertakers' warehouses. They eat away the chair that we rest in today and the piano sounding forth the sweetest melodies is in the death grapple of the "powder post" beetles. The treatment for the pest, so far as studied out, consists in destroying by fire the beetle of either sex he affect only, especially the white or sap portion, and so alarming has become the ravages that makers of furniture and vehicles are at great annual loss owing to the silent and steady boring and bedding in the dry material. Hickory, oak and ash are the woods generally most affected. These beetles are silent flres tearing down the fences,

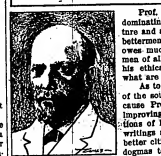
FORESTRY CHIEF TURNS DEAF EAR TO SOCIETY



ONE of the interesting young bachelors of the present day now very much in the public eye is Gifford Pinchot, chief of the bureau of forestry, department of agriculture, now on a pilgrimage in the west, instructing all who will come to hear on the wisdom of the administration's head policy. Mr. Pinchot, the "G. P." of the department, to whom all important questions pertaining to the public domain are referred, the intimate personal friend of the chief executive and member of the White House tennis board, is one of those rare spirits in love with his profession who works for love and glory rather than public applause and the coin of the realm.

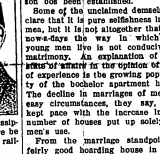
On accepting his position in the department at a salary of $2,000 a year, he built himself a $200,000 house on the most fashionable block of Rhode Island avenue, where he gives one large reception each season, in honor of the agricultural forestry convention.

When he built this home Gifford Pinchot was engaged to be married, his fiancee, like himself, being young, earnest, wealthy and of New York Four Hundred. The death of his sweetheart under most pathetic circumstances turned young Pinchot to his profession with redoubled fervor, and since then he has turned a deaf but polite ear to society and the allurements attention which would naturally be bestowed upon the most eligible American bachelor in Washington. The independent fortune making a $200,000 house possible on a $2,000 salary is a part of this young man's inheritance from his maternal grandfather, Enz, the founder and once famous proprietor of the Fifth Avenue hotel.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

UPLIFTER OF HUMANITY

Prof. Felix Adler is the founder, head and dominating figure in the society for ethical culture and a world leader in the movement for the betterment of the conditions of the poor. Society owes much to this wonderfully gifted man, and men of all creeds and races subscribe to many of his ethical doctrines, although none may know what are his religious beliefs.



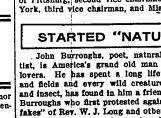
As to whether he believes in the immortality of the soul, if man has a soul, no one knows, because Prof. Adler concerns himself alone with improving the moral and physical living conditions of his fellow-men, and in his lectures and writings strives to show them the way of being better citizens without reference to the creeds or dogmas to which they may subscribe.

Prof. Adler lectures at Columbia university on political and social ethics and he writes much on the same subjects. As a lecturer he has been widely heard from the platform throughout this country and abroad. No one has done more toward the elimination of the abuses of child labor in the factories of the United States than Prof. Adler, and when the national child labor committee was organized a few years ago he was made chairman of it.

Prof. Adler is now in his fifty-sixth year, having been born in Alzey, Germany, August 13, 1851, the son of Rabbi Samuel Adler. Members of the synagogue over which his father presided raised a fund of $10,000 for the purpose of educating Felix at the best European universities, with the object of taking his father's place in the synagogue, but when the young man returned to his home he announced that he could not reconcile his views with any recognized religion, and he came to this country, where he began lecturing and writing on ethical culture, earned and paid back the $10,000 it had cost the congregation of the synagogue to educate him, and continued to pursue his own way.

That way has proven so successful and beneficial to his fellow citizens of this country that Columbia college was proud to offer him a lectureship, and now many eminent citizens, Jews and Christians alike, gratefully acknowledge the value of his services to the uplift of humanity.

DEMOCRATIC "DARK HORSE"



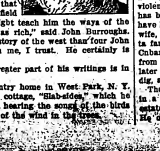
Jacob McGovcck Dickinson, who is being enthusiastically boomed by the Iroquois democratic club of Chicago for the Democratic nomination for president in opposition to William J. Bryan, fits the description given by Col. Henry Watterson, of Louisville, of the "dark horse" which he claims can unite the Democracy and win the victory.

Mr. Dickinson's first claim to the presidency, in Col. Watterson's list of requirements, is his "handsome, stalwart, Nor' Western figure." Next he is a native of the charmed territory, "north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi." The thousands of voters who have never before heard of Mr. Dickinson will agree with the Kentucky colonel that he has not taken such a prominent part in political affairs as to antagonize any Democratic faction. Mr. Dickinson was born in Mississippi and graduated from the University of Tennessee. He should therefore be acceptable to southerners. As general counsel for the Illinois Central railroad, the conservatives can find no fault with him.

The only chance for defeat, according to "Marse Henry" lies in his proviso that Mr. Bryan must support the "dark horse." Mr. Dickinson's friends are anxiously awaiting word as to how the Nebraskan regards the Chicago lawyer's candidacy.

Mr. Dickinson, while not classed as an orator, is a convincing speaker. He was conspicuous in 1903 as counsel for the United States before the tribunal that settled the Alaskan boundary question. By special commission he served for several terms on the supreme bench of Tennessee and in 1895-7 he was assistant attorney-general of the United States.

TO PROBE PANAMA FOODS



Miss Gertrude Beeks, secretary of the welfare department of the Civic Federation, has gone to Panama to investigate the housing, food and amusements of the laborers in the canal zone.

This is considered as being one of the most important commissions ever awarded to a woman by the government. Secretary Taft gave her the appointment, and the errand has the sanction and support of President Roosevelt.

While this is the first important federal commission which Miss Beeks has had, she has traveled from one end of the country to the other in the interest of welfare work. Last fall she took up the question of child labor in southern cotton mills, and as a result her investigations formed the basis of the main topic for discussion at the annual meeting of the National Civic Federation recently held in New York. "Welfare Work for Government Employes" is the latest departure in the work of the Civic Federation, and for this purpose a national committee, of which Secretary Taft is chairman, has been created. John G. W. Beckham, governor of Kentucky, is first vice chairman; George W. Guthrie, mayor of Pittsburg, second vice chairman; William R. Wilcox, postmaster of New York, third vice chairman, and Miss Beeks secretary.

STARTED "NATURE FAKE" CRUSADE

John Burroughs, poet, naturalist and scientist, is America's grand old man of nature lovers. He has spent a long lifetime in woods and fields and every wild creature, animal, bird and insect, has found in him a friend. It is John Burroughs who first protested against the "nature fakes" of Rev. W. J. Long and other "naturalists." Long replied vigorously to the charges, as did scarcely as to arouse the ire of Burrough's intimate friend, Theodore Roosevelt, and draw down upon himself the denunciation of the president of the United States.

When President Roosevelt announced that he would take a vacation trip to Yellowstone park, a great news agency sent broadcast the news that the president had chosen Mr. Burroughs as a fellow comrade in order that the writer-scientist might teach him the ways of the wild animal folk of the Rockies. "That was rich," said John Burroughs. "Mr. Roosevelt knows more of the natural history of the west than four John Burroughses rolled into one. He will teach me, I trust. He certainly is capable."

John Burroughs is a poet, though the greater part of his writings is in prose.

John Burroughs lives in a beautiful country home in West Park, N. Y. In a secluded corner of his large estate is a cottage, "Slab-sides," which he built himself. Here he spends his summers, hearing the songs of the birds and catching the voice of nature in the sigh of the wind in the trees.

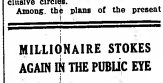
What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

HEAVY DEMAND ON PURSE OF MISS HELEN GOULD

NEW YORK.—According to a statement made public the other day the requests for gifts sent to Miss Helen Gould aggregate nearly $2,000,000 a week. They come all the way from the asking for $15 for a set of false teeth to $1,000,000 to start a colony in Cuba. Miss Gould gave an itemized list of a weeks requests recently to Frank Kaltenborn, the orcheatra leader. A movement is on foot among the music lovers of this city to make Mr. Kaltenborn's orchestral music a permanent feature in New York. For this subscriptions from wealthy persons would be necessary. Miss Gould was one of those consulted. She encouraged Mr. Kaltenborn, but incidentally cited the fact that this was not the only thing she was asked to encourage. Then she gave him the list.

In the week referred to Miss Gould received 221 requests for money outright. Out of these 199 left the amount to her good will and discretion. Miss Gould was asked in that week for $5,000 to help form an antisaloon league in Idaho. She received 43 requests for aid for churches, 27 for educational institutions and 20 for libraries. More than 30 were for help for charitable institutions. Four persons, presumably young women, wanted Miss Gould to help them buy trousseaus. Eleven persons wanted pianos and 12 wnoted Miss Gould to buy their inventions.

BACHELOR APARTMENTS ARE BECOMING POPULAR



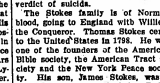
NEW YORK is a poor place for girls who want to get married—that is for girls who want a man who makes from $1,500 to $4,000 a year. The reason has been established.

Some of the unclaimed damsels declare that it is pure selfishness in the men, but it is not altogether that, for nowa-days the way in which the young men live is not conducive to matrimony. An explanation of this state of affairs in the opinion of men of experience is the growing popularity of the bachelor apartment house. The decline in marriages of men in easy circumstances, they say, has kept pace with the increase in the number of houses put up solely for men's use.

Not the marriage standpoint a fairly good boarding house in New York is a much more desirable institution than a petticoat-proof apartment. There is one large boarding house in e central, desirable locality where comfortable rooms and excellent board may be had by a man at less than the cost of keeping up an establishment of his own and eating at restaurents. A few years ago the clientele of this custom was twothirds men, and in one year there were five young men and one widower who met their fate in the house, got married and went to housekeeping. In each coso the man and woman set at the somo table, nod in the course of time fell into the habit of having pleosant little chats, walks together on Sundays nod visits to places of amusement. In short, they had a pretty good chance to sho each other up and the marriages in five of the six cases resulted happily.

But in a bachelor apartment house it is different. Often the young men are comparative strangers in New York, and any women eoqualstance they moy have aro not always loostd within easy visiting distance, or they may not be sufficiently attrective on first acquaintance to inspire a desire to call often. The men, if they have been working all day, get out of the way of making social calls. Their needs and comforts are sufficiently supplied by the housekeeper to forestall any hankering a young man moy have to possess a "good wife and a home."

EMPLOYS A DETECTIVE TO GUARD HER JEWELS



DETERMINED that she will not be deprived of the necklace for which she paid $360,000 to outshine her husband's former wife, now her social rival, Mrs. W. B. Leeds, wife of the tin plate magnate, has employed a detective as a permanent guard.

Mrs. Leeds' solicitude for the safety of the ornament recalls the rivalry which resulted in its purchase. Mrs. Leeds No. 1 obtained allmony of $1,000,000 with her divorces, and when her former husband married May Stewart Worthington, of Cleveland, the two women engaged in a strife for social supremacy which stirred exclusive circles.

Among the plans of the present Mrs. Leeds to discomfit her rival was the purchase in Europe of a magnificent pearl necklace for $225,000. She got the pearls unstrung when she left for New York and paid the duty of $22,500 on the separated gems.

Then the government officials discovered the trick and demanded the additional $110,335 to which the ornament was entitled if the jewels were imported in the form of a necklace. The extra duty finally was paid and the visible complecency of Mrs. Leeds No. 1 caused considerable gossip as to the amount of the "tip" which compelled Mrs. Leeds No. 2 to pay a total of $360,000 for her necklace.

MILLIONAIRE STOKES AGAIN IN THE PUBLIC EYE

W. E. D. STOKES, the millionaire who came into print the other day by reason of the trial of a suit which a woman has brought against him for a payment of $500 a week for the support of a child, has been much in the public eye since he was graduated from Yale. He always has been a very excitable and not infrequently violent man, and as a consequence he has been in a number of scrapes that have brought him much notoriety. His wife, who was a member of the Acosta family, which was distinguished in Cuban history, got an absolute divorce from him in May, 1900. Two years later she married Capt. Philip M. Lydig, a well-known young New Yorker.

Then Stokes was prominent in 1901 in a sensational legal fight over the estate of a cousin, Edward S. Stokes, who once was arrested for assaulting the janitor of his house. He was sued for $50,000 by a man who said he was run down by Mr. Stokes' carriage and late last year, when "Al" Adams, the "policy" king, was found dead in Mr. Stokes' Ansonia hotel, Colonel Julius Harburger accused Stokes of murdering him. Subsequently, however, the coroner directed the jury to render a verdict of suicida.

The Stokes family is of Norman blood, going to England with William the Conqueror. Thomas Stokes came to the United States in 1788. He was one of the founders of the American Bible society, the American Tract society and the New York Peace society. His son, James Stokes, was a member of the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co., metal importers, and James' son, William B. Dodge Stokes, was named after his partner in business.

VINDICATOR BLAST DUE TO ACCIDENT?

WITNESS TELLS OF PLACING POWDER AT THE SHAFT OF THE EIGHTH LEVEL.

Thinks Beck Moved It—Discredits Orchard's Story of the Explosion—Two Others Tell of Threats Against Steunenberg.

Boise, Idaho, June 29.—The attorneys for William D. Haywood continue to center their efforts on the discrediting of Harry Orchard and the establishment of their claim that Orchard killed Frank Steunenberg in revenge for the loss of his interest in the Hercules mine. Friday they directly attacked the Vindicator explosion with the testimony of a witness that made it appear accidental rather than criminal.

Thomas Wood, a nonunionist who entered the Vindicator mine as a timberman after the strike began, sworn that the night before the explosion he placed a box containing 25 pounds of giant powder at the shaft of the eighth level. He saw the powder the next morning shortly after two o'clock, and a few minutes later Superintendent McCormick and Foreman Beck came to the eighth level. They remained but a short time and left to go to the sixth level, where they were killed. Wood swore that when he reached the shaft 20 minutes later the powder was gone, and it was a reasonable inference that McCormick and Beck took it with them.

Says Beck Had Revolver.

Wood testified that he had seen a revolver in Beck's pocket, that the fragments of only one revolver were found in the sixth level, and that the bodies of McCormick and Beck were blown apart, indicating that the explosion had occurred between them. Orchard said that he fixed a revolver with a wire attachment to explode when the safety bar was raised. It would send a bullet in the giant powder he had placed.

One witness for the state has sworn that he later found a wire attached to the safety bar, but Wood, who was among the first to reach the sixth level after the explosion, said that he carefully examined the safety bar and found nothing attached to it. Wood gave his testimony in a clear and forceful manner and told in detail the story of the climb to safety of the men cut off by the explosion below the sixth level.

Tell of Orchard's Threats.

William Easterly, who concluded his testimony Friday morning, told D. C. Copley, who was called in the afternoon, both swore that they heard Orchard tell of the loss of the Hercules mine and threaten to kill Steunenberg for it. On cross-examination the state secured from both, and particularly Easterly, who received two letters and one telephone message from Orchard on the eve of the killing of Steunenberg, for remaining quiet when they knew a crime might be committed. Easterly contended that he did not know Steunenberg lived at Caldwell, and explained that although he knew "Thomas Hogan" was Harry Orchard, he took no steps immediately after the crime except to consult counsel for the defendants, because he was not an informer. Copley asserted that he did not take Orchard seriously when they met in San Francisco and he told him of the Bradley crime.

Ruling Hampers Defense.

Boise, Idaho, June 28.—A ruling made Thursday by Judge Wood while Edward Boyce, for years the leader of the Western Federation of Miners, and now a wealthy mine owner of Coeur d'Alesea, was testifying in behalf of William D. Haywood, may materially limit the showing of the defense as to the existence of the counter conspiracy against Haywood and his associates which it alleges.

James H. Hawley, for the state, objected to a general question as to the policy and practice of mine owners throughout the west in blacklisting union miners, and in the argument that followed Clarence Darrow, for the defense, claimed that same latitude in proving counter conspiracy that the state enjoyed in showing a conspiracy.

Is ruling the court accepted in part the contention of the prosecution and limited the proof of the defense along this line to events in Colorado and the Coeur d'Alenes connected with the case as now established.

Boyce Defends Federation.

Ed Boyce was the principal witness of the day and his testimony was chiefly devoted to the history, purposes and work of the Western Federation. He denied the existence of an "inner circle," or that there had ever been a conspiracy in the organization to do an illegal act. The chief importance of Boyce's cross-examination was the production of a speech by him at the convention of the federation held at Salt Lake in 1898, in which he said that every union should have a rifle club, every member a rifle, so that the federation could march 25,000 armed men in the ranks of labor.

Guilty of Conspiracy to Bribe.

Pittsburg, Pa., June 26.—Charles R. Richardson was convicted in criminal court Tuesday of conspiring with Harvey F. Bostaph, Joseph Flaherty and J. H. Millerland to attempt to bribe councilmen to pass the Pittsburg & Tube City railroad franchise ordinance.

TELEGRAPHERS SEE VICTORY

FRISCO KEY MEN CONFIDENT THEY WILL WIN OUT.

Assert Messages Are Piling Up by Hundreds in Coast Offices—Officials Deny Delays.

San Francisco, June 28.—A hopeful sentiment prevails at the headquarters of the striking commercial telegraphers and the rank and file of the union as well as the executive officers, who are unanimous in declaring full faith in ultimate victory. The men assert that the telegraph companies are still badly crippled, that every mail-sack lift is being added to care for the most important business and that hundreds of messages are piling up daily at the filing offices.

The strikers declare that at best any ability of the companies to get their lines into operation could be but a matter of temporary success, as it is necessary to draw men from other points to fill positions, and that such a policy results in wrecking service to the extent that reserves could no be kept at work but a short time.

Rumors are current about the strikers' headquarters that the telegraphers in Chicago and other large cities are to be called out, but this is positively denied by President Small at the headquarters in Oakland. Mr. Small reiterates his former statement that it is the desire of the union officials to prevent a general strike, but that if it was found necessary to call out the men et, other points no hint of such intention would be given until the order calling the men out is actually transmitted.

Officials of the Western Union and Postal companies claim that the work has been caught up with and there was no delay in getting their business on the wires.

TORNADO HITS OIL FIELDS.

Lives Lost and Derricks Destroyed in Indian Territory.

Muskogee, I. T., June 27.—A tornado with a path 60 miles long, followed by a cloudburst, swept the oil fields of northern Indian Territory between eight and nine o'clock Wednesday morning.

Three persons are reported killed at Bargsdale, in the path of the great Glenn oil pool, where the storm was fiercest. Frank Roper is known to be dead and two others are said to have been found whose names are not known.

Over 150 derricks are reported down in the Glenn pool and it is said all the oil derricks in the Osage nation have been swept away. Fifty-four derricks are reported down at Turley. At Maine houses were overturned and brick buildings demolished. Muskogee suffered no serious loss.

JAMESTOWN FAIR HOTELS BURN.

Fire Sweeps Whole Block Adjoining Exposition Grounds.

Norfolk, Va., June 27.—One whole block of the Pine Beach section immediately adjoining the Jamestown exposition grounds was swept by fire Wednesday night. The area burned belong from the exposition grounds on the west to the Pine Beach hotel and from the car tracks running from the exposition grounds west to the original Pine Beach pier to the ocean. The big Arcade hotel, the Berkley hotel, Outside Inn, Powhatan hotel, Caroline hotel, several other smaller hotels and a large part of the ouside "warpath" were destroyed. The loss is estimated between $200,000 and $225,000, partly insured.

Arkansas Briber Is Pardoned.

Little Rock, Ark., June 28.—Gov. Pindall Thursday issued a pardon to F. O. Butt, formerly state senator from Carroll county, convicted of the bribery of Senator R. R. Adams of Grant county and sentenced to the state prison for two years. Butt began his sentence January 1, 1907. The action of Gov. Pindall was based on a largely signed petition from every section of the state.

Body Found in Car of Lime.

Durant, I. T., June 28.—Workmen unloading a carload of lime at Armstrong, Md., made a gruesome discovery in the shape of the remains of a human body in a small box. The bones are bare, the flesh having been eaten by the lime packed in the box. The car was billed from Henrietta to Ada and rebilled from Ada to Armston. Federal authorities are investigating.

YALE'S CREW WINS MAGNIFICENT RACE

DEFEATS HARVARD BY ONLY A SCANT BOAT LENGTH IN FOUR MILES.

E. H. Harriman Arrested—Magnate Ignores Course Rules and Is Made Prisoner by President Roosevelt's Naval Aide.

New London, Conn., June 28.—Before the largest crowd that ever witnessed a race on the Thames river the Yale crew Thursday evening, rowing on an average of four strokes to the minute less than Harvard, held the big Cambridge eight even until the last half mile, when the blue let out their speed and won a magnificent contest by a scant boat length.

E. H. Harriman Arrested.

The race was accompanied by one disagreeable incident. This was the arrest of E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, by Lieut. Bulmer, President Roosevelt's naval aide. Lieut. Bulmer, who was in charge of the revenue cutters, had warned every boat owner not to follow the race. The big "varsity straggle had scarcely been started when Mr. Harriman, in a powerful motor boat, started to follow the race.

Lieut. Bulmer and Chairman Schwoppe, who were aboard the regatta committee's boat, the Arrow, repeatedly warned Mr. Harriman to stop his engine and get out of the course. Mr. Harriman not only paid no attention to them, but took a position right alongside of the referee's boat and held it. Of the navy yard Lieut. Bulmer signalled for a launch and tooted the revenue cutter's whistle, which finally caused Mr. Harriman to look around.

"You are under arrest, sir," shouted Lieut. Bulmer. "You will give yourself up to this man, who will take you aboard the Gresham to await my orders."

Mr. Harriman saw nothing more of the race, but was detained as an ordinary prisoner aboard the Gresham until after the race was over, when Lieut. Bulmer went aboard the Gresham and released him, but ordered his boat tied up at the navy yard. This incident may cost Mr. Harriman a fine of $500. This was the penalty imposed on a yacht owner at last year's race for transgressing the rules governing the course.

Heaves Divided Friday.

Now London, Conn., June 29.—Harvard won the freshman eight by one and a half lengths, and Yale the varsity four-oared race by perhaps ten lengths on the morning tide on the Thames river Friday, and the result confirmed the predictions.

HOLDS WAR TAX ILLEGAL.

Decision Rendered by Judge Pollack, of Federal Circuit Court.

St. Louis, June 29.—A decision was handed down Friday by Judge Pollack, in the United States circuit court, holding that the tax of $2,172.39 levied upon the estate of Judge George A. Madill, as a Spanish-American war tax, was an illegal action. The suit was instituted originally as a test case by the Union Trust company, executor for the Madill estate. It has gone through the federal courts and to the United States supreme court twice, the supreme court dividing each time. If Judge Pollack's decision is affirmed by the supreme court the result will be that $7,000,000 collected by the United States as a war tax must be returned.

For Direct Election of Senators.

Madison, Wis., June 29.—The assembly Friday by a vote of 68 to three passed the senate resolution providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote.

THAW RULING AS A GUIDE

DECISION IN LOVING TRIAL HURTS THE PROSECUTION.

Court Holds That State Cannot Attack the Truth of the Daughter's Story.

Houston, Tex., June 28.—The taking of evidence in the case of former Judge William G. Loving, who was placed on trial in the circuit court of Halifax county here last Monday morning for the murder of young Theodore Estes in Nelson county on April 22, was concluded at five o'clock Thursday afternoon. The court then adjourned until ten o'clock Friday morning, when the instructions to be given the jury will be argued before Judge W. R. Berkeadale, the presiding magistrate.

The rapidity with which the trial has progressed has been most remarkable and surprising to all concerned.

Thursday marked a most important turning point in the case, when Judge Berkadale rendered an opinion concerning the admissibility of certain evidence, the decision dented a heavy blow to the pleas of the prosecution. Attorney Daniel Harmon for the prosecution Wednesday announced his intention of introducing witnesses to show that the story told by Miss Elizabeth Loving to her father that she was drugged and assaulted by Theodore Estes was a fabrication and that Estes never offered any indignities to the girl, even suggesting that there might be another motive back of the killing.

The defense objected to the introduction of such testimony on the ground that it had no bearing on the case and whether the story was true or false had nothing to do with the question of the indigention of Judge Loving at the time of the tragedy. Judge Berkadale in a lengthy opinion sustained the contention of the defense, and among the cases he cited as authority was the famous Thaw trial in New York.

FARMER KILLS HIS WIFE.

Says That She Attacked Him with a Bread-Knife.

Waverly, Minn., June 29.—John J. Mooney, a well-to-do farmer living near here, killed his wife shortly after noon Friday. Then he came to town and surrendered himself. He says that when he went home to dinner he found no preparations made for a meal and when he complained to his wife she told him to cook his own dinner. He was doing so when the woman attacked him with a breakknife, cutting him on the wrist. Mooney took a block of wood in his hand, which he was about to put into the stove. He hit his wife over the head with this and killed her instantly.

SUNDAY NOT A WEEK DAY.

Novel Question Raised by Saloonkeeper in Seymour, Wis.

Seymour, Wis., June 28.—L. A. Stammer, a saloonkeeper here, has raised a novel question. He was recently arrested for keeping open his saloon after 11 o'clock Sunday night. He will fight the case, claiming that the ordinance under which he was arrested reads: "Shall be closed each and all week days at 11 o'clock p. m." Stammer claims that Sunday is not a week day.

Arizona Town's Saloons Burn.

ROCKEFELLER MUST COME, SAYS LANDIS

FEDERAL JUDGE AT CHICAGO INSISTS ON QUESTIONING THE OIL KING.

Wealth and Age Ignored—Attorney Miller Pleads in Vain to Have Subpoena Recalled—Jury Disagrees in Ohio Case Against Standard.

Chicago, June 29.—Efforts to thwart the serving of a subpoena on John D. Rockefeller, president of the Standard Oil company, were halted Friday when Judge Landis in the federal court warned Attorney John S. Miller for the oil trust that the head of the great combine would have to appear personally and that no excuses would be accepted.

Mr. Miller appealed to Judge Landis in a conference held in the judge's chambers with United States District Attorney Sims and Assistant District Attorney Wilkerson to allow others to appear in Mr. Rockefeller's stead.

Miller's Appeal Useless.

"He is an old man," said Mr. Rockefeller's attorney, speaking of his multimillionaire client, the richest man in the world. "He has little to do with the affairs of the company.

"Besides he is very wealthy and has a great deal of interests that would be jeopardized were he forced to leave them and come to Chicago to appear before your honor personally."

"Mr. Rockefeller's wealth and his great interests make no difference to this court," smiled Judge Landis.

"The subpoenas will have to be served," Judge Landis continued, "and Mr. Rockefeller will have to come into court and answer the questions which must be answered before we can get at the bottom of this question of fixing a fine upon his company."

Additional subpoenas were issued Friday for three more chiefs of the Standard and its subsidiary companies. These are F. Q. Barstow, H. R. Payne and W. M. Hutchinson of New York, all officials of the Union Tank line.

Subpoenas Reach New York.

New York, June 28.—Subpoenas requiring the presence of John D. Rockefeller, president of the Standard Oil company; William Rockefeller, H. H. Rogers, John R. Archbold and a number of other officers of the company, to testify before the grand jury in the federal court of Chicago on July 6, were received by United States Marshal Henkel Friday. Marshal Henkel was unable to serve subpoenas upon Mr. Rogers and W. H. Tilford, treasurer of the company, as they are now in Europe, and the subpoenas will be returned with notice to that effect.

John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller and Charles M. Pratt were out of the city, said Marshal Henkel expected that a day or two would be required to find them. The marshal personally served the subpoenas on John D. Archbold, William H. Hoyt, Charles T. White, James A. Moffett, president of the Standard Oil company of Indiana, and H. E. Pelton, of the Union Tank line.

Jury Disagrees in Oil Case.

Findlay, O., June 29.—The jury in the case of the state of Ohio against the Standard Oil company, charged with violating the Anti-trust laws, Friday reported to Judge Duncan that it had been found impossible to agree upon a verdict. The court thereupon ordered the jury discharged.

According to rumors the jury when it first retired stood six for conviction and six for acquittal. Subsequently, it is said, the jury stood eight to four for acquittal, and when the disagreement report was brought in, the vote stood seven to five for acquittal. The case was given to the jury on Wednesday last.

HOLOCAUST IN HONGKONG.

Five Hundred Chinese Perish in Burning of a Theater.

Victoria, B. C., June 28.—A horrible holocaust is reported in mail advices from Hongkong, where 500 Chinese of the audience of a Chinese theater and ten of the actors were burned to death when the theater was destroyed by fire.

The flames spread rapidly and the building collapsed, blocking the entrance with burning debris. The fire is said to have been due to the ignition of explosives concealed under the floor of the theater, the fire following an explosion.

St. Paul Men Accused of Fraud.

St. Paul, Minn., June 29.—Lewis A. Wood, George W. Wood, Bruce A. Tuttle and Martin P. Quigley were arrested by United States deputy marshals Friday. They are accused each and all week days at 11 o'clock p. m." Stammer claims that Sunday is not a week day.

Lightning Kills Mother and Son.

St. Paul.—Mrs. Clara N. Lemon and her 14-year-old son, Clarence Loraine Lemon, were instantly killed by lightning at their home, 1751 Van Buren street, Hamline.

Death came instantly to them. Mount Lemon, 12 years old, was unhurt, although he was only a few feet away.

Mrs. Lemon had been cleaning house and when the storm came up she was hurrying to get several articles from the clothesline. The last was a carpet which hung across two wire lines between two trees. Under the carpet, which formed a tent, the two boys had been playing, and the mother called them to come out and help her. They both came out and the older boy stood directly under one line with his mother while Mount stood about six feet away. Just as they were about to reach for the carpet the bolt came. Mrs. Lemon fell backward and Lorraine forward, almost at the feet of his brother.

Druggist Law Upheld.

St. Paul.—An examination before the state board of pharmacy is not necessary in order to become a licensed pharmacist in Minnesota, if the applicant has had fifteen years' experience. This is the opinion of Judge Andrew Holt, who filed an order dissolving the injunction proceedings recently brought by the Minnesota State Pharmaceutical association to restrain the state board from issuing certificates to 119 applicants under the law recently passed by the legislature.

Judge Holt holds that it is not within the province of the courts to question the wisdom of the expediency of statutes of which the legislature is the sole judge. It is announced that the Minnesota State Pharmaceutical association will take an appeal to the supreme court.

Sixteen Skeletons Found.

Mankato.—A total of sixteen headless skeletons has been removed from the small mutual mound on Arthur Mitchell's farm in South Bend township, and further excavations are made for the present.

A faint arrowhead was found sticking between the vertebrae of one of the skeletons, thus revealing the manner of death of at least one of the men whose bones were found. The bones of this particular redskin will be presented to the state university for preservation.

Thomas Hughes, a historian of local repute and well known in the state historical society, holds the belief that the bones found were those of those Indians killed by enemies and buried by French miners more than a half century ago.

Over the Falls on Logs.

Minneapolis.—Over St. Anthony Falls on two logs and alive is the remarkable experience of Anthony Asplantis, a seventeen - year - old Chicago boy, who made the perilous trip involuntarily.

The young fellow shot over the falls clinging desperately to two small logs on which he had been sitting near the river bank above the falls. He was whirled in to the rapids below the falls and thrown from the logs. By hard swimming he managed to reach Spirit Island, from which place he was rescued in a boat by Patrolmen Anderson and Bennett.

Asplantis is believed to be the only person who has shot the falls and lived.

Mother and Child Drowned.

Fulda.—Mrs. John Stumm and her infant were drowned in Lime creek three miles north of here, and the husband and father had a narrow escape from sharing their fate.

Mr. and Mrs. Stumm and the baby started in a buggy to drive to the home of the woman's father. They attempted to ford the creek, which had been swollen by recent rains. One of the horses slipped and fell, dragging the other down and overturning the buggy. Mrs. Stummrehl tightly to her infant, but the strong current in the creek soon washed both the woman and the child into deep water and they were soon drowned. Stumm clung the buggy wheel for an hour, finally being rescued by a fisherman. The bodies of the woman and child were recovered.

Train Kills Two.

New Prague.—James Strasak, 60 years of age, and Carl Schmidt, 55 years of age, residents of this place, were both killed in an accident on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad. The two men were driving near a crossing between New Prague and Jordan, and in some way the train struck the wagon, killing both men and wrecking the wagon.

Fall From Wagon Kills.

Little Falls.—Herman Carlson, an aged resident of Darling, died as the result of an injury received at Darling station. Carlson had been drinking and was sitting on a wagon when he suddenly lost his balance and fell to the ground. He picked himself up saying that he was not hurt, but it later developed that he had sustained two broken ribs and other internal injuries, causing peritonitis, from which he died. The deceased was seventy years old and is survived by two sons.

Diphtheria Epidemic.

Duluth.—Northern Minnesota is in the grip of an epidemic of diphtheria, and in some of the smaller towns on the range practically one-fourth of the inhabitants are said to be ill with the disease. Numerous deaths have been reported, and the health authorities have been making strenuous efforts to check the disease. They have succeeded to an extent, although there still are many cases, conditions are reported to be greatly improved. Cohasset, Grand Rapids, Eveleth and Bemidji are among the towns most seriously affected. In Cohasset practically a quarter of the entire population have the disease in a more or less virulent form, and three and four deaths in a single family have been reported.

Mankato to Have Street Cars.

Mankato.—A street railway is now assured in Mankato, to be built entirely by local capital. A syndicate of local capitalists agreed to put up $65,000 if the citizens generally would furnish $35,000. The last $2,000 was subscribed and material has been telegraphed for to be shipped at once. The franchise granted by the council in the spring expires July 15 unless active construction has been begun, and men will be put to work at once to hold the franchise. The company will not erect a power house at present, but will obtain power from the Mankato Electric Light Co. Five miles of track will be laid at once.

Salact Hospital Site.

St. Peter.—L. A. Rosing and P. M. Ringdahl, members of the state board of control, visited the St. Peter state hospital for the insane and selected a site for the tuberculer ward. At present the hospital has no facilities for separating and treating patients suffering from tuberculosis, but the last legislature voted an appropriation of $65,000 for the construction of a ward, the appropriation becoming available Aug. 1. The site chosen for the building is a short distance south of the nurses' dormitory. The structure will be built in mission style.

Two Trainmen Killed.

Detroit.—Chas. Anderson, stationary engineer, and Brakeman Lemmin were killed and Engineer W. C. Greenbaugh was seriously injured by the derailment of a caboose and flat car on the Northern Pacific near Detroit. The accident occurred to a work train which was hauling gravel to what is known as "the mule dump."

NEWS NOTES.

St. Peter.—For the second time within a year the Round Grove creamery in Sibley county has been destroyed by fire. It was struck by lightning.

Brainerd.—Fire destroyed the Sleeper house on Front street together with the contents of two stores located in the building. The total loss is about $61,000, with $35,000 insurance.

Springfield.—A windstorm moved Anton Skiltet's farmhouse a foot on its foundation and razed a large barn, injuring several draft horses. Burnstown was also visited by the storm and the Cobden mill blown down.

Warren.—There was a large attendance at the state school land sale here, and 5,100 acres were sold at an average price of about $7. One tract sold at $20.50 per acre. Several sales were made to Illinois and Iowa men.

Mankato.—Mr. and Mrs. William Mecko of Dodge Center have identified the body of an unknown man that has been lying on a morgue table in this city for a week as that of Mrs. Mecko's uncle, John Moore, a retired farmer from near Sleepy Eye.

Ada.—Mr. and Mrs. John Pfund celebrated their golden wedding at their home in this city. Mr. Pfund was born in Switzerland seventy-five years ago and was married to Lena Hampling at Red Wing fifty years ago. He is a veteran of the civil war.

Perham.—P. J. Radke of Staples was drowned in Little Pine lake while fishing. He and a companion were fishing at a point called the bend, where the water is deep. The boat capsized and he immediately sank. The companion escaped by swimming. He is survived by a widow and three children.

St. Paul.—From a laborer at $12 a week to a prospective capitalist with $24,500 in his pocket, is a change brought about by an invention of Christian Young of Mendota. Young has been deaf as a post since he fell in the Swift Packing plant. For several years he has worked at an invention of a combination wagon and sleigh. He took out a patent recently and sold the American rights of the invention to an eastern concern for $24,500. He still has the Canadian and other foreign rights.

St. Paul.—Drafts for the receipts of three of the state institutions during May were received at the state auditor's office aggregating more than $15,000. The state reformatory at St. Cloud sent in $12,483.71; the school for the deaf at Faribault, $2,949.39, and the school for the blind at the same place, $338.82.

Duluth.—By the explosion of a barrel of lime which was being slacked on the claim of J. Murphy, near Fremah river, Carl Hugh, an employe, and William, the 10-year-old son of Mr. Murphy, were badly burned and may lose their eyesight.

A Vast Supply.

"Solomon was the wisest man," remarked the student.

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton, "he couldn't help being wise with so many wives to give him advice."

INSURANCE INVESTMENTS.

How One Company's Assets Are Distributed in the South and West.

In connection with its withdrawal from Texas, along with many other companies, rather than to submit to the new law which requires that 75% of the reserves on Texas policies shall be invested in securities of that state, which securities shall be deposited in the state and subjected to heavy taxation, in addition to the large tax now imposed on life insurance companies, the Equitable Life Assurance Society has made public the distribution of its assets, at the end of the second year of the new management. The Equitable now has $10,958,000 invested in Texas, which is twice as much as the new law requires, but the management decided that to submit to the additional taxation would be an injustice to its policyholders in other states, which impose no such penalty on the profits of their citizens.

The Equitable's report shows that more than 37% of its total reserves are now invested in the southern and western states, while only 35% of its total insurance is carried in these states. Its investments are distributed as follows: Ala., $3,099,000; Ariz., $974,000; Ark., $1,626,000; Cal., $5,142,000; Col., $5,322,000; Fla., $4,924,000; Ga., $4,048,000; Idaho, $5,197,000; Ill., $12,617,000; Ind. Ter., $443,000; Ind., $6,836,000; Iowa, $3,690,000; Kansas, $11,637,000; Ky., $2,631,000; La., $2,054,000; Md., $2,207,000; Mich., $6,009,000; Minn., $3,065,000; Miss., $767,000; Mo., $8,197,000; Mont., $1,890,000; Neb., $7,526,000; Nev., $640,000; New Mex., $1,376,000; N. C., $1,640,000; N. D., $677,000; Ohio, $11,634,000; Okla., $1,006,000; Ore., $1,158,000; S. C., $975,000; S. D., $1,305,000; Tenn., $1,969,000; Utah, $2,134,940; Va., $6,522,000; Wash., $1,260,000; W. Va., $1,000,000; Wis., $2,342,000; Wyo., $3,367,000.

HAPPENED AT BAD TIME.

Minister's Fall Significant in View of Previous Words.

In a small church in one of the mining towns of Pennsylvania there is a pulpit unique and unique. It was about the size and shape of a flour barrel, was elevated from the floor about four feet and was fastened to the wall. The ascent was by narrow winding steps.

A minister from a neighboring town, a man of great vigor and vehemence, preached there one Sunday. While preaching he bent forward and shouted out with great force the words of his text:

"The righteous shall stand, but the wicked shall fall."

Just as these words escaped from his lips, the pulpit broke from its fastening, and he fell out and rolled over on the floor before his congregation. In an instant he was on his feet again and said:

"Brethren, I am not hurt, and I don't mind the fall much, but I do hate the connection."

New Automatic Rifle.

The self-loading or automatic musket is now being seriously considered as the infantry arm of the future. The equipments of the great armies of the world with an improved rifle is hardly completed when the mechanics begin work on a new weapon. At the recent examinations of the German War Academy the automatic rifle was one of the themes for discussion. The piece now on trial has a magazine holding ten cartridges; the recoil is utilized to load and cock. Consequently the soldier can remain quietly in position, never removing his eye from the target, and fire his ten shots.—New York Sun.

Describing Weather Conditions.

The weather is called calm if the air is not moving at more than three miles an hour; 34 miles is a strong breeze, 40 a gale, 75 a storm, and 90 a hurricane.

COFFEE COMPLEXION.

Many Ladies Have Poor Complexions from Coffee.

"Coffee caused dark colored blotches on my face and body. I had been drinking it for a long time and the blotches gradually appeared, until finally they became permanent and were about as dark as coffee itself.

"I formerly had as fine a complexion as one could ask for.

"When I became convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble, I changed and took to using Postum Food Coffee, and as I made it according to directions, I liked it very much, and have since that time used it in place of coffee.

"I am thankful to say I am not nervous any more, as I was when I was drinking coffee, and my complexion is now as fair and good as it was years ago. It is very plain that coffee caused the trouble."

Most bad complexions are caused by some disturbance of the stomach and coffee is the greatest disturber of digestion known. Almost any woman can have a fair complexion if she will leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee and nutritious, healthy food in proper quantity. Postum furnishes certain elements from the natural grains from the field that Nature uses to rebuild the nervous system and when that is in good condition one can depend upon a good complexion as well as a good healthy body. QUIET EDWIN GOULDS.

MEMBERS OF FAMILY WHO SHUN GILDED SOCIETY.

Long Since Wearied of Smart Set, They Live Contentedly at Ardsley. Which Mrs. Gould Says Is the "Real Spot" of America.

New York.—How little is heard of the Edwin Goulds! Of the many members of the Gould family they are the least often met with in society and and the remaining few quiet, old-fashioned members of the 400 genuinely honor them for their unobtrusiveness. Edwin Gould is essentially a man of retirement, and one who never looks for footage for his millions. He is unlike the vast majority of the social stock to which he belongs, in that he personifies the fallacy of that material worthiness not by the weight, size and fullness of their coffers. But how much of his success is due to the wise influence of his wife? Those who know the man best say it was a fortunate day for him when he wedded Sarah Shrady. The Goulds live without ostentation most the year in Ardsley. They have long since tired of European travel; they are among the limited few of our multimillionaires who see beauties in our country equal to the best the Alps or any of the garden spots of the continent can afford.

Mrs. Gould is a nature lover, and she finds ample opportunity to invite her inclination in this direction in and around Ardsley. Her favorite pastime, however, is golf, although occasionally she is seen on the Ardsley tennis courts. If golf ever is to resume its sway among the smart set it will be due largely to the influence of Mrs. Gould and the little circle of which she is the leading figure. Ardsley is a nook that simply drives the resident afield for athletic sport. In this it is the reverse of Newport, sitting lazy by the sea, and in its level stretches of highway luring one to the tireless luxury of the upholstered automobile. It is only in the early spring and the late fall that the Newport atmosphere is really breezy, while every month in the year there is snap and life in the Ardsley air. The place draws cooling breezes from the Hudson, and is saved from monotony by its well-wooded hills It is not strange that it has been necessary to draw restrictive lines lest to keep the Ardsley reservation from being overrun with restless millionaires and their families seeking a haven.

It was Mrs. George Gould who, after a visit to the Edwin Goulds, said that Ardsley was the "real spot" of America. Of course, it might be said that Mrs. Gould spoke only for the wealthy; the poor find cramped area of a park; still her opinion is of interest as indicating how little of real and constant is the lot of, the men and women with limitless money to spend. Probably Mrs. Gould's remark was thus laughingly. Ardsley there was no suggestion of prodigal outlay; no rivalry of millions, no ridiculous competition in show and entertainments. Not long before the Georges Goulds smiled for Europe a young matron complained of weariness as a result of the endless round of the winter season. "Go to Ardsley," was Mrs. Gould's advice, given laughingly, but with a good deal of earnestness. And "Go to Ardsley" bids fair to pass to slogan among the 400, if a slogan ever could find refuge in so poor a haven. The so-called elect of the 400 are born imitators, or rather mimics, and within a week, through

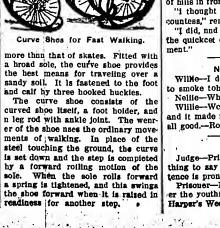
A HISTORIC CURIOSITY.

Only Double Barreled Cannon in the World at Athens, Ga.

Athens, Ga.—The only double barreled cannon in the world is one of the historic curiosities of Athens, Ga.



There is a history of unique interest that goes along with this old cannon. Besides being the only double barreled "shooting iron" of this kind ever invented, it was conceived with a peculiar idea in its invention. John Gilleland, a member of the Mitchell Thunderbolts, a local military company, was the inventor of the gun. The Mitchell Thunderbolts was a company composed of men too old for active service in the field, and was organized purely for home defense.

Mr. Gilleland, the inventor, believed that with a cannon of the double barrel pattern he could mow down Yankees by the hundreds. He had his invention cast at the Athens foundry, and, when finished, it was hauled out to the outskirts of the city, where a test was made. The test was entirely sufficient to demonstrate that the cannon was a rank failure. A 50-foot rope was fixed to the muzzle of two cannon balls was the charge. The balls were rammed into the cannon barrel and hard. In the inventor's idea that when the cannon was fired the chain would stretch taut and cut down everything within its length. When it was properly loaded it was touched off with great ceremony. One of the balls got out a little ahead of the other, and the devil and Tom Jones was to pay. It had a kind of circular motion, plowing up about an acre of ground, tore up a corn field, mowed down saplings, and the chain in leg rod with ankle joint. The weaver of the shoe sees the ordinary movements of walking. In place of the steel touching the ground, the curve is set down and the step is completed by a forward rolling motion of the sole. When the sole rolls forward a spring is tightened, and this swings the shoe forward when it is raised in readiness for another step.

Curve Shoe for Fast Walking.

LATEST IN LOCOMOTION.

With Curved Shoe One Can Move Twice as Fast as Without Them.

London.—It is claimed that anyone using the new curved shoe represented in the illustration can move twice as fast as he can by walking in the ordinary manner, the shoe causing the steps to be doubled in length. The contrivance is the result of much experimenting and of many modifications of designs. The new "walk" takes less time to learn than skating, and the weight of the shoes is not more than that of skates. Fitted with a broad sole, the curve shoe provides the best means for traveling over a sandy soil. It is fastened to the foot and calf by three hooked buckles.

The curve shoe consists of the curve shoe itself, a foot holder, and a leg rod with ankle joint. The wearer of the shoe sees the ordinary movements of walking. In place of the steel touching the ground, the curve is set down and the step is completed by a forward rolling motion of the sole. When the sole rolls forward a spring is tightened, and this swings the shoe forward when it is raised in readiness for another step.

"HE DISLIKED PESSIMISM."

"I suppose," he said, approaching her father's desk and furtively looking for the quickest and easiest way in case haste became necessary, "I suppose you—ah—have noticed that—that your daughter and—and—"

"Well," I have a daughter. You are correct in that assumption. Go on."

"You may have noticed that your daughter and—and I have been seeing—ah—I may say rather good friends for several months past."

"The fact has not escaped my notice."

"Your daughter, if I may—ah—say so, is very beautiful."

"Thank you kindly for this testimonial. Her mother and I have always thought that she was, as you say, very beautiful. But parents are sometimes poor judges in these matters. I am glad that your opinion agrees with ours.

"Miss Allinham, in addition to being beautiful, has always lived in luxury."

"Yes, it would be only fair to call it that."

"You may never have felt sufficient interest in me to make any inquiries concerning my condition in life. I feel—ah—therefore, that it le my duty first of all to—to inform you that I am not rich. I have a fair salary for a man of my age, but my income would probably scorn very small to you."

"That would depend."

"May I—ah—ask on what?"

"On whether I was getting it myself or providing it for somebody else."

"Ah, yes, I understand. I suppose it would be useless for me to expect, seeing that my income is only a few thousand dollars a year and being, as I am, without any hope of inheriting money, for me to—ah—to—to ask you—ah—to—to—ah—"

"Oh, come, confound it, I hoto peselmism. Cheer up. You may have her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Candor—His Liked It.

"Ah," said the editor, as the young author came in, "that lost thlog was good. We were very pleased with it."

"Well in that case," said the author, "I will take back what I said in my letter about not liking the way you treated me, saying I should send you no more stuff."

"Oh, that's all right," replied the editor, with heartless cruelty. "That letter is what I referred to."—Royal Magazine.

A Countess.

A gentlemnn was introduced at a reception to a charming lady, who, his friend said, was a countess. The next day the two were passing through Cross city offices, when the young lady in question was discovered with a pile of bills in front of her.

"I thought you said she was a countess," remarked the gentleman.

"I did, and she is considered one of the quickest countesses in the department."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Secondclass matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act. of Congress of March 3, 1879.

How do you feel after the 4th of July? Have you resolve that you would not celebrate next year?

Of course you will keep your resolution for pretty near a year and then you will begin to make your annual preparations for just one more celebration.

And now some of the farmers in the southern part of the state begin to complain that drainage lets the water loose to quick and rakes their rivers and floods their land, but this argument will not hinder the work of drainage, as it is better to drown out a few acres and reclaim the many.

ALL MAIL TO BE WEIGHED.

Begining July 1st and continuing for six months all mail matters received at the local postoffice, and all other U. S. postoffices, must be counted and weighed, and a record kept of the class of each piece, whether postal card, letter, package, etc., besides many other details. This work will greatly increase the labor of the postoffice force. The new ruling is made that the department may be supplied with data to enable it to find the actual cost of handling mail throughout the country.

Sheriff Lamson, of Becker county, committed suicide last week. He was a wealthy farmer when he became sheriff, but fell a victim of an appetite for strong drink, with all the results that it brings. He is spoken of as a generous, good-hearted man always ready to help a friend in need to do any act that might make life happier for his fellow men. This is genirally the case. It is not the selfish unpleasant and disagreeable man who falls into the pit of drunkenness. It is the well-meaning, friendly, helpful and sociable man who goes astray. It is generally the man with lots of friends, first class ability and the best of prospects in life. If some one could devise a way to discourage the popular notion that a man, in order to show his friendship for another man, must take him into a saloon and buy him a drink, it would be a bigger step forward in suppression of the liquor traffic than a prohibition law in every state in the union. —Red River Review (Rondrum).

Secretary of State Schmahtl is to be commended for putting the "lid" on a biennial "tooch" of about $800 on the state printing fund when he refused a customary free gift of 300 copies of the session laws to various law publishing companies. The discovery that the firms named were being favored at the expense of the printing fund was quite by accident, and came about thru one of the firms telephoning to the secretary and wantling to know when the books would be delivered. Somequestioning followed and it was found that the gift was a biennial affair and dated back some years. The publishers explained that the books were for the benefit of their lawyer patrons. "Well, then, I guess all the state cets is a gold brick," said Mr. Schmahl. "That's about it" was the answer and the result is that the state is about $800 to the good. The people can stand to have a few more of those leaky bunchholes in the state's money barrel plugged up.—Crookston Journal.

Lynch Law.

In an article on Law Notes on "The Origin of the Term 'Lynch Law'" mention was made of the fact that forure by the term "Lydford law" was used in the same sense in England. A North Carolina judge in a recent case quoted the following lines:

I oft have heard of Lydford law
How in the morn they hang and draw
And ask in judgment after.

They went to show the existence of a similar summary punishment in England.

Barnhardt's Retreat.

A Scotch visitor to the Capitol, in Chegne row, was much struck with the sound proof room which Gen. Sibley had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where all sight of sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old Scotch, with hobnobbing enthusiasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life and no human being be bae bit the wiser."

Childless Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where lack babies are drowned like superfluous kittens and others in which it is not uncommon for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution. On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devices of childless men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Hutchings and Virgins have been the saints of the world, and the childless are the philanthropists, the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the gifted writers, leaders and thinkers of all ages. Plato, Joan of Arc, Sapoorpsis, George Washington, David Hume, Locke, Spinoza, Thomas Carlyle, Florence Nightingale, Ruskin and Herbert Spencer are only some of the great names in this class. An interesting volume could be written on the indebtedness of the world to childless men and women. Over five hundred [illegible]

P. C. Wold and Alfred Swanson were over here Monday, qualifying as two directors of the Red Lake River Transportation Co. Mr. Wold is the president elected to take the place of James O'Brien who was removed from the position.

The passenger trade of the Red Lake River Transportation company will encrease as soon as the new Highlanding Sunbeam is ready to start running, as it can give better accomadation to passengers and take them through to their destination much quicker;

How often do we hear people saying that they read this of that in The Sunbeam, who are not subscribers. Better get your name on the list so you will get the paper regular as there might be something published in it that you would like to read and your neighbors wife might too. It is paper shelves with, after they had read it, before you got time to go over and borrow it.

Mad Fever.

It is reported that mad fever is quite prevelant in this part of the country at present; and while it is not fatal to life it leaves a man in a condition whereby he looses his honor and integrity. The Country seat removel committee in Red Lake county seems to efficted with this disease and have come in contact with our Honorable? board of county commissioners and given them a dose of the fatal disease.

We have not taken any active interest in the county seat fight up to the present time and are not at all anxious to get into it so our readers may depend on it that the opinion expressed in THE SUNBEAM are not paid for by either side in the county seat fight, so here you have our private opinion publickly expressed. A board of county commissioners that are elected by the people of a county to represent them, that will so far forget their manhood as to neglect their duties as county commissioners at the instigation of either side in a county seat scrap, are a disgrace to the people that elected them and should be promptly removed from office by the governor of this state. We have been in a good many county seat scraps and have witnessed what honorable men might sometimes call dirty work, but when it gets so dirty and stinks so bad, as this last deal, you can count us out of it. We have not been favorably inclined to the proposition of removing the county seat for the reason that we thought and still think that it may not be to the best interest of the tax payers in this new county at the present time, but the people that do not take the same view of the unestion that we do, have a right to be heard, and a board of county commissioners that will enter in to any scheme, at the instigation of either side to defeat the expression of the people that elected them, had ought to be promptly removed from office by the governor of this state and a tag placed on them like they used to place on drunkards in the olden times so that respectible people would not make a mistake and elect them for the position of pound master in the future.

Warning! a Mistake.

It is an ancient belief that a man's name has some mysterious sympathy with his nature, whence arise such stories as that of Humpelstiltskin, whose power over a Russian belle vanishes the moment that his name is pronounced aloud. It has been suggested with some show of reason that the modern practice of "naming" a refractory member of the British house of commons is merely a survival of this belief, which the Norsemen brought into England.

A kiss that Brought Death.

Courtship in Spain is regulated by the strictest etiquette. As is well known, a young man is never left alone with his fiancee. Near Malaga a beautiful young girl of twenty committed suicide by drinking a cup of coffee in which pleasboards had been dissolved. It appears that the girl had been driven to the deed by the adverse comments of neighbors who became aware that she had given her sweetheart a kiss.—London Mail.

The Family Cook.

Mother (coming into the children's room)—Boys, what are you making such a terrible noise over? Look at Hugo. See how quiet he sits there. Hugo—Yes, it's easy for him to sit quiet in the game we are playing. He is papa, who has come home late, and I am—you.—Wiener Salonwitzblatt.

The Kodak patentee authorities have a somewhat blunt way of putting things. Copies of a Penang paper posted with a newspaper were the other day returned marked, "Addressee hanged for murder."—Bangkok Times.

The Color of Flowers.

You have often noticed the many tinted hars and bands that rise in the shape of "forked bisgoes of flames" from wood burning in the grate. It is ten to one, however, that you never have thought to figure in the same of the resulting hues presented by flames. To bring the matter quickly to the point, we will say that the many colors are the result of combination among the different elements of the wood. The light blue is from the hydrogen and the white from the carbon, the violet is from the manganese, the red from the magnesia and the yellow from the soda, which are constituent parts of the wood.

Physical Culture.

A rational system of physical culture should insure to every man and woman who adopts it a perfectly erect, poised figure, a straight spine, a broad, deep and capacious chest, supitted and flexible, and harmonious development of all the muscles. It should also be easy and graceful in every movement, possessed of distinct muscular power and endurance, splendid health and a reserve of vitality, stability and power.

So much would the rational system of physical development do for those who followed it, and any method which will not accomplish all of these things, even for its least promising student, is in so much incomplete and false. The object of physical culture should be to render the body A more perfect instrument, more strong, more capable, more obedient, to the commands of the will.—Dring Magazine.

AN OBJECT LESSON

By MARGARET JOHNSON

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

To begin with, it was hot—hot even here on the very edge of the ocean. The air was breathless when we came down to breakfast. Mrs. Deane gave her order to Georgiana, who waited on the table, with more than her customary deliberation.

We were not very hungry that morning. It was too hot for an appetite. And conversation flagged. And when the Princess came down, rather late, with a frown on her lovely face, we felt that things were wrong indeed, and there must be something most unusual about the weather. We called her the Princess, because of her daintiness, and a certain graceful hauteur and reserve that were as natural to her as was his dignity to her grandfather, the judge.

She played a little with her breakfast, and then turned to Miss Tucker, rather abruptly.

"Do you happen to know anything about dressmaking?" she asked.

"No," said the stolid Fanny, consuming pancakes and iced coffee. "Do you?"

"I wish I did," said the Princess. A great sigh relieved her burdened heart and, having no one else to whom she might go with her trouble, she confided it with a sudden desperate impulse to Miss Tucker.

"You see," she said in a low voice, "I wanted to wear my pink gown to the hop to-night, and the waist needed fixing over, and now mamma has had to go away, and there's no one to help me, and I don't see what I am to do."

She made a little dramatic gesture of despair; but Fanny was ordering more pancakes from Georgiana, who stood at her elbow with one eye on her and one on Mrs. Deane. This is figurative, of course, for Georgiana was not cross-eyed.

"Pancakes, Georgiana," said Fanny. "Hot, please."

"Eggs, Georgiana," said the little bald-headed man in the corner. "Boiled, and not quite so soft as last time."

"Georgiana," said Mrs. Deane, waiting with admirable self-command until the others were done speaking: "Did you know that I had not had my toast yet?" Her tone was most affecting in its suggestion of wronged innocence.

"And, Georgiana," said the Princess, as pettishly as it was possible for her to speak, "I wish you would give me some water. My glass has been empty ever so long."

For the first time Georgiana flushed. She had been pale before, being one of those people who turn white when they are hot instead of red. But she filled the glass, and brought the eggs and the pancakes and the toast—she was an admirable waitress—and when we had finished, we all went out on the veranda.

And Georgiana washed the dishes with the other girls in the pantry. It was stifling out there. Georgiana wondered if it could be any hotter in the little back sewing room at Madam Morelli's, where she had stitched and suffered all through July, so that she might have this month at the seashore. She wondered if the experiment had been worth while, anyway.

When finally a leisure moment arrived she went upstairs to her room. On the way she passed Miss Dumaine's door. It was open and Miss Dumaine was within. She sat by the window in an attitude of such depression, not to say despair, that Georgiana stopped involuntarily. She saw the pink and white things, silk and lace and what not, that were scattered on the bed and chairs, and remembered something that she had overheard at breakfast, confused at the moment with Miss Tucker's order for pancakes. With a sudden impulse she tapped, and then walked boldly into the room.

"Why, Georgiana!" said Miss Dumaine, startled. There were actually tears in her pretty eyes as she looked up.

"Is this the waist?" asked Georgiana, quietly, looking at a shapeless pink something in the other's lap.

"Yes," said the Princess.

"And what did you want to do with it?" pursued Georgiana.

"I—why, Georgiana!"

"Oh, I forgot," said Georgiana. "You didn't know. I'm a dressmaker—at least, I'm in a dressmaking establishment in the city, and I thought—I didn't know but I might help you with this. I heard you talking about it this morning at breakfast."

"Really!" said the Princess, wide-eyed. "A dressmaker!"

"Yes," said Georgiana. "This is my vacation."

"Your—vacation!" repeated the Princess.

Georgiana smiled a little at her frank wonder.

"Yes," she said simply. "A good many of us do it this way. It's the only way we can afford. And won't you show me how you think you'd like to have the waist?"

"Your—vacation!" she said again, under her breath, looking up at the other's serious, pale face, absorbed in the interesting possibilities of the pink waist.

"I can do it," said Georgiana, "this way—and this," with deft fingers illustrating her words. "And I should love to—it is so pretty. The only trouble is, it will take a good while, and"—she looked at the little clock on the mantel—"there's dinner."

"Oh, never mind dinner!" cried the Princess, forgetting. "If you can do it, I'll have dinner sent up to you here."

Georgiana gave a queer little laugh.

"Will you?" she said. "Thank you, Miss Dumaine. But how are you to get your own dinner—you and the rest, without me to wait on you?"

"Georgiana! There's only one thing to do. If you will stay here and finish the waist for me, I will go down and wait on the table for you!"

"Oh—no!" said Georgiana.

"Oh—yes!" said the Princess, superbly. "Why not? It will not hurt me!"

Georgiana lifted her demure eyebrows with another little laugh. "I wasn't thinking of that," she said. I was wondering—did you ever wait on table before, Miss Dumaine?"

"Is it harder than dancing the german?" asked the Princess, with scorn. "Or riding the bicycle, or Greek verbs, or Delsarte exercises, or—golf?"

"I think it is, if you are not used to it," said Georgiana, unmoved. "You have to remember everybody's order, you know, and not get them mixed up, and not keep anybody waiting, and then they'll want toast—"

"It's dinner," said the Princess. "They can't want toast."

"They will," said Georgiana, patiently. "Somebody always wants toast. If it was midnight supper, they'd want it just the same. And then you have to wait your turn at the fire, because all the other girls want to make toast, too, and the cook is very unpleasant about it, and Katy Billings is pretty sure to spill something—you have to look out for her; and then the people—you must bring Mrs. Tomkins' fish with her meat, and you must be sure and have second-day bread for Mrs. Deane—"

"And to fill Miss Dumaine's glass before she asks for it," said the Princess, very proud and rosy. "Thank you, Georgiana! The more you say, the more you make me want to do it. I'm going to wait on that table today!"

It was a remarkable experience for everyone. She stood beside the table when we came down, in her plainest gown, a little spotted lawn, and one of Georgiana's big aprons. Her eyes were cast down modestly, and there was not a sign of a smile on her quiet face.

Mrs. Deane was so overwhelmed with wondering awe when the stately young creature at her elbow read over the menu to her, with the funniest imitation of Georgiana's manner, that she said: "Anything, my dear—anything!" in a fluttered voice, which embarrassed the Princess not a little for a moment.

There were those of us who thought the girl in her plain gown, stepping lightly back and forth with her tray, and her absorbed face, intent on doing this bit of unusual work as well as it could be done, no whit less bewitching than when she was dressed for the evening, radiant in the pink gown and pearls and roses. Georgiana thought her perfectly lovely, and told her so frankly when she helped to put on the waist, which by the way, was as great a success as the dinner.

And she washed the dishes afterward in the pantry with the other girls.

That's all—at least so far as we were concerned. It was a small thing, but by no means the least interesting of the summer. The prettiest part of it all was the conduct of the two girls toward each other afterward. There was, obviously, a sense of understanding and sympathy between them, a golden link of gratitude and respect on both sides. And those of us who knew the Princess and the Princess' mamma knew also that for her and for Georgiana this was not "all," but that the future of both girls would be happier and richer for this glimpse into each other's lives, this beginning of mutual understanding and service.

Meanwhile, the atmosphere of our table seemed pleasanter, for some reason. Perhaps it was because the weather was cooler. Perhaps it was—something else. At any rate, we all observed it—even Mrs. Deane.

Costumes in White Mohair

White mohair is used for the dress at the left. The skirt is encircled at the bottom with three ruffles headed by a band of insertion and a little frill of the material.

The blouse, with long shoulders and bell sleeves, is trimmed with insertion and little frills. The undersleeves are of lace; the girdle of the material or of taffeta.

Pale pink mohair is the material of the second dress. The skirt is trimmed to simulate blocks, with little frills of taffeta and with small buttons.

The blouse has long shoulders, where it is slashed open, and is trimmed with the buttons and frills.

The fichu and sleeves are of dotted foulard, the former trimmed with English embroidery, the latter with bands of the mohair edged with taffeta frills.

The tucked chemisette is of batiste with collar of lace; the girdle is of the taffeta.

PINAFORE DRESS OF SERGE.

Other Cool Materials May Be Utilized for the Summer.

Navy-blue serge is the most suitable material to use for a pinafore dress, but for summer wear it would be useful and cool in linen or crash, to be worn with muslin or cotton blouses.

The skirt is a circular shape, gathered into the waistband at the back and sides; the foot is turned up with a wide hem, and two-inch-wide tucks are run above.

The pinafore bodice is quite the most simple of its kind; it fastens invisibly at the back; the neck and armholes are faced in and stitched round, the waist is gathered and sewn to the skirt-band under a pointed band of the serge.

Material required: 5 yards 46 inches wide.

Simple Jersey Petticoats.

Jersey petticoats are much worn, and too much cannot be said in praise of them, for they are simply constructed, delightfully practical, and the bulkiness usually characteristic of other garments of this order entirely is done away with. Slipping over the head, the lightweight jersey top stretches so as to let the skirt pass over the shoulders easily, and as the waistband is of elastic, it at once springs back into proportions necessary to render a perfect fit. There are no hooks and eyes or fastenings of any sort, and as there is no placket there need be no worry over the skirt gaping. Some models have taffeta flounce with ruffle or plaited trimmings, which give ample fullness at the hem. This style is five dollars. Others with flounces of rustling taffeta are three dollars and make most useful traveling skirts. Both the slender figure and that inclined to embonpoint are improved wonderfully by this skirt, for it not only gives the dressmaker a wrinkleless surface to build on, but seems to reduce the size of the waist and hips of the large woman and give added symmetry to her slender sister.

Charm in Unselfishness.

Unselfishness is the first step toward being charming. The selfish woman, no matter how beautiful, never has a long reign.—[illegible]

SHOWING THE WEDDING GIFTS.

How One Bride Made Effective Display of Presents.

Wedding gifts are no longer labeled with the cards of the donors. As fast as received they are acknowledged by the bride, then catalogued in a little blank book arranged for this purpose, so there will be no danger of forgetting, in the excitement, "who sent what." On the day of the wedding the bride and her friends arrange the gifts in groups in a room set apart for that purpose. At one of the prettiest of last month's weddings, where the presents were exceptionally beautiful and numerous, a large front room on the second floor held the gifts, arranged on a dozen different tables and stands. One quaint old mahogany stand, a genuine family heirloom, held an exquisite Sheffield cake basket that had belonged to the groom's grandmother. Here also were a pair of colonial silver candlesticks, also from the groom's family, together with a set of silver teaspoons belonging to the bride's great-grandmother, and a silver porringer dating still further back. The modern silver, and there were quantities of it, was arranged on other polished tables. The copper and brasses had a table to themselves, the cut glass to another, while three tables were required for the various small sets and samples of entire sets of beautiful china. Pictures and rugs were hung on the walls, while the mantel was given over the quaint candlesticks of every conceivable design. On each table was a vase of beautiful flowers, harmonizing with the contents of the table.

Foulards for "Tailor-Mades."

Foulards made up in tailored suits are the latest wrinkle and are both pretty and sensible in this most useful form. Every one knows that for comfort in hot weather the gown of foulard takes the lead. It is cool, and its crisp surface sheds dust and refuses to be mussy under most trying conditions. Made up after any of the styles used for the linens or pongees that have been holding undisputed possession of this field, the foulard-tailor mode should meet with great appreciation.

PRETTY HAT FROM FRANCE.

This is an example of a French hat in grey crinoline, bordered with black chip. The trimming consists of a black and grey scarf, two black pins, and a white rose.

ONE MAN'S EXPERIENCE IN WESTERN CANADA.

There Are Thousands of Opportunities in the Land of Opportunity.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:

The following experience of an Illinois man who went to Western Canada six years ago is but one of the thousands of letters that could be reproduced showing how prosperity follows the settler on the fertile lands of Western Canada. This letter was written to the Chicago agent of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and is dated at Evarts, Alberta, April 8th, 1907:

"It is six years the 5th of this month since I and family landed in Red Deer, family sick and only $75 in my pocket. Bought a $12 lot, built a 12x14 shack and went to work as a carpenter. Next May sold for $400 (had added 16x18 building to shack). Purchased two lots at $70 each and built a 23x28 two story building and sold for $950. Filed on a quarter section 33 miles N. W. of Red Deer and have spent three years on it and am well pleased. Quarter all fenced and cross fenced, wire and rail, 2½ miles of fence. House 29x31 feet on stone foundation. Last year was my first attempt to raise grain, 1½ acres of fall wheat, yield grand, but was frosted August 2nd, was cut August 16th and made good pig feed. Had 1½ acres fall rye that I think could not be beat. A farmer from Dakota cut it for me; he said he never saw such heavy grain anywhere. Straw was 7 feet high. I had 4 acres of 2 rowed barley on fall breaking that did not do so well, yet it ripened and gave me all the feed I need for stock and seed for this spring. I did not have grain threshed, so can't give yield, but the wheat would have gone at least 25 bu. to the acre. Have a log stable 31x35 feet, broad roof and two smaller buildings for pigs and chickens.

"I have lived in Harvey, Ills., and know something about it. I have been hungry there and though able and willing to work could get none to do. One Saturday evening found me without any supper or a cent to get it with. A friend, surmising my situation, gave me a dollar, which was thankfully accepted and later paid back. Wife and I are thankful we came here. We were living near Mt. Vernon, Ills., as perhaps you remember visiting me there and getting me headed for the Canadian Northwest, and a happy day it has proved for me. I have not grown rich, but I am prospering. I would not take $3,000 for my quarter now. The past winter has been a hard one, but I worked outside the coldest day (52 below) all day and did not suffer. We are getting a school started now that is badly needed.

"Our P. O., Evarts, is about 15 miles; there is another office 6 miles, but it is not convenient to us. Wife and I would not exchange our home here for anything Illinois has to offer.

"Yours truly,

"(Sd.) E. EMBERLEY."

BATHING IN THE DEAD SEA.

By No Means a Pleasure, According to One Traveler.

"No sooner has one plunged into the water than one is whipped off one's feet and goes bobbing helplessly about like a wretched cork," says Rev. Haskett Smith of bathing in the Dead sea. "In the effort to regain one's footing and to get back to shore, one's feet and shins are barked by the jagged stones and pebbles, and when at length one does emerge from its treacherous bosom, with the lower limbs bleeding and torn, one becomes aware of a horrible tingling and burning sensation in eyes, ears, nostrils, mouth and almost every pore of the skin, from the brine and bitumen which have penetrated everywhere.

"Unless great care is taken the bather in the Dead sea is liable to an eruption, which breaks out all over his body, and which is commonly known as the 'Dead sea rash.' The best antidote to this is to hurry across as quickly as possible to the river Jordan and take a second plunge therein. The soft and muddy waters of that sacred but dirty stream will effectually remove the salt that has incrusted the body."

"One day I happened to read some testimonials in Peruna almanacs. I decided to try Peruna and Manalin. I bought a bottle of each, and after taking them for a week I noticed a change for the better. So I kept it up, and after using twelve bottles I was perfectly cured.

"I also gave the medicine to my children and they had the same beneficial result. I would never be without these remedies in the house.

"I highly recommend Peruna and Manalin to all my friends, and in fact to everybody."

Miss Mildred Grey, 110 Welmar St., Appleton, Wis., writes:

"It gives me pleasure to recommend Peruna for catarrh of the stomach. I had this disease for a number of years, and could not enjoy a mouthful of food that I ate. Pure White Lead is the Natural Paint Pigment

Numerous compounds are being offered to take the place of white lead as a paint, bnno real substitute for it has yet been found. Pure White Lead has a peculiar property of amalgamating with the wood upon which it is used—added to this it has an elasticity which permits the paint to follow the natural expansion and contraction of the wood. Pure White Lead (with its full natural te-nacity and elasticity, unimpaired by adulterants), alone fulfils all the requirements of the ideal paint. Every keg which bears the Dutch Boy Trade mark is positively guaranteed to be absolutely Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

POULTRY And BEES

BEST KIND OF HIVE.

Do Not Use the Box Hive Because It is Hard to Get At.

Box hives, says Farm and Home, are not advised. Even though you now think you will never open a hive, you may change your mind, and then it will be better to have had movable-frame hives from the start. Your bees may fall into the hands of someone who will greet prefer the movable frames. A colony in a box hive may be queenless; you are helpless; the colony is doomed. With movable frames you can easily determine the condition of the colony and supply a queen, if lacking.

There is no longer any patent on the movable frame and good work may be done with any one of the different forms. The idea that if you adopt a certain meko of hive you will get an extra amount of honey is all fol-de-rol. Hives don't gather and store honey; bees do that. One of the simplest as well as one of the best is the Langstroth hive, so called because its corners are locked together for greater strength. It is the most popular among men who produce honey by the ton, as well as among amateurs who keep one or two colonies for the pleasure of it. Each comb is in a movable frame, and one or all the combs can be lifted out of the hive and returned at will, and this is true of all movable-frame hives. The frame used in the dovetailed hive is called the Langstroth frame and is 17⅝ inches long and 9⅛ inches deep, outside measure.

For the production of extracted honey, a ten-frame hive is best. For comb honey it is also best, except for those who pay a great deal of attention to their bees. Such persons may do as well or better with an eight-frame hive, but for those who have only a few colonies and do not expect to spend much time with them, a hive so small as one having only eight frames is not to be bought of. Too much danger that the bees will be scarce of stores and starvo in winter or spring.

Another reason why the larger hive is better for the average farmer is that bees are not so much given to swarming where they are in large hives. However desirous you may be now to have your colonies swarm so as to increase the number of colonies, you may rest assured that the time will come when you will be still more anxious that your bees shall not swarm. Every swarm that issues means just so much cutting down of the honey crop for the current year.

CHICKEN CHATTER.

Influence of Bad Eggs.

When a bad egg is placed among good ones it doesn't take it long to spoil them.

The sex of geese may be distinguished by the voice. The female has a loud, coarse voice, while that of the gender is fine and squeaky.

If a pumpkin is cut in two and placed in the poultry house, in a short time nothing but the rind will be left. The same is true of mangel wurtzels.

The comb of a hen or pullet, if it shows up good and red, indicates that the hird is in good condition and laying, or that the laying time is near at hand.

Early hatched pullets are the ones that make the winter layers, and this should be borne in mind both in getting out the hatches and in picking out the females to keep over winter.

Pure bred poultry, first, last and all the time, is the motto of many breeders, but a well cared for flock of common chickens will do better than a neglected flock of the best breed on earth.

If you provide several inches of chaff or litter on the floor of your coop, the chickens will not be troubled with bumblefoot—bruises caused by heavy fowls jumping from the perches on to hard floors.

Any old kind of chicken will lay in the spring, but it is the early hatched, well fed, quickly matured pullet that lays when eggs are scarce and high priced. And a little foresight will produce these birds.

Cows and chickens go well together. Anything that promotes milk production is also good to feed to hens, even to the silage and clover hay, and milk is one of the best rations that can be given to the laying hens.

Keeping male birds with females that are not used for breeding is a waste of food. Infertile eggs will keep longer than fertile ones, and the hens will lay fully as well, or better, if not harrassed by the attentions of the males.

UTILIZING THE BONES.

Surprising That This Valuable Food Material Is Allowed to Waste.

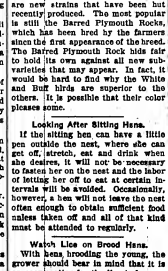
It is a surprise to me that the bones produced on the farm and coming from the tahls of the farmer are not more generally utilized in the feeding of poultry, says a writer in Farmers' Review. I bought a good bone cutter several years ago and found that it worked to perfection. I had heard about it being hard work to cut or grind bones, but I think that must be the case only with the old machines that are now out of date. Weys have been found of making the work easy, the newer machines being so adjusted that thin power required is comparatively small.

I found that I had at hand a big supply of all kinds of bones. From the butcher shop I got fresh bones with the meat hanging to them. When the bones were ground they presented an appearance of being largely ground meal. The fowls ate them with avidity and they certainly had a stimulating effect.

I was able to utilize all the bones that came from our own dining table, and that was a large amount. These bones had always been thrown away before that. The bones contain not only lime, but they also contain some phosphorus and some nitrogen. They are a good food for fowls, whose glzzards are made for the utilizing of such materials.

Of course the droppings of the hens so fed are richer than are the droppings of hens that have no ground bone. The difference is largely in the amount of phosphorus. I wonder that more farmers do not have machines for preparing bones for fowls.

VENTILATION FOR HIVE.



The Advantage of Morn Than One Entrance to Hive.

Dr. Miller says, in referring to the advantage of having more than one entrance to a hive during the height of the honey-flow: "You can not make me believe it is not easier for the bees to have one hole for the air to go out and another for it to come in than to make the air go both ways in the same hole." This is something for the practical bee-keeper of to-day to think over very carefully, says Gleanings in Bee Culture. Too much ventilation sometimes certainly is had, but is there not somewhere a golden mean by which we can reduce the cost of a great load of work? Or, to put it another way, is it necessary to keep a large force of workers at home fanning during the heat of the day if we can by some mechanical means reduce the temperature of the hive, allowing this force to go to the fields? This question will binge somewhat on whether comb or extracted honey is produced.

the small end down; if three months old it will stand on the small end, and if older it will float with large end out of water more or less, according to age.

Plymouth Rocks.

There are now three kinds of Plymouth Rocks—the Barred Plymouth Rocks, White Plymouth Rocks and Buff Plymouth Rocks. The two latter are new strains that have been but recently produced. The most popular is still the Barred Plymouth Rocks, which has been bred by the farmers since the first appearance of the breed. The Barred Plymouth Rocks hide fair to hold its own against all new subvarieties that may appear. In fact, it would be hard to find why the White and Buff birds are superior to the others. It is possible that their color pleases some.

Looking After Sitting Hens.

If the sitting hen can have a little pen outside the nest, where she can get off, stretch, eat and drink when she desires, it will not be necessary to fasten her on the nest and the labor of letting her off to eat at certain intervals will be avoided. Occasionally, however, a hen will not leave the nest often enough to obtain sufficient food unless taken off and all of the kind must be attended to regularly.

Watch Lice on Brood Hens.

With hens brooding the young, the grower should bear in mind that it is an easy matter for the lice to become very numerous before their presence can be told. They should be examined at least once each week and the remedies applied with the first appearance.

Doan's Kidney Pills brought my first relief and six boxes have so thoroughly cured and regulated my kidneys that there has been no return of my old trouble."

HERE'S ONE ON THE "ROOKEY."

Gets Sentry Call Twisted When Dazzled by Commander.

A drummer sometimes gets his orders twisted, but never quite so badly as this "rooker" I saw down at Chickamauga when the troops were being mustered in for the Spanish-American war, says a traveling man in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

This boy, fresh from St. Louis, was on the way to the front and proud of it. He had his first assignment to guard duty and he had been carefully instructed as to calling "Who goes there?"

The officer in command of the division was a dignified martinet. The "rooker" had never seen him. About midnight the general came home from a reception in town. He was all dressed up in his dress togs and he was the swellest thing the new guard over saw. As the general passed his post the boy gazed at him open-mouthed. Just in time he remembered he was expected to say something. So he gasped:

"There goes who?"

ELEVEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Hands Cracked and Bleeding—Nail Came Off of Finger—Cuticura Remedies Brought Prompt Relief.

"I had eczema on my hands for about eleven years. The hands cracked open in many places and bled. One of my fingers was so bad that the nail came off. I had tried so many remedies, and they all had failed to cure me. I had seen three doctors, but got no relief. Finally I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent Pills. Of course I keep Cuticura Soap all the time for my hands, but the one cake of Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment cured them. I recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all suffering with eczeme. For Hardening Drill.

Hardening an ordinary drill in sulphuric acid, states the English Mechanic, makes an edge that will cut tempered steel or facilitate cutting hard rock. The acid should be poured into a flat-bottomed vessel to a depth of about one-eighth of an inch. The point of the drill is heated to a dull cherry red, and dipped in the acid to that depth. This makes the point extremely hard, while the remainder remains soft. If the point breaks, re-harden, but with a little less acid in the vessel.

The Breakers to Remain Closed.

Word comes from abroad that Mrs. Vanderbilt is to take a large estate near London, and that the Breakers will not be open this season in Newport.

This will be the second summer that this magnificent estate has been closed, and it means a social as well as financial loss to the place.

On the gossips of the summer set it means that something attractive is keeping Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter on the other side of the Atlantic—something that draws like a lodestone.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Dr. A. P. Pooler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Barrie, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Willett, of New York City, says: "During the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders. I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile disorders."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

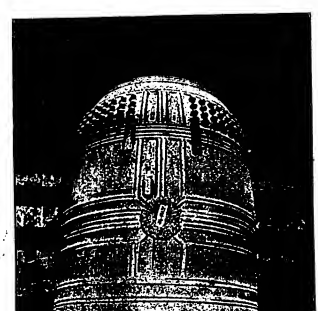
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY



By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

Patroitism and Religion are one with the Japanese

Yamada, Ise, Japan.—How much religion have the Japanese and what is it? A sweeping answer to that question would be that Japan's attitude towards its religious is pretty much that of the small boy in this country toward the cod skin which he ties around his ankle to keep away cramps when he goes in swimming. He doesn't much believe in it, or think about it, but still considers it wrong to refuse, so he keeps on the safe side.

It would be easy to write learnedly of Buddhism and Shintoism as elaborate and beautiful religious systems, if I did so few readers would finish this article, and, what is more to the point, I would not have come within a mile of getting the information which as it exists here today. After three months spent amid shrines and temples and tombs, and largely within sound of temple bells and drums (one of the latter is booming as I write), I am prepared to say that the Japanese as a whole are indifferent to all religions; while of the few who do care, most regard religion as a sort of charm to keep away evil or to procure certain tangible benefits.

There are two religious systems, aside from Christianity, which claim the worship of the Japanese, Buddhism and Shintoism. Of these the latter scarcely aspires to be a religion; since its most intelligent adherents declare that it is only an exterior and saluary worship. As for Buddhism, old Buddha himself would never recognize this perverted system, with its pantheon of more than a million gods, and its innumerable concessions to Shintoism. In fact, the common religion is a mixture which nobody but a few of the learned priests professes to be able to understand, of both Buddhism and Shintoism. Practically one must agree with the statement that "Patriotism is the religion of the Japanese."

A Diety Who Nods.

The emperor himself is a Shintoist; yet I have been in no less than three Buddhist temples which have apartments reserved for him, while to have accepted, when he has gone to the temples to worship. He seems to be peculiarly impartial in the matter of religion, favoring Christianity by large gifts, and I have heard it whispered in many parts of the empire that his favorite diety is one Bacchus. It would be treason to speak such a thing out loud in Japan, although foreigners have a very simple explanation for the drowsiness which often besets his majesty on the occasion at his public appearances.

Undoubtedly the common people worship the emperor himself. The educated classes give another explanation of their reverence toward him, while students laughingly repeat the gossip that somehow manages to pass the two walls and double moats of the imperial palace. I have even found a company of college-bred Japanese willing to discuss the possible future of the monarchy, in the light of the democratic tendency of the times. Nevertheless, the great bulk of the Japanese sincerely worship the emperor. His picture is in every public school and the pupils bow down to it daily. Mimeo schools also display the portrait, and nearly all possible respect to it; by law they are required to save it first in case of fire, and nothing may be hung above it on the walls.

Yamada, in the province of Ise, may be called the religious and patriotic center of Japan. Here the emperor came to worship at the shrine of his imperial ancestors, to give thanks for the victorious conclusion of the recent war. Hither also hundreds of thousands of pilgrims come annually from all parts of the empire. On ordinary days the number is from 700 to 1,000; on special occasions it mounts to 15,000 a day. Of course, when the emperor was here there came also a multitude which no man could number.

These two shrines are the most impressive in Japan—far more so than the ornate Buddhist temples at Nikko, Kioto, Tokio and elsewhere. He who expects display will be disappointed; one traveler exclaimed: "There is nothing to see; and besides they won't let you see it."

This simplicity of the shrines is really grand; plain, unpainted timbers for beyond an expectation of material benefits to the living and safety to the dead.

At the temple at Shiogama, for instance, there is one idol who is the particular friend of lovers. The screen about his pedestal is covered with hundreds of wisps of twisted paper. The idea is that if one will write the name of the person whom he or she wishes to marry on a slip of paper and then tie it with one hand to the screen, the prayer will be granted. If the one-handed feat cannot be performed, then the coveted object will not be attained. The sight is more pathetic than curious when one remembers what little part either the affections or desires of the individuals most concerned play in a Japanese marriage.

Spit-Ball Prayers.

Akin to this is the practice of writing out prayers and then chewing them into spit balls and throwing them at the idol. If they adhere, the prayer is answered. One rather hard some idol that I recently noticed had a large spit ball in his eye, scarcely marring his good looks. It is common to throw stones into the laps of the idols, or into the stone basins set at temples, and if they land safely, the prayer is heard. At Nikko is a small shrine the roof of which is covered to the breaking point with wooden slabs on which are written prayers for an easy childbirth. Shrines especially devoted to wives desiring children are abundant and popular all over the islands. And, judging from the number of children that swarm in every village and city, these prayers are fully answered.

One of the most pathetic temples I have visited is the children's temple at Osaka, which is filled with the clothes and toys of dead children, given as votive offerings by bereaved parents. The humdrum, mechanical manner in which the attendant priest droned out prayers and rang the bell in behalf of two parents who brought an offering while I was there made one want to lay hands on him. Next by is a peculiar device for offering prayers for the dead. The name is written on a thin shaving of wood, and then placed in a large stone cistern in the form of a turtle, into which sacred water is constantly running. Devotees take great pains to have the wood thoroughly drenched, for thus the prayer is born to the god.

The Largest Bell in the World.

At the Tenaoji temple at Osaka are a number of interesting sights. In the first place, the temple courts are a regular bazaar, filled with a display of second-hand goods. Scores of dealers have their wares spread about and a lively business is done with pilgrims and others.

The largest whole bell in the world is belag hung in this temple area. It was cast at the time of the Osaka exposition, two years ago, and 10,000 Buddhist priests were present, which is about one-tenth of the total number in the empire. Report went forth that, following an ancient custom, a young maiden was wanted to propitiate the gods by throwing herself into the molten metal; and a young woman really presented herself as an offering, but of course the authorities would not permit the sacrifice. This bell, which is second to the broken bell at Moscow is size, was made of gifts of swords and ornaments and money, and has a tone of more than ordinary richness. All Buddhist temples contain large bells and their sound is soft, deep and musical.

One other phase of worship at this temple is the pond full of sacred turtles. It is a pious act to feed these with the pink rice balls which a priest sells. Here I enjoyed the sensation of being an Andrew Carnegie, for the purchase of half a nickel's worth of the food (about a quarter of a peck) caused the wondering natives to shout: "Oh, see! He is a very rich man!" The hundreds of turtles race and fight for the bounty in balls and fight for the bounty in balls and fight for more. This feeding of the living creatures that are called sacred is a pleasant form of religious devotion. I have fed wriggling eels to sacred cranes (the eels were not sacred, and had an eighth), pigeons, deer, horses, rice to sacred fishes; and have paid a few coppers to see a dancing priestess go through her slow, graceful posturing and gesturing, without moving her feet. Certainly worship at a popular shrine or temple could scarcely be called monotonous with all these diversions, and the various concessions for the sale of souvenirs besides.

My candid opinion is that while the sincerity of many Buddhists and Shintoists may not be questioned, the one vital and increasing religious force in Japan is Christianity. Within the last year I attended a missionary preaching service, and among more than 100 persons present was an old woman who had been 18 years a Christian. She told how the missionary had formerly been stoned when he went into a town, and how she herself had been bitterly persecuted. Now all is changed. At the seat of the imperial shrines Christianity is listened to respectfully and accepted by an increasing number. That same sort of thing is going on all over Japan. Priests and priests' families are becoming Christians and even preachers. The Christian propaganda is carried on at the big temple festivals. Hundreds of school teachers and other government officials have become Christians. The student class seems to be giving more attention to Christianity than to any other religion. The native believers whom I have met manifest a happiness and earnestness which are conspicuously lacking in the case of adherents of the other creeds. In a word, there is a life apparent in the western birth which Buddhism and Shintoism do not show.

COMMERCIAL CLUBS

CAN BE MADE IMPORTANT FACTORS IN TOWN BUILDING.

BEST FIELD FOR THEIR WORK

Their Efforts Should Be Put Forth to Keep the Dollars in the Home Town—Benefits of Business Interests.

During the past few years there has been more than ordinary activity in the organization of so-called commercial clubs, business men's leagues and similar associations in the agricultural sections of the country. Some had mushroom growth, and like some flowers, bloomed and blossomed, withered and decayed in an hour. Others struggled along indifferently and succeeded in spending much of the people's money without assisting the town to greatness, while a very few succeeded in doing things that were of benefit to the community.

There is little use in trying to make a suit of clothes for a man out of a pattern of cloth that has only sufficient goods for a child's suit. There is little use in trying to build up a great town in a locality where there is not the material to sustain it, and where there are only resources for the support of a hamlet. Towns of importance exist only where there are certain natural advantages, resources that can be utilized in manufacturing, territory sufficiently large to command extensive trade, or some other favorable condition. In the west manufacturing must be the economic things to be confined to such lines as can be advantageously produced. In manufacturing towns many factors. The site must be considered the cost of fuel, the raw material, the labor and highly important are the transportation facilities.

One of the anticeable things about commercial clubs is the optimistic tendencies of their members. Business man of a strictly agricultural town will form an association. Perhaps the leaders are interested in the real estate business. They want the town to boom. Some of them may have a few acres of land worthless unless for a "factory" site. Meetings are held, plans are made for the bringing in of some manufacturing plant that perhaps may give employment to half a dozen or a dozen hands. Correspondence is started with a view of getting some outsider interested. The right man, apparently, makes his appearance. He wants a bonus of a few thousand dollars. His proposition is seriously considered. The subscription paper is passed around, the amount secured, and the real estate man sells his "factory" site at a good price. The factory is started. It runs about a year and there is a vacant factory building for rent, or for sale. How many towns in the southwest have had this experience?

Even had the enterprise been a success, it remains that there is a field more productive of good for the town than the "club" overlooked. Say that a factory be started in a small town. It may give employment to a dozen men, the pay roll amounts to $30 a day. The output of the concern may reach a total of from $25,000 to $35,000 a year. Every little helps," and all other things in harmony this adds to the importance of the place. But let us do a little "estimating." Suppose that there is about the town a territory of 150 square miles. Suppose that this territory has 1,500 families—a conservative figure—as the customers of the factory. This would make the town those who should be trading in the town. The reports of the bureau of statistics of the United States show the annual cost of the maintenance of a family. The average expenditures of the farmer each year for all the supplies required in the way of agricultural machinery, carriages, wagons, clothing, and food, is $170. The careful estimates of the amount of the farmers' trade that goes to the mail-order house and is in other ways diverted from his home town, shows that it is more than 25 per cent. of all he spends. Thus we find that from the territory of the town there is annually diverted in trade the nice sum of more than $79,000. This amount goes from the pockets of the farmer in its unbuilding. It means that every day the town loses about $125 in trade.

Now it would not be much better if the commercial club took up the matter of devising ways and means for protecting the interests of the enterprises in the mercantile lines already established, than to bring in a new factory. What is "mercantile success? Is not the trade of the farmers and the people of the town entitled to the fair value of the wages paid to the few man that the factory might employ? Does not $79,000 in trade mean more than $30 a day paid and the general scouring to the wealth of the town by the factory? Here is a wide field for commercial club effort in the keeping in the town the dollars that are the most devising means of protecting trade.

Courage in Daily Life.

Bravery helps to make a nation safe. A nation of cowards, however prosperous, will not be a secure nation for long. Women who dare fling themselves against great odds for the sake of principle and distinctions; who do not shrink from crying out against any evil that may menace the purity of the great community who will, if need be, serve all political, social and financial ties for love of country—these are the heroes by which a nation records its inner need.

UNITY OF INTERESTS.

Relationship of Residents of Rural Communities to the Home Town.

"Live and let live," is a policy that has come down through the ages and is an expression of the Golden Rule, only in different words. There is in it born in man a desire for self-preservation. It is a law of life, and to this desire can be attributed that which is considered selfishness within us. Savage man has little regard for the rights and properties of others. He lacks the sense of equity and justice and is guided solely by the brutal instincts. Intelligent man realizes that all his fellow creatures are entitled to the same rights he would enjoy himself. Therefore where the Christian spirit is found, there can be looked for such equity as gives all an equal chance to gain a livelihood and to enjoy the products of their labor.

There should be the greatest harmony among the citizens of every community. The interest of all the classes comprising a city or a district should be considered identical. It has been noted that the most prosperous towns have been built up by harmonious and united effort of all the people composing it. In these days when there are evils to combat, when oppressive trusts exist that are factors in unequal distribution of wealth, it is all important that the masses in each and every community unite and work in harmony for the protection and betterment of local conditions. It is to be regretted that in many agricultural communities there is a lack of harmony between what is called the business interests and the producers of crops. Different reasons may be advanced for this condition, but the most common cause is a misunderstanding on the part of the citizens as to the relationship that should exist between them. It is wrong for the teachings that go forth that the farmers' interests are different from those of the merchant, or that the merchants' interests differ from farmers' of the community. It is also an erroneous idea that the town is alone for the townspeople to glean from the farmer for his support? And it is equally true that the town is an important thing to the farmer. It is a convenience to him and he is as deeply interested in all that pertains to it, to its advancement and the betterment of its public institutions, its streets, its parks and all, as are the people who reside within the town. The merchants should realize how important the farmer is to them, and the farmer should be brought to a realization that the town is for him as well as for those who reside within its limits, and, that the best antagonism between the retail deats on the farms and the residents of the town the better it will be for the whole community. There is a unity of interests that cannot be ignored, and there is a common field wherein all can work for mutual benefit.

GET-RICH-QUICK GAMES.

Government Investigating the Operators of Bucket Shops That Do Business Through the Mails.

In times of prosperity there are always chances far the grafter. During the past ten years he has had the cry of the get-rich-quick man. No sooner does one scheme play out than another takes its place. Thanks to the ever diligent postal inspectors, and an unrelenting government, the schemers are not so plentiful as a few years ago, but some years a number of supposed legitimate grain and stock brokers have set up both eastern and western cities. These were active in soliciting through the mails, and through local agents the business of country farmers. The millions of money gained from the unsuspecting people will never be known. Take Chicago. St. Louis and other cities large and expensively conducted offices were maintained. Once the government got on the right trail, there were irregularities discovered that resulted in the orders being issued against a number of the concerns. The end is not yet, and the work of extermination will be kept up till there is no room in operation. Buying stocks in a fair market is a risky business, but when there are schemers to steal the cards against the investor, there is not a ghost of a show. Many a bank clerk and business man can trace his downfall to speculating in the bucket shops.

Deadly Common Plants.

The things that give the most pleasure in life frequently can also cause the greatest pain. Among flowers, for instance, the beautiful snowdrop, the jonquils, jonquil and narcissus are all poisonous, and to eat the smallest part of the root of either will result in death. Equally deadly results, while the juice of the leaves will cause violent vomiting.

The berries of the yew tree have killed many people, and the opium obtained from poppies has also claimed its victims. Lady's slipper and lily of the valley are both dangerous, and if the blossoms of the former be chewed they will cause vomiting. Flowers from bulbous roots, however, seem to be the most dangerous, and it might not be out of place to declare in these to label them with a crossbones and mark them poison.

Cigarettes and Conscience.

The man who finds himself to cigarettes shows a smallness of mind. He seems smitten with some feeble imbalance that feels it is not right to smoke; but he smathers it, and with great bravado determines to be a devil of a dog, and take a cigaretta. —Gratz.

Sporting Gossip.

That yachting as a sport is growing fast, not only in this country, but all over the world, is shown by the number of yachts that are built, by the number of races arranged and by the increase in the number of yacht clubs. There are now in this country nearly 3,500 yachts that are of sufficient importance to be placed in the yacht register. There are more than 500 yacht clubs that are registered also, and there are many small yachts, thousands of them, that are called on small inland lakes and rivers, and many yacht clubs, also small, that are not registered. Along the coast line there are to be found yachts in every harbor, and on the shore or on lakes that are large or small. The yacht clubs have in the last few years done much to boom the sport. Through the Atlantic coast canforonce uniform rules have been adopted and now these rules are being accepted by other organizntias all over the country. The clubs are working together in the interest of sport and there are now no clashes in dates and all is smooth sailing for the yacht owner until he gets his boat into a regatta and then he has all the trouble and storm he wants. It is the same as the other side of the Atlantic. The international cnafereeon did much far the sport and now all the countries of Europe and all the British colonies where there are yachts have rules that are similar. This year in England several new craft have been built under the new rules which will be raced, and all are wondering how the rule will work out. From what has been seen of the yachts the opinion seems to be abroad, also, that are developed and that they will ho fast. The crackers who have maintained that speed is to be sacrificed to comfort are to ha disappointed and the coming season's esport promisee to ha the best ever held.

the league. This is his first appearance in major league campany, but the assertions of his friends as to his ability to hold his own with the best of them is being regularly proved. Moren is a product of Pittsburg.

The greatest athlete developed within the past ten years is Leo J. Talbot, the young Mercersburg acid-taker, who is the champion all around cross country runner and holder of the world's 12-pound hammer record five times, set new world's scholastic figures for the 12-pound shot, and defeated the best college men of the east and west in throwing the 16-pound hammer, the standard for college and amateur competition. His mark for the latter event is 158 feet. Talbot stands six feet four inches in height, and weighs 210 pounds. He is finely proportioned, with massive broad shoulders and a deep chest. This is Talbot's first year at Mercersburg, be having previously attended the Normal training school at Cortland, N. Y. Next fall Talbot will cater the agricultural course at Cornell university, and the indications are he will be a weight thrower who is almost sure of two first places, even at the present time, the greatest record for the 12-pound shot was made a fortnight ago, when he tossed the mark 39 feet 10¾ inches in the middle states Interscholastic championships. At Princeton, in the Interscholastic meet, the Mercersburg star made his first world's record, throwing the 12-pound hammer 190 feet nine inches. This was far above the record, whether amateur or professional. In Penn's relay meet Talbot has tossed the 16-pound missile 153 feet five and one-half inches, winning the event and beating Horr, of Syracuse, intercollegiate champion and many stars of the east and west. He also took third place in the discus, an event at which he was unfamiliar, and third place in the 16-pound shotput. The next essay of the young giant came in the Yale interscholastic games. He threw the 12-pound hammer 181 feet, bettering his own record, and he also won the shotput with nearly 50 feet.

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—By direction of the president there is to be another reorganization of the isthmian canal commission. This time the principal branch of the commission affected will be that in Washington, which has been executing the orders of Chief Engineer Goethals with reference to the dispatch of labor and supplies to the canal zone. Now, however, the president has given imperative instructions that "the most rigid economy consistent with the highest degree of efficiency" shall be the policy. As a result an order has been issued abolishing the auditor's office and placing the work of auditing the accounts of the commission under the auditor for the war department. The purchasing business will be intrusted to an officer of the army.

Joseph Bucklin Bishop of New York, who has been in charge of the office here since the reorganization some months ago, may proceed to the isthmus and perform the duties of secretary there. The advisability of this action is now under consideration. The president has stated emphatically that Mr. Bishop must be retained at his salary of $10,000 per annum. David R. Ross, purchasing agent, and Ernest S. Benson, general auditor, who also received $10,000 each, have resigned. The former will probably be succeeded by Maj. Hodges of the engineering corps of the army, whose army pay will be increased to $6,000.

It is said the president expects criticisms of the canal administration during the next session, both from Democrats and from representatives of that element in his own party which is not in sympathy with his policies generally. As rigid economy is the surest way to avoid just criticism, he has instructed Secretary Taft to cut expenses to the bone, while at the same time seeing to it that the dirt is kept flying.

Secretary Taft has forwarded to the president reports showing that, exclusive of $50,000,000 originally paid to the French company for all its rights in the property, there has actually been spent up to last March only about $34,000,000 out of a total appropriation of $145,000,000. The total sum appropriated for actual construction is therefore over $74,000,000. Thus the commission has available for purposes of construction about $40,000,000 with which to operate until congress authorizes the expenditures for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1908.

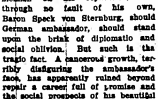
CONTROVERSY OVER THE FAIRBANKS' BIRTHPLACE.

WAS Vice President Fairbanks born in a log cabin? This great question, which threatens to become an issue in the next presidential campaign is causing excitement among the sons of Indiana. In "The Life and Speeches of Charles Warren Fairbanks," by W. H. Smith, is shown a picture of a log cabin in which the vice president is reported to have been born.

The author's son, William Wolf Smith, in reply to a recent article in an eastern weekly, has taken up the assertion that the autobiography is inaccurate and that the picture is one of a series of fakes received for the purpose of promoting the vice president's political ambitions. William Wolf Smith has issued the following statement:

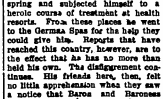
"Much was made of a picture in the book representing the house in which Mr. Fairbanks was born. As the house was burned a few years after his birth and no picture had been taken of it, Mr. Fairbanks at the request of Mr. Smith (my father) made a rough pencil sketch from memory which was dressed up for publication." This, Mr. Smith says, is all the connection Mr. Fairbanks had with the picture.

In the autobiography Mr. Smith says Mr. Fairbanks was four years of age when the cabin was burned, and Indianians are pointing to the assertion that Mr. Fairbanks can sketch with accuracy a building that was destroyed when he was four years old as a demonstration of his wonderful memory.



MEN BUSY CLEANING AND PAINTING WHITE HOUSE

THE White House will be spick and span, on the outside as well as inside, when the presidential family returns from Oyster Bay next fall. Twenty painters are now at work on the old building.



The White House is constructed of Virginia sandstone, which is exceedingly porous. Mrs. Adams, the first mistress of the president's house, as it was then called, complained bitterly to her friends of the coldness and dampness of the building during her first winter there. There were no stoves or other heating apparatus except the large grates in the executive residence then, and the roads were so muddy that wood in sufficient quantity could not be hauled to supply the grates. This condition was overcome by painting the sandstone with a coat of white lead. Each year this has been repeated, until there is a layer more than a quarter of an inch in thickness on the walls.

Last year, instead of putting on another coat of white lead, a chemical preparation was used to cleanse the walls. This caused the paint to crack and in many places peel off, making the building unsightly.

The painters are now engaged in scraping off the country's accumulation of white lead. When this is done the building will receive several coats of fresh paint. The work will require several months.

TRAGIC FATE BLIGHTS LIFE OF AMBASSADOR

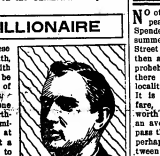
IT is the irony of fate that at the height of his career, with no blemish on his reputation, and through no fault of his own, Baron Speck von Sternburg, should German ambassador, should stand upon the brink of diplomatic and social oblivion. But such is the tragic fact. A cancerous growth, terribly disfiguring the ambassador's face, has apparently ruined beyond repair a career full of promise and that social prestige of his beautiful American wife, and it is understood here that Germany will send another ambassador some time within the next six months.

The baron caught this infection of the face, the nature of which physicians do not seem to understand clearly, during his service for the kaiser in India.

The baron hurried across the water as soon as congress adjourned last spring and subjected himself to a heroic course of treatment at health resorts. From these places he went to the Germa Spas for the help they could give him. Reports that have reached this country, however, are to the effect that he has to more than hold his own. The disfigurement continues. His friends here, then, felt no little apprehension when they saw a notice that Baron and Baroness Speck von Sternburg had been commanded to take breakfast with the kaiser. Sure enough within a day or two after the ambassador was the guest of his ruler a German paper which frequently has the right tip on court affairs published a report that Sternburg would be recalled.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

BLIND MAN FOR SENATE



Judge T. P. Gore, the Democratic nominee for United States senator, from Oklahoma, who is practically certain of election, will be the first blind man to occupy a seat in congress. "Oklahoma's Blind Orator," as he is known, is one of the most interesting characters in the new state. He has been sightless from boyhood, yet none of his fellow citizens have a higher intellect or better education. From the age of 11 until he was 16 his mother and sister instructed him by reading to him.

At 21 Gore was an enthusiastic populist. He started to stump the state of Mississippi, challenging congressmen, senators or whoever he met, to debates. His first speech of this kind is described by one who was a resident of the same county, Webster, at that time.

The orator says: "Gore was rather green, so to speak, in appearance at that time; his trousers struck him half way between his ankles and knees, and his coat sleeves were midway between his hands and elbows. He had lived the greater portion of his life in a county through which until recent years no railroad had traversed, yet he was brilliant even at this age. The Democratic speaker who opposed Gore made the first talk, glorifying the party and ending with a quotation from the old hymn, 'We Have Landed Many Thousands and We Will Land Many More.' It was Gore's turn next and he took advantage of this last sentence of the Democrat to catch his audience. In a singing voice, imitating the tune by which the hymn is sung and by which it was known to the immense audience, he repeated: 'We have landed many thousands and we will land many more.' 'Yes,' he said, 'but where have you landed them?' and then, after the answer from the blind boy: 'In hell.' The words caught the crowd and he was cheered enthusiastically. He launched forth into a speech, skinning his opponents, and holding every man in his audience until the last words were uttered. Honeoverand there were calls for Gore all over the state, and his popularity was a wonder."

Gore still retains his powers as an orator and during the recent campaign was considered the most eloquent man on the Oklahoma stump.

LITTLE KNOWN MILLIONAIRE

Emigrant, coachman, multimillionaire! Those are the three grades in the life of C. A. Smith, a Swede who lives at Minneapolis. Mr. Smith is only 54, and the next stage in his life will be given up to placing his descendants on a rock of fortune that will endure for centuries, perhaps.

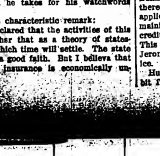
The story of this sturdy, thrifty Swede is one of the many stories of fortune which the northwest loves to tell. Smith landed off an emigrant train in Minneapolis on June 28, 1867, at the age of 14. He was a strong boy, without a word of English, but in a day or two went to work as a chore boy at the home of ex-Gov. Pillsbury. His native name was unpronounceable, so became Smith.

Soon he was good enough to drive the coach. He went to school a little, and then entered Pillsbury's hardware store.

Finally Smith went into the store business himself, with Pillsbury as his partner. It was at Herman, Minn., and they sold grain, lumber and farm implements. Every year the firm made a little business wisdom, putting more money away, and becoming Americanized.

In a few years the country store was too small for his activities. He went back to Minneapolis, and after five of the C. A. Smith lumber mills started to cut logs in 1884. The business grew, and the mills with it, until they soon were the largest in the world.

A FACTORY HEROINE



Miss Mary Guinan, a resident of Middletown, N. Y., the first woman to receive the Roosevelt prize for bravery, is not at all confused by the great honor bestowed upon her. She is a modest little woman, and works every day at her machine in the shirt factory where she has been employed for 18 years.

On December 19 last, when Miss Guinan was returning from her work, she saw John C. Runyon, an aged merchant of Middletown, N. Y., standing on the Erie railroad tracks at Montgomery street, waiting for a train to pass. The train was going very slow and Mr. Runyon did not see an east-bound train approaching.

Miss Guinan saw the old man's danger and, stooping under the gates, pushed the aged merchant off the east-bound track as the train rushed past. The two were for a moment in a space of less than three feet, with a train rushing past at high speed on each side. Miss Guinan held the old man until one of the trains passed and then assisted him to the sidewalk.

Miss Guinan then went home without giving her name and told no one of the incident. One of the spectators followed her, and on learning her identity made the story public.

NEW INSURANCE CHIEF

Darwin P. Kingsley, the new president of the New York Life Insurance company, to succeed Alexander E. Orr, has attracted no little attention in the business and financial world during the past ten years.

Mr. Kingsley is 50 years old. Following his graduation from the University of Vermont, he went to Colorado, where he worked as a teacher and a journalist. In 1886 he was made auditor of the state of Colorado. In 1889 he became identified with the New York Life Insurance company and was made inspector of agencies for New England. He was soon transferred to the home office. After filling the chairs of superintendent and third vice president he was elected vice president in 1905.

Mr. Kingsley has taken a prominent part in the executive affairs of his company and has served on all the important committees. He is a fighter for business and he takes for his watchwords "safety" and "economy."

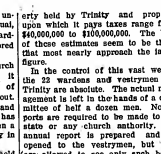
In his letter of acceptance he made this characteristic remark:

"The laws of this state have in effect declared that the activities of this and other companies must diminish. Whether that as a theory of statesmanship is sound or unsound is a question which time will settle. The state has so decreed and we accept the decree in a good faith. But I believe that such restrictive legislation applied to life insurance is economically unsound."

Gleanings of Gotham

Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—Trinity church is under fire again, and it has, as usual, been as serene under the bombardment as Gibraltar would be if peppered by a broadside of popguns.



Trinity is the richest church corporation in the world, and it is in regard to the riches of the church that the fuss is about. What the wealth of Trinity is and what is done with its income has been a burning issue for more then a century. It is a standing mystery in New York.

The property of the church is held by Trinity corporation, and it is a close one. The extent of its wealth is a secret locked in the corporation books, and they are open only to a few of the higher officers.

Outsiders cannot get a complete view of the church holdings, because much of the property stands on the tax rolls in the names of persons to whom it has been leased for long terms. Estimates of the church property held by Trinity and property upon which it pays taxes range from $40,000,000 to $100,000,000. The best of these estimates seem to be those that most nearly approach the latter figure.

In the control of this vast wealth the 22 wardens and vestrymen of Trinity are absolute. The actual management is left in the hands of a committee of half a dozen men. No reports are required to be made to the state or any church authority. An annual report is prepared and is opened to the vestrymen, but they are allowed to see only such books as are mentioned in the report. The list of persons allowed to vote at Trinity church elections is secret.

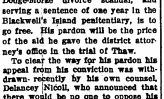
Trinity's holdings consist in large part of West side tenements, and it has often been criticised as an inconsiderate landlord. These buildings are old and ages behind the times. Some wore originally fine private dwellings that have been remranged to accommodate several families.

STREET OF THE SPENDERS SHOWS SUMMER IS HERE

NO other thing than the deserted appearance of the Street of the Spenders is required to tell one that summer has struck New York. The Street of the Spenders is a little less than a third of a mile long, yet it is probable that more money is spent there for pleasure than in any other locality of similar extent in the world. It is an ultra-fashionable thoroughfare, lined with palatial buildings with "million" people in summer. An average of 5,000 pleasure vehicles pass through the street each day, and perhaps 3,500 of these are there between the hours of six o'clock and midnight, when the clubs, the dining places and the ballrooms are in full swing.

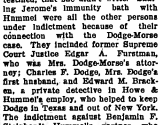
At one end of the Street of the Spenders are Delmonico's and Sherry's, at the other end the new $7,000,000 Astor hotel. Between them are some of the finest and most exclusive clubs in the world, the St. Nicholas, the Racquet, the New York Yacht, Harvard, Yale, Pennsylvania, the Bar association and the Lambs. Frequenting their favorites in this list are the Vanderbilts, the Astors, Clarence H. Mackay, Payne Whitney, James Hazen Hyde, the Belmonts, Woodbury Kane, J. P. Morgan, C. Oliver Iselin, Elihu Root, when he is in town, Joseph Choate, W. Gould Brokaw, Football Keene and, in fact, all of the men who have won or inherited fortune and fame.

It is said that nobody walks in the Street of the Spenders save those who serve—the others ride. This is true only in the winter. When summer comes, as now, many a plebeian affords down the thoroughfare and sees in it little to differentiate it from thousands of others in the city, for those to whom the street is the spectacle for the overflow of wealth—the profits of great commercial enterprises, the wealth of millions in the west or the graft reaped from politics —have gone to other lands or to sea coast or mountain side, and the pedestrian sees nothing that tells him of the magnificent entertainments costing thousands—sometimes hundreds of thousands of dollars—given there almost nightly when the rich are in town. You can't find the Street of the Spenders in the New York directory. Look under West Fourty-fourth street, and if you want to see it, it won't take you long, for it extends only from Fifth avenue to Brendway.



THAW ENDS HIS FIRST YEAR IN TOMBS CELL

I HAVE been in the Tombs prison just one year," said Harry K. Thaw the other day. "It is a long time. I had hoped to leave this place long before now. I feel that when I get my next trial it will result in an absolute acquittal. I am positive of it."



Thaw has not made known who his senior trial lawyer will be the next time. That it will not be Delmas Thaw has made known to his intimates in the Tombs. He thinks now that he made a grave mistake when he chose a Californian to represent him before a New York jury. But who his choice will be is not a matter of public knowledge.

If Thaw is insane, as some of the experts testified at the last trial, he has not shown it while in the Tombs. The officers and guards of the Tombs say that, in their opinion, Thaw is perfectly able to understand and look his own case, and certainly is able to confer with his council concerning the preparation for his second trial. If Thaw is all that, then he is able to go to trial, as far as the law is concerned.

Since his confinement in the Tombs Thaw has proved a model prisoner. The authorities have no trouble with him. He lives up to all the rules.

HUMMEL WILL GO FREE FOR AID GIVEN JEROME

ABRAHAM HUMMEL, convicted of subornation of perjury in the Dodge-Morse divorce scandal, and serving a sentence of one year in the Blackwell's Island penitentiary, is to go free. His pardon will be the price of the aid he gave the district attorney's office in the trial of Thaw.

To clear the way for his pardon his appeal from his conviction was withdrawn recently by his own counsel, Delancey Nicoll, who announced that there would be no one to oppose his application for a pardon. All the remaining indictments against the discredited lawyer have been dismissed. This was done by District Attorney Jerome in return for Hummel's services.

Hummel swore against Evelyn Nesbit Thaw in the matter of her famous affidavit accusing Thaw, which she testified, that she didn't write. Sharp-Jerome's intimacy both with Hummel were all the other persons under indictment because of their connection with the Dodge-Morse case. They included former Supreme Court Justice Edgar T. Furtman, who was Mrs. Dodge-Morse's attorney; Charles F. Dodge, Mrs. Dodge's first husband, and Edward M. Brackett, a private detective in Howe & Hummel's employ, who helped to keep Dodge in Texas and out of New York. The indictment against Benjamin F. Stolnhardt, Hummel's partner, who died the other day, was also dismissed.

The district attorney personally appeared in Justice Giegerich's court and moved the dismissal of the indictments.

HAYWOOD CASE IS NEARING ITS END

VERDICT OR A DISAGREEMENT IS EXPECTED WITHIN TWO WEEKS.

Jurymen Grow Uneasy—Complain of Lack of Exercise and Strictness of Bailiffs—Other Witnesses Discredited Orchard.

Boise, Idaho, July 8.—A beginning of the end of the Haywood trial was reached Friday. Counsel for the defense announced that, with the exception of three or four witnesses, their case in direct is before the jury. Charles H. Moyer, the accused president of the Western Federation of Miners, will be called as witness on Monday next. He will be followed by William D. Haywood, the defendant.

In adjourning court Friday afternoon until next Monday morning at ten o'clock, Judge Wood said that he hoped the interval would be utilized by counsel in preparations that would prevent further delay and bring the case to as speedy a close as possible.

May Get Verdict in Two Weeks.

It is now expected that the rebuttal evidence in behalf of the state will commence on Wednesday or possibly on Tuesday, much depending on the extent of the cross-examination of Moyer and Haywood. Counsel for the defense and prosecution after the adjournment were willing to admit the possibility of a verdict or disagreement in two weeks.

Some uneasiness on the part of the jurymen, as a result of their long confinement, developed Friday afternoon. Just before the adjournment of court Juror S. F. Hussell turned to the bench and asked if the jury would be allowed to exercise during the two days' adjournment. He complained that some members of the jury were disinclined to take walks and that for that reason the other jurymen were unable to take exercise to which they were accustomed and without which there was danger of sickness.

O. V. Sebom, the sixth juror, addressed the judge in support of this statement and asked that the jury be allowed to take exercise according to their inclinations.

Judge Wood and counsel for both sides agreed to arrange anything within the law for the improvement of conditions.

A. P. Burns complained that the bailiffs in charge of the jury were too strict and that a juryman who succeeded some trivial ruin was summarily called to order.

The five witnesses on the stand Friday morning added support to those who have preceded them. They were called to testify concerning conditions existing in Colorado during the disturbances at Cripple Creek, and to show that there was no reason to call out the militia.

Orchard Further Discredited.

Orchard was further discredited by Owen Barnes, a minor who lived near the Independence mine and who Orchard said, assisted him in the manufacture of bombs. Barnes said he knew Orchard, Adams and Eagle and others, but flatly denied that he ever planned or discussed any criminal expedition with Orchard.

J. Wolf, who swore that he was financial clerk for George Pettibone for many years and closed up Pettibone's business after he was arrested, proved one of the strong witnesses of the defense of his widespread contradiction of Orchard. In his statement on the stand Orchard swore that when he was in Rock Creek Canyon, especially in central Illinois. The June 20 condition of rye is the same as May 1, being 90 per cent, of a seasonable average. The condition of meadows is 86 per cent. of a seasonable average. Several counties report serious damage to meadows by cut and army worms.

when the Bradley militant expedition was sent to Pettibone for money which he received is a registered letter from Bradley filling five 20-dollar bills. He said the letter was signed "J. Wolf" and the state intimated that was a name under which Pettibone passed.

Wolf Explains Latter.

The witness Friday swore that he had sent Orchard no money, but that he had sent a registered letter to Orchard as "Jack Dempsey" and addressed to him in San Francisco. This letter, Wolf swore, contained a Masonic charm and a union card which Orchard had left with Pettibone and for which, it has been testified, he wrote after his arrival in San Francisco.

J. G. McMakan Dies Suddenly.

Martinsville, Ind., July 6.—J. G. McMakan, a prominent politician of Ohio, died suddenly Friday evening at a sanitarium while conversing with his wife. He was 51 years old, and has served in the Ohio state senate, the lower branch of the state legislature and an unexpired term as a United States senator. His remains were taken to Hamilton, O., for burial.

Burned Her Husband to Death.

Scranton, Pa., July 8.—Mrs. Kinsley Howarth, aged 18 years, of Dunmore, is in the county jail, charged with having burned her husband to death that she might be free to marry her former lover, Ignatz Hutro, who is also in jail, charged with being an accessory. The police officials say that Mrs. Howarth has confessed and given all the details of the crime.

To Preside at Hargis Trial.

Frankfort, Ky., July 8.—Attorney W. R. Moody, of the Henry county bar, was Friday appointed by Gov. Beckham and commissioned to preside in the trial of Judge James Hargis and others, charged with complicity in the assassination of Dr. R. D. Cox at Jackson, Breathitt county, several years ago.

GREAT COUP BY RAISULI

BANDIT CAPTURES CAID GEN. SIR HARRY MACLEAN.

Will Hold Commander of Sultan's Bodyguard Until His Terms Are Granted.

Tangier, Morocco, July 4.—Kaid Gen. Sir Harry MacLean, commander of the sultan's bodyguard, has been made a prisoner by Raisuli, the bandit chief, and will be held as a hostage by the latter until the sultan agrees to pardon Raisuli on his own terms. Gen. MacLean was negotiating with Raisuli regarding the latter's pardon when he was made prisoner.

Gen. MacLean as a former officer of the British army and is descended from an old Scotch family. All his influence with the sultan has been exercised in the interests of civilization and humanity, and he is universally respected even among the most fanatical of the foreign-hating Moors.

The British legation here confirms the announcement of the capture of Gen. MacLean.

Raisuli says he will hold Gen. MacLean until he is granted the following terms for his surrender:

1. The reconstruction of his house at Zinat.

2. The payment of an indemnity of $100,000 (ours is about $200,000).

3. His reappointment as governor of Tangier and of Fahs and his appointment as commander of police.

The sultan is launching a punitive expedition against the Adjera tribe of the vicinity owing to the fact that they have not paid their tribute to his majesty's collectors.

London, July 5.—The capture of MacLean, the virtuni commander of the forces of the sultan of Morocco, by Raisuli is regarded here as a Gilbertian masterstroke of the bandit, whose successful career started with the seizure of Ian Perdicaris. Evidently MacLean was completely hoodwinked. Only Tuesday he telegraphed to the sultan Raisuli had agreed to all the former's proposals. There is little doubt here that the bandit will hold district court at ten o'clock Saturday morning.

He orrived Friday afternoon shortly after three o'clock and passed the night at the home of his son-in-law, Harold F. McCormick, 88 Bellevue place, where his brother, William Rockefeller, also ommnosed as a witness before Judge Landis, is a guest.

The two made the journey from New York together, coming over the New York Central lines. They were met at Park Row depot by Mr. McCormick.

Sess Federal Bulding.

After Mr. McCormick and his guests had exchanged greetings the chauffeur was instructed to proceed to the office of Attorney Alfred D. Eddy in the Commercial National Bank building. In alighting from the automobile Mr. Rockefeller caught his first glimpse of the federal building, where he is to appear Saturday.

Mr. Rockefeller smiled grimly, and a moment he climbed from the machine, refusing the arm of Mr. McCormick. He led the way into the building, followed by his brother and Mr. McCormick, and the trio took an elevator to the ninth floor.

In Mr. Eddy's office the party was met by Attorneys Eddy, John H. Miller and Moritz Rosenthal. Mr. Miller, who never before had met the oil magnate, was introduced. A conference followed, which lasted until nearly seven o'clock, when Mr. McCormick suggested that they hurry to his home for dinner.

Other Officials There.

C. M. Pratt, secretary of the Standard Oil company, and P. Q. Barstow, a director, arrived in Chicago late in the afternoon and are at the Auditorium Annex. Fred A. Wann, of Salt Lake City, one of the witnesses in the case, is also at the Auditorium Annex. Neither Mr. Pratt nor Mr. Berstow would discuss the case.

Reservations have been made at the Auditorium hotel for John D. Archbold, vice president of the Standard Oil company; F. A. Moffett, H. E. Felton, C. T. White, W. P. Howe and W. M. Hutchins.

RATES RAISED IN REVENGE.

Shippers of Southwest File Complaint Against Railroads.

Washington, July 6.—A serious charge was made in a complaint filed with the interstate commerce commission Friday against the Missouri Pacific and a number of other western railroads by corporations, partnerships and individuals engaged in the flour milling trade of Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

It is alleged that an advance in rates on flour was made by the defendant companies in revenge against the complainants because of a petition which was filed with the interstate commerce commission less than a month ago alleging that the railroads charged unjust and unreasonable rates to the Atlantic markets as compared with the rates on flour and wheat products from Minneapolis and other northwestern points.

DECISION IN PHONOGRAPH WAR.

New York, July 6.—Supreme Court Justice Martin J. Keogh rendered a decision Friday barring all dealers in this state from selling or handling the Thomas A. Edison records or supplies without the permission of the New York Phonograph company. The decree, of whom there are some 940, are ordered to give an accounting of all records sold for the last ten years. It is estimated that about $12,000,000 is involved in the suit.

J. D. ROCKEFELLER NOW IN CHICAGO

OIL KING GOES TO BE QUESTIONED BY FEDERAL JUDGE LANDIS.

Brother William Is With Him—Other Standard Oil Company Officials on Hand in Response to Summons of the Court.

Chicago, July 6.—John D. Rockefeller is in Chicago and will appear before Judge Landis in the United States district court at ten o'clock Saturday morning.

He arrived Friday afternoon shortly after three o'clock and passed the night at the home of his son-in-law, Harold F. McCormick, 88 Bellevue place, where his brother, William Rockefeller, also ommnosed as a witness before Judge Landis, is a guest.

The two made the journey from New York together, coming over the New York Central lines. They were met at Park Row depot by Mr. McCormick.

Sess Federal Bulding.

After Mr. McCormick and his guests had exchanged greetings the chauffeur was instructed to proceed to the office of Attorney Alfred D. Eddy in the Commercial National Bank building. In alighting from the automobile Mr. Rockefeller caught his first glimpse of the federal building, where he is to appear Saturday.

Mr. Rockefeller smiled grimly, and a moment he climbed from the machine, refusing the arm of Mr. McCormick. He led the way into the building, followed by his brother and Mr. McCormick, and the trio took an elevator to the ninth floor.

WOMAN BETRAYS RUNYAN

DEFAULTING TELLER ARRESTED IN A NEW YORK FLAT.

Police Recover $54,610 of the Money His Stole from the Windsor Trust Company.

New York, July 6.—Chester B. Runyan, the defaulting teller of the Windsor Triet company, was arrested in New York Friday and $54,610 of the money stolen from the bank was recovered.

Runyan was found in the apartment of Mrs. Laura Carter, of 619 West One Hundred and Forty-fourth street, where he had been since he walked out of the bank on Saturday with all the money in the teller's vault packed in his suit case.

Mrs. Carter reported at the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street police station Friday afternoon that Runyan was in her flat. Five detectives at once accompanied her to the house. She furnished them with a key to the apartment and two of the detectives entered the room while the others remained outside.

As the detectives entered Runyan was standing in front of a chiffonier. He turned suddenly on the officers with a revolver in his hand. The detectives rushed at him, telling him to throw up his hands. He thereupon dropped the revolver and calmly submitted to being handcuffed, saying "the jig is up."

Two children were the money was, he edid that part of it wee in the suit case and the rest was in a drawer of the chiffonier.

TWENTY-ONE DEAD IN STORM.

Wisconsin Tornado Reports Coming in Slowly—Many Injured.

St. Paul, Minn., July 6.—Twenty-one are now known to have been killed in the tornado which swept a path 100 miles long and from a mile to a few rods in width through the counties of Grant and Wisconsin on Wednesday night. Details of the damage done by the tornado are still coming in very slowly and it is believed that the death list will be somewhat increased when all points visited by the storms are heard from. In addition to those killed a score or more were injured, some of them so seriously that their recovery is doubtful. The property damage undoubtedly will be more than $100,000.

Two children of Joseph Buckner, a Jackson county farmer, were killed in a peculiar manner. Buckner saw the storm coming, and with his children took refuge in the cellar. The house was carried away and a horse, which had been blown out of a barn and carried high into the air, fell upon the family crouching in the cellar. Edna and Orpha Buckner were killed, while Mr. and Mrs. Buckner were badly injured. One boy of the Buckner family was blown away before he could reach the cellar and was badly injured.

JUNE FIRE LOSSES $14,755,000.

New York, July 6.—The losses by fire in the United States and Canada during June, as compiled from the records of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, aggregate $14,765,000. This brings the total fire waste for the first half of 1907 up to $117,477,500, as compared with $377,-665,650 for a like portion of the year 1906, but these figures include $285,-000,000 chargeable to the San Francisco conflagration.

RUN ON GEORGIA BANK CHOCKED.

Macon, Ga., July 4.—A run was made by small depositors on the Exchange bank Wednesday resulting in the withdrawal of a total of $75,000, which was more than offset by the day's deposits of $65,000 made by friendly depositors and the loan of $100,000 by other banks of the city to meet the emergency.

WILL TEST TEXAS ANTI-PASS LAW.

Houston, Tex., July 4.—Eugene Nolte, San Antonio; A. J. Houston, Beaumont; C. J. Brewster, Galveston, and George H. Green, Dallas, United States marshals for Texas, met here Wednesday and decided to bring action to test the constitutionality of the Texas anti-pass law which becomes effective July 12.

AUTO PLUNGES DOWN CLIFF

MINNEAPOLIS PLEASURE PARTY HURLED OVER 200-FOOT EMBANKMENT.

Machine Becomes Uncontrollable—Two of the Occupants Are Seriously Injured—Others Jump From Car and Are Hurt.

Minneapolis, July 8.—Five Minneapolis people, two women and three men, while automobiling on the Mississippi boulevard, near the Town and Country club, Sunday afternoon were hurled over an embankment 200 feet high. Two are thought to be fatally hurt. The party consisted of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Nichols, 814 South Tenth street; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Smith, 2716 Harriet avenue and C. F. Williams.

Dr. Nichols seems to be in the most serious condition, he is cut and bruised in all parts of the body. He received internal injuries that may prove fatal. C. F. Williams received injuries that may be fatal. He is painfully bruised and last night he was said to be in a critical condition from shock. Mr. and Mrs. Smith received many cuts and bruises from rolling down the embankment and Mrs. Nichols was also bruised and cut. All are enfering from shock.

Machine Goes Wrong.

The party had been invited by Dr. Nichols for an outing, and after dinner they drove to the parks of the Mill City afterwards came to the river boulevard. When in the vicinity of Shadow Falls the machine balked. Dr. Nichols got out and fixed the machine.

The auto started at a lively clip and the doctor lost control of it. He tried vainly to stop the machine as it was going rapidly toward the embankment at a sharp turn in the road.

While Dr. Nichols was endeavoring to stop the machine to prevent the apparent disaster his guests saw the danger and as the machine got to the brink of the precipice they jumped.

Plunges Over Embankment.

Dr. Nichols and the machine went over the sloping embankment to the river front 200 feet below. The automobile was smashed into piece and the doctor fell unconscious on the bank of the river, bleeding from many wounde, his clothes torn to shreds.

The other members of the party had not jumped soon enough to avoid the cliff and each of them rolled down the slope to the bottom where they were found in a badly bruised condition. Mrs. Nichols and Mrs. Smith were both unconscious.

The accident was reported to the Prior avenue police station. Patrolman Christian sent out several men who removed the injured people to the Cook hospital. Dr. Nichols was reported to be carried to the top of the embankment.

TORNADO WRECKS TOWNS.

Buildings Demolished at Long Pine and Polk, Nebraska.

Long Pine, Neb., July 8.—Long Pine was visited by a tornado Saturday night and heavy damage was done. With but few exceptione all the fronts of store buildings were blown in. The Methodist church was demolished, the roof of the Northwestern round house was blown off and a livery barn was demolished.

Three persons were hurt, one seriously, Thomas Wright badly by flying timbers.

Telephone lines are down, the station was blown over and the city jail demolished.

The wind was followed by a terrific hailstorm. Heavy damage is reported to the crops.

Polk, Neb., July 8.—This little town, founded last September, was badly wrecked by combined wind and hailstorms Saturday night. Business buildings were demolished or damaged and crops over a considerable distance ruined.

BANKER DROWNED.

Crookston, Minn., July 8.—News reached this city of the drowning of Herbert Hedberg of Warwood, cashier of the First State bank of that place. Mr. Hedberg was boating in the lake of the Woods Saturday evening. He was taken with cramps and before help could reach him he was dead.

SEIZED WITH CRAMPS.

Bismarck, N. D., July 8.—While swimming in Apple creek, near the farm of Samuel Falconer six miles from here, a man named Mulhering became seized last night. The creek was high on account of rains and Mulhering believed to have been taken with cramps.

DEADLY GASOLINE STOVE.

Madison, Wis., July 8.—Mrs. Ole Bortness, wife of a retired farmer at Stoughton, and twenty miles west of here, was burned to death, her clothes having caught fire from a gasoline stove. She was fifty years old.

Frank Schmeiser, of Silverton, Col., who was elected to succeed the executive board of the Western Federation of Miners, was killed by jumping from a train while on his way to give important testimony in the Haywood trial at Boise.

GUNBOAT FOR LAKE SUPERIOR.

Don Juan de Austria Assigned to the Michigan Naval Militia.

Washington, July 4.—The gunboat Don Juan de Austria, one of Admiral Dewey's trophies of the Spanish war, has been assigned to the use of the Michigan navel militia and will be located on Lake Superior. The vessel is now at Portsmouth, N. H., and will be prepared to make the trip by way of the St. Lawrence river. Before her assignment to station on the great lakes, permission had to be obtained from the British government because of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States limiting the number of war vessels to be located in those waters.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

State Fair Program.

Hamline.—Secretary C. N. Cosgrove of the Minnesota State Fair has announced the course of the days for the fair of 1897, giving the official titles by which the six days of fair week will be designated. The list, as officially made out, is as follows:

Monday, Sept. 2, Labor Day.
Tuesday, Sept. 3, Minneapolis Day.
Wednesday, Sept. 4, Livestock and Dairy Day.
Thursday, Sept. 5, Old Settlers Day.
Friday, Sept. 6, St. Paul Day.
Saturday, Sept. 7, Twin City Day.

The fair grounds and the fair officials are showing the most pronounced activity at this season. Only two months elapse before the opening of the fair and although preparations are in the best possible shape and are more advanced than in previous years, there is an immense amount of work yet to be done.

Fully 60 men are at work on and about the grounds putting up the various buildings, the dairy hall, the poultry building, the manufacturers building, repairing the grand stand, grading, putting in the sewer system, roofing, painting, moving barns, and doing the general work of keeping the grounds in order.

Sept. W. E. Leo of the farm machinery and manufacturers division says that he will have the greatest machinery division ever seen at a state fair anywhere or even at a world's exposition.

Kills Wife With Stick Of Wood.

Waverly.—Jacob J. Mooney killed his wife with a stick of stove wood at their home in Waverly.

Mooney's story is that he went home for dinner and found there was no meat awaiting him. He asked his wife what was the matter and she told him he could not have any dinner. He proceeded to cook one for himself and told her to leave the room. This she did but returned a minute later with a bread knife with which she cut him in the wrist.

Mooney was putting a block of wood in the stove and in his anger struck her a blow on the head with the block from which she fell dead. He gave himself up to Marshall Kretzsch.

Back of the story of the tragedy is another of continual quarreling between man and wife that began about two years ago when Miss Mary T. Reichel of St. Paul secured a verdict against Mooney for $6,500 damages for breach of promise. Mooney had been married but a short time when the litigation was terminated.

Found Ancient Anchor.

Crookston.—While ditching on land of the Crookston School of Agriculture Contractors Brown and Youngren found six feet below the surface an anchor similar to the ship anchors used by the Norsemen about nine centuries ago. Mr. Brown, who was formerly a Norwegian sailor in the old country, at once recognized it as of the type which he has seen handed down as heirlooms in his native land.

The ditch was helpg dug on sod that had never been broken, and there seems to be no question but what the anchor has been in there for centuries. It is in a fairly good state of preservation, though corroded. It is believed to be a relic of some of the very earliest Norse exploration voyages, and was lost here at a time that the entire Red River valley was a portion of Lake Winnipeg, and when ships could sail from the Atlantic to this section of the country.

Neck Dislocated.

Alexandria. — Henry Schulke of Carlos, seventy years old, probably was fatally injured in a peculiar manner. He was hauling cordwood, and was seated on top of the load. He attempted to go through the underground crossing in the Great Northern yards. Schulke thought he would be able to get through, despite the heights of the load, but his head was caught between the timbers and the load of cordwood and a vertebra in his neck was dislocated. He is still alive, but in a precarious condition.

Bolt Sums Barn and Kills Stock.

Winona.—Lightning caused a loss of $6,000 at Cromedale, the big stock farm of J. W. Landon of Winona at Money Creek. The main building was burned and nine work horses and two blooded bulls were killed. There is comparatively small insurance, about $1,000.

High Priced Duck.

St. Paul.—A fine of $10 and costs paid at Stillwater by Clarence Bing ech for selling one duck amounted to $117.40. The reason for the unusually large amount of costs was that the sheriff of Grant county made several trips to St. Paul in search of Stencel after the warrant was issued last fall.

Big Enrollment.

Moorhead.—The total enrollment at the Moorhead normal for the summer session, which is to continue until the middle of September, is 340, but is expected to reach more than 400. Prof. T. A. Hillger of the normal school, who was elected president of the North Dakota normal school at Mayville, will sever his connection with the Moorhead institution on Aug. 1, as the completion of the first half of the summer session, in which he has the department of pedagogy and history.

Linen Mill Burns.

St. Paul.—Fire started in a hot box in a card machine at the mill of the Minnesota Linen Mill company at St. Paul Park destroyed the building, a two-story stone structure. The fire entailed a heavy loss on machinery and stock and threw fifty people out of employment.

The flames spread from the card to some tow and then ran to the elevator shaft, soon spreading to all parts of the building. All efforts to check the fire were useless, and the building was soon doomed. The mill had been recently overhauled and had been running only a few days. The building and stock were insured.

NEWS NOTES.

Mankato.—State Game and Fish Warden Jordan has received 250,000 pike fry to be pinced in Lake Washington, they having been shipped from the state hatchery.

Faribault. — Albert Hendricks, of the town of Wolcott, was brought to this city and tried for heating his wife. He was found guilty and fined $20.95 or thirty days in jail. He paid the fine.

Hallock.—Robert Scribner, a brakeman, was run over and killed by a freight car at Noyes. The crew was switching near a crossing and while Scribner walked ahead of the car his foot caught between a plank and the rail.

North Branch.—The large barn of Charles Brix of Amador, was burned in an electric storm. Three cows, some hay, a lot of harness and other farm stuff, died in the blaze and nothing was saved. There was no insurance.

Brainerd.—Charles Willis, the 17-year-old son of James Willis, and who was run over by a train and both legs cut off, died of his injuries. He fell between the cars of a freight train on which he was trying to ride to Brainerd.

Minneapolis.—Charles Watkins was found dead hanging by a rope made from a towel in his cell at the city workhouse. Watkins would have been released from a ten-day sentence for drunkenness three hours after he took his own life.

St. Paul.—A series of eighteen auction sales of state lands has been ordered by State Auditor S. G. Iverson. About 70,000 acres were sold, from which the state will receive $65,000. Of this amount $75,000 was taken in on the first payments on the land sold. The average price received for the land was $7.50 per acre, which is about the same as the average last year.

St. Paul.—George N. Lamphere has resigned as secretary of the Soldiers' home board and Capt. H. H. Hazlett of Caledonia has been elected by the board as his successor. Captain Harries, who has been a member of the board for some time, has resigned to accept the new position, and Governor Johnson has appointed E. P. Champlin of Garden City to his place on the board.

Minneapolis.—Five years at hard labor is the penitentiary at Stillwater was the sentence passed by Judge H. D. Dickinson upon W. F. Bechtel, former president of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Company of Minneapolis, under conviction of grand larceny in the first degree for an alleged fraudulent agreement between officers of the company.

Crookston.—Deputy Game Warden Will Munch of this city captured three illegal fishers at Maple Lake. The men were fishing with a net four by forty-five feet. One of the men showed fight and stated that no warden would ever arrest him, but the three were brought in by Mr. Munch and arraigned in justice court where they were fined in all $62.50 and costs.

Dodge Center.—While some Dodge Center young men were spending the evening in Kasson one long ago they got into a fight with youths of that place, and Sherman Livingston, although not a party to the trouble, received a blow on the head which caused serious injury. In consequence, Chris Rohrer has been bound over to the grand jury. Another Kasson man, it is said, has confessed to the county attorney that he dealt the blow.

Minneapolis.—Two boys, swimming off the flats, discovered a plank and in play drew it towards them. Something dragged behind it and on investigating they found a dead baby. A stout cord around the baby's neck was secured firmly to one end of the plank. Physicians who examined the body soon after it was taken from the water assert that it was thrown into the water while alive. They say it was apparently born in perfect condition and would undoubtedly have lived had it been given proper attention.

Chisholm.—In a densely wooded and unfrequented spot about half a mile from the Shenango mine the dead body of a man was found with a bullet hole through his head. Whether the man was murdered, committed suicide or was the victim of a stray bullet has not been established.

St. Paul.—The state board of control appointed A. C. Dorr steward at the Hastings insane asylum, and Mrs. Mina B. Gray head ward nurse at the Fergus Falls hospital for the insane, state agents for paroled insane and epileptic inmates of the state institutions.

IRISH CHURCH BELLS

THE EARLIEST ONES WEIGHED ONLY A FEW OUNCES.

First Adopted About the Time of St. Patrick in the Fifth Century —Were Made of Hammered Iron.

It was about the time of St. Patrick, in the fifth century, that bells began to be adopted in the Christian church, though their use in other directions was long anterior to Christianity, as Mr. Layard records that he found some in the palace of Nimrod. The first Christian bells, like St. Patrick's, weighed only a few ounces, and from that they gradually increased till the greatest weight was reached at Moscow with 198 tons of beautifully enriched work, a strange contrast to humble "Clogan-eschaeha Petrie," or "bell of Patrick's well," sometimes referred to as the bell of Armagh, with its diminutive dimensions of six inches at the mouth, its shape of hammered iron, bent into a four-sided form, fastened with rivets and brazed or bronzed. This bell is at once the most authentic and the oldest Irish relic of Christian metal work that has descended to us, and is mentioned in the "Annals" under the date of 552.

Such as this were the bells of the early apostles of Ireland, but the age was a progressive one, and advancing art soon claimed the bells for its own, and the hammered iron gave way to bronze castings, more skillful workmanship and to more perfect ornament. We are fortunate enough to have an icon the finest example in the Boogor bell of what the earliest bell making had advanced to by the time the tenth century had dawned. For 500 years the iron bell of Patrick had done its duty, and now it had to be laid by.

The same story applies to many other famous bells of Ireland and their shrines, but the church loved these ancient bells, and their sanctity time rendered them most precious relics. They must be preserved, and the far famous gold workers of Ireland came to the rescue and had brought the national art, then in the zenith of its perfection, to bear on the vessel in bell making had advanced to by the time the tenth century had dawned. For 500 years the iron bell of Patrick had done its duty, and now it had to be laid by.

For 500 years the iron bell of Patrick had done its duty, and now it had to be laid by.

The early church builders and artificers of Ireland were skillful and bold and fearless in their symbolism, with an independence of thought, they struck out original lines to work on. We see it in the unequaled churches, the stately round towers, the great crosses—a model of one, the finest cross on earth, stands near the case containing the bells—and by the preservation of the bells themselves we see in the reliquaries or shrines another master thought, repeated now here else, sod these remain a purely Irish characteristic. A few days' resting place in Scotland, but a great authority says "they are attributed to Irish saints, and we naturally turn to Ireland in search of the parent group."

The "shrine" was made to incise its rude iron bell. This fine example of the goldsmith's work must have been executed between the years 1091 and 1105, when Donell McAuley, whose name is given in the inscription, filled the see of Armagh. The shrine is made of brass, on which the ornamented parts are fastened down with rivets. The front is covered with silver gilt plinted, end knot work in golden filigree. The silver work is partly covered with crystal, some in slits-relieve and some in bas-relief. It is also decorated with gems and crystals, and on the sides are animal forms, elongated and twisted into interlaced scrolls. Since the original shrine was made, in 1091, it has never been lost sight of, but has been carried down from custodian to custodian, generally of the same family.

A PHILADELPHIA IDEA.

How an Ingenious Student Avoided a Tardy Mark.

A certain student at the Central high school in Philadelphia tried to escape punishment for lateness. It is an established rule at the institution to detain all pupils one hour after regular dismissal for each case of lateness, and if the same student is late three times in one month he is liable to suspension for one day, unless he is able to furnish a reasonable excuse. A suspension carries with it a forfeiture of examinations for that and sometimes five studies. The student in question, through some unavoidable delay, was late twice in one month. While going to school one morning, the car in which he rode was held up for about 15 minutes at Washington avenue by the freight trains. Fearing suspension through his chronic lateness the student tore a leaf from his notebook and asked his fellow passengers to affix their signatures to a note which declared that he was detained by the railroad cars. He arrived at school several minutes late, but on presentation of his note, signed with 20 names, he was excused by the professors.—Philadelphia Record.

"The Terrible Mafia."

Neither the Camorra, the Parly Apaches, nor the Black Hand of America is the most powerful and terrible secret society in the whole world, in spite of the harrowing details of their gigantic work. The plan must go to the Mafia, which flourishes in Italy, and has done so for more than 500 years. This society, which works so swiftly and silently, yet so surely, was founded in Sicily for protection against the tyranny of foreign rulers.—London "P. T. O."

LIFE INSURANCE A SACRED TRUST.

Responsibilities of Officers and Directors.

Evidently President Kingsley of the New York Life Insurance company has learned the great lesson of the times with respect to the responsibility and duty of directors of corporations. Speaking the same time must be administered as a trust."

He also realizes that similar responsibilities rest upon the officers of the company. "I understand," he says, "your anxiety in selecting the men who are day by day to carry this burden far you, who are to discharge this trust in your behalf, who are to administer for the benefit of the people involved the multitudinous and exceeding details to which it is impossible for you to give personal attention. My long connection with the New York Life—covering nearly twenty years—has given me a knowledge of the work of the company's working organization, gives me, as I believe, a profound respect for the character of the heavy burden you have placed on my shoulders, but of the standards of character, of the standards of faith, the standards of integrity, which must be maintained at all times by the man whom you and the policyholders in this high office."

Best of all, perhaps, he feels that work and character are cheap, and that the public will be satisfied with nothing short of performance. "My thanks, therefore," he continues, "for an honor which outranks any distinction within the reach of my ambition, cannot be expressed except by work. They must be rend out of the record I make day by day."

REHEARSAL IN A CAR.

Professional Entertainer Was Almost Too Successful.

"The other night, coming home in the car," said the professional entertainer, "I began to wonder if I could interest some to my own eyes as I do to the eyes of the other people. I tried. I thought of all the wrongs I had committed, and felt sorry for people I had wronged. I thought of all the mistakes I had made that other people had profited by and pretty soon the tears began to gather in my eyes and roll down my cheeks.

"I forgot there were other people in the car who might notice me. Soon a woman got up from across the car and came to me.

"'I see, sir,' said she, 'that you are in some trouble. Can I do anything to help you?'

"'Lord bless you, no, madam,' I told her, hastily wiping away my tears. 'I am a professional entertainer and was practicing on myself. That's all.'"

Wanted an Excuse.

"What do you take when you're coming down with a cold?"

"Whisky."

"Wife object?"

"Certainly not. She doesn't want me to be sick?"

"One more question."

"Well?"

"What's the easiest way to start a cold."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

COULDN'T KEEP IT.

Kept It Hid from the Children.

"We cannot keep Grape-Nuts food in the house. It goes so fast I have to hide it, because the children love it so. It is just delicious. I have been looking for ever so long; something that I do not have to stop to prepare and still is nourishing."

Grape-Nuts is the most scientifically made food on the market. It is perfectly and completely cooked at the factory and can be served at an instant's notice, either with rich cold cream, or with hot milk if a hot dish is desired. When milk or water is used, a little sugar should be added, but when cold cream is used none of the grape-sugar, which can be seen glistening on the granules, is sufficiently sweet to satisfy the palate. This grape-sugar is not pionred over the granules, as some people think, but exudes from the granules in the process of manufacture, when the starch of the grains is changed from starch to grape-sugar by the process of manufacture. This, in effect, is the first act of digestion; therefore, Grape-Nuts food is predigested and is most perfectly assimilated by the very weakest stomach. "There's a Reason."

BRIDE OF A SENATOR

MISS EDDY OF CHICAGO TO WED ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

Girl Comes from Prominent Family and Has Been Presented at Several European Courts—Bridegroom a National Figure.

Chicago.—Miss Katherine Eddy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus N. Eddy of this city has been engaged and won by United States Senator Beveridge of Indiana. Senator Beveridge recently called for Europe. Miss Eddy is in Germony visiting her brother Spencer Eddy, who is secretary of the United States legation in Berlin.

The date of the wedding, according to friends here, has not been definitely fixed, but will occur before congress reassembles in December.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Eddy to Senator Beveridge created no surprise in Washington. Miss Eddy spent the last two seasons in that city, and her parents lived in a fashionable apartment house at Sixteenth and M streets northwest. The family closed the apartment early in the spring, and Miss Eddy went to Europe to arrange her trousseau.

Miss Eddy is a niece of Mrs. Marshall Field. Both her father and mother belong to the families long prominent in Chicago. Her mother was Miss Abbie L. Spencer, daughter of the founder of the firm of Hibbord, Spencer & Co.

She was graduated some years ago from an eastern college and after her graduation spent some time abroad. She was presented to Chicago society four or five years ago, and since then has spent a part of each year in Europe, traveling sometimes with her mother and at other times with Mrs. Marshall Field. She is a linguist of rare ability and has been presented at several of the courts of Europe.

Miss Eddy has great personal charm. She is tall, slender and graceful, and has a wealth of auburn hair which when waved in heavy braids twined about the crown of her head, alluded to by her friends as "Katherine Eddy's natural cornnet."

Miss Eddy is fond of walking, and while in Washington she and Senator Beveridge frequently took long walks into the country and not infrequently on these occasions Senator Beveridge would walk to the capitol. She took the keenest interest in his struggle for legislation to prevent the employment of child labor and was interested in his speechee.

Senator Beveridge was the young est man in the United States senate when he entered eight years ago at the age of 36. His gift of oratory had gained him a national reputation even before he became a senator. He startled the staid old senate with his methode of procedure and his strenuosity has caused him to be referred to as "the young man's ant of a man."

The senator was a plawboy in Ohio when he was 12 years nld. The natives of Highland County, Obio, are said to easily reenll 'pem because of his ambitious nature, which early showed itself.

At 14 he was a lobnrer, and two years later was wrnklog in a logging camp in Illinois. It was in the logging camp that he began to study national affairs. In 1881 he borrowed $50 from a friend and entered De Pauw university at Greencastle, Ind. Here he wnn all the dnnntee and got prizes enough to poy his college expenses for two years. In 1885, after two years af work on a roncb, he returned to Indionopnlis and begon the study of law.

Mr. BeVeridge married Katherins Langdale at Greencastle, Ind., in 1887. She died in 1900.

PORTABLE CHURCH FOR PANAMA

Will Be Made in New York, Shipped to Colon, and Set Up.

New York.—The first church "made in New York" and set up in a distant land will be one at Colon, Panama. To accommodate the increasing number of white residents in that section who wish to attend service on Sundays, and who now hold religious services in the hotel parlors, plans are under way for the setting up of a portnble church, similar to those of the United States. The building will be made in New York in sections, and shipped to Colon, where it can be put together easily.

The portable church still possesses the features of nnrvelry, although it has been growing in favor and in use during the past five or six years. At least 30 such structures are to be found within the limits of Greater New York.

The buildings are constructed in sections, usually two feet nine inches by twelve feet. The blank sections are made all alike, so that they can go together any way without being numbered, except those framing the windows and doors. The material used is generally yellow pine throughout, and with the exception of the floors, which are made of a hard wood which spruce is preferred. The roofs are covered with sheets of galvanized steel laid under sheet asbestos.

The buildings are as a rule churchly in appearance, and fairly comfortable. They are built to accommodate from 100 to 700, according to size of congregation. Windows of imitation stained glass accompany the frame of the church and shed a softening glow through the little brown interiors.

NEW HEAD OF NEW YORK LIFE.

Elected of D. P. Kingsley, Recently Elected President.

New York.—Darwin Pearl Kingsley, who has been elected president of the New York Life Insurance company, was a teacher and a newspaper man before he entered the business. In 1868 he was elected state auditor of Colorado and ex-officio superintendent of insurance, and in 1889 he entered the New York Life as agency inspector for New England. He was elected trustee and third vice president in 1898 and was chosen vice president in 1902. Mr. Kingsley was born in Athurgh, Vt., in 1857, and was educated at Borre Academy and the University of Vermont, being graduated "honor man" in 1881, winning election to Phi Beta Kappa. In 1882 he went to Colorado, and two years later he was a delegate to the national Biggest Cranberry Bog.

The largest cranberry bog in the world is being established in this state. When completed it will cover 500 acres, of which 300 will be under cultivation by July 1. The work of laying out and cultivating the bog was begun more then two years ago, and since then a force of more than 100 men has been at work.

The bog is located on what is for the most part a natural swamp bordering on a pond from which water is distributed over the swamp by a pumping station.—Boston Herald.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Crookston is to have a new government building for post office and other government offices. Thanks to their able representative in congress, and again we say didn't we tell you so, only a few years ago, and you listened and delivered the goods at that warm primary election.

It is reported that the Rollet wheel and shell game gamblers that were driven out of East Gran Forks and Bemidji have found a haven of rest at Thief River Falls. Of course they are indorsed by the press of that city as "Bro. John" was in the scheme.

How is the county seat petition time locked safe working Mr. O'Brien? The petition is safe enough laying around anywhere until the close of the lawyers fight, then is the time to oil up the lock so as to have it in good working order and to unchain the bull dog.

The Red Lake Falls brass band has contracted to furnish music at the state fair the forepart of September, which will be a good advertisement, for this part of the state, as the band is a good one with a reputation for playing that secured them the job of furnishing a portion of the band music for the state fair.

In looking up some of our two year old back files this week we find that Thief River Falls was at that time talking about mandamus proceedings to get a meeting of the board of county commissioners, to act on the county seat removal petition, the same as they are at the present time. Now the question is; How much have they advanced in their two years work?

The moving of the county seat don't seem to be so unanimous as some of the enthusiastic ones thought it was when the agitation first started, and those who did not take much stock in the statements we made that the petition circulated was only to get a lawsuit started was a trifle sick up of the situation, and it will be a red hot lawsuit that will be kept going for years and years.

The county Commissioners held a short session July 8th and adjourned to go out and look over the ground where they are putting in a new steel bridge across the Clearwater River at Greene place in Deer Park Township, so it seems our county dads have health and time to attend to all other business in the county, except county seat removal business and we suppose they think there is no hurry about that, for if they should not get this to act on the present petition this year they might get to it next year, and everything else is moving along nicely in the county except the advance of the price of real estate in the city of Thief River Falls, which is a matter, that other parts of the county are not taking a very active interest in.

There is being some talk by the people up this way who would like to get a stone creamery to have a picnic or any other entertainment to set down on this so called "Bucking" by the country store keepers so hard that they will flatten out like a pancake. The people living up here can cold meet some times and have pleasant picnics and social gatherings, but it don't matter where they attempt to meet, every other store keeper within ten miles of the place will stick up a lemonade stand, and start an opposition entertainment, and as a consequence the crowds are divided and there is only a few at each place and they have no enjoyment. The only way to do to stop this is as soon as you hear of a dance or party at two different places on the same night. Don't go to either of them, and they will soon begin to understand why you did not come, and stop that kind of business, and if they don't let one store keeper have a lonesome job at one place and the other one at the other place.

Lalla Opens Fire.

Charles Latty of the Plummer Pioneer has brought action against Julious Pleth, Henry Enderly and A. Alrick for conspiracy to ruin his business, as publisher and post master at Plummer. He asks the sum of $5,000 damage, and the case will be tried in the next ter m of District court in Red Lake County, and the result will be watched with considerable interest.

Clearwater Specials.

The grand celebrations has all gone by. We hope you all injoyed your selves.

"And mine," observed the man whose name was Adams, "were the original occupants of the garden of Eden."—Chicago Tribune.

Truthful.

Nothing is so contagious as enthusiasm. It is the real allegory of the tale of Orpheus; it moves stones; it charms brutes. Enthusiasm is the genius of eloquence, and truth accomplishes no victories without it.—Bulwer.

Rare Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the last place of the celebrated play wright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have originated with Jack Young (afterward knighted), who, "walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow 10 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer in his "Phrase and Fable" says Shakespeare called Jonson "Rare Ben," but does not say where. According to Chambers' "Book of Days," the phrase formed the concluding epithet "Rare Ben Jonson" is said to have been first uttered after the appearance of his highly successful play, "Bartholomew Fair." The epitaph has been copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on his covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Beauties of Wild Birds.

Patience—Mavis, the brightest species can comprise their features and look very thin if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can plump into any position they think most suitable. It is useless to look for their self preserving traits in any of the feathered kept in zoological collections, for the birds are so accustomed to the large numbers of people passing and repassing or standing in front of them that they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought to them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. The raptures in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage, like the bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is not so often seen when in captivity.

A Train For Tyler.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency of the presidential office he arranged to make an excursion in some direction and sent his son Bob to arrange for a special train. It happened that the railroad superintendent was a strong Whig. As such he had no favors to bestow on the president and therefore Bob that his road did not run any special trains for the president. "What!" said Bob, "did you not furnish a special train for the funeral of President Harrison?" "Yes," said the superintendent, "and if you'll bring your father in that condition you shall have the best train on the road."

A Canton Clock.

The famous canyons or watch clock at Canton is housed in a temple on the city walls. Three big earthen jars on successive shelves and a fourth and lowest one with a wooden cover constitute the whole clockwork. The water descends by slow drops from one jar to another, the brass scale on a dial in the last jar telling the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 4 o'clock since 1321 A. D. the lowest jar has been emptied, the upper one filled and the clock thus wound up for the next day.

The First Man Dressmaker.

As far back as 1730 there was a Parisian man dressmaker, probably the first of his kind. His name was Rhonberg, and he was the pupil of a Bavarian peasant from the neighborhood of Munich. He owed his success to his genius for concealing and supplying defects of figure, and by a beautiful caricature on the "long and lank and lean" specimens of humanity of a pair of corsets and an open piece of scenery painted on the panel of a carriage. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Doctors and Scientists.

The days are past when every self respecting doctor was expected to give up a style handsomely adapted for the face with the undertaker. But the "scientific" and hopelessness of the modern bood of Munich. He owed his success to his genius for concealing and supplying defects of figure, and by a beautiful caricature on the "long and lank and lean" specimens of humanity of a pair of corsets and an open piece of scenery painted on the panel of a carriage. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Childless Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where girl babies are drowned like superfluous kittens and others in which infanticide is common for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution. On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devoted lives of childless men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Bachelors and virgins have been the saints of the world, and the childless are the philanthropists, the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the good writers, leaders and thinkers of the race. Plato, Jesus of Nazareth, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Florence Nightingale, David Hume, Leibnitz, Spinoza, Immanuel Kant, Schopenhauer and scores of the world's greatest men and women were childless. In this class, too, we should include Frances Willard, Susan B. Anthony and Clara Barton.

STRAYED: From my farm on section 10, Town of Deer Park June 15th, one year old bull, color red, Finder please notify John Radneski, Rodney Minn.

Mike McAndress came up from St. Hilaire last Sunday and has been doing some swift carpenter work this week to assist Walt to get his new residence completed.

In honor of the assistance given them by Joe Dnchamp, the Board of Directors of the Red Lake River Transportation Co. have named the first new steam boat "The Duchamp".

Walt McAndress had a neighborhood raising last Saturday to remove his house that he has been living in, onto the foundation which will make a part of the new residence that he is building.

The Red Lake Flyer passed up river Tuesday on their way to the outlet, with a load of supplies for the lumber Co. The boat was in charge of Ole Peterson and Fred Hoag, and of course was making good time.

Deputy sheriff Robert E. Lee of Thief River Falls called here Wednesday to make arrangements to have the second notice to voters published of a meeting of the County Commissioners to act on the County seat removal petition.

Word was recieved last Monday that the new steam boat being constructed for the Red Lake River Transportation Company at Hiida would be ready to be accepted tomorrow. The board of managers will go up there and if the boat is ready, will start it on its first trip to Thief River Falls.

There is to be a ball at Rodney hall on next Saturday evening, and one at the bowery at Rhoda, so our Deer Park people can all get a chance to dance, without being crowded. We however have no notion of attending at either place, for while we would enjoy going to either place, we can't go to both places at the same time, and shall stay at home.

At the meeting of the board of Direators of the Red Lake River Transportation Company, on last Monday Walt McAndress, P. C. Wold, and Alfred Hammestahl were elected as a board of managers of the company, to have supervision over the running of the boats, under the directions of the board of Directors. They are the men in the right place and people may be sure that their business of moving freight transported by and down the river will be promptly attended to and the share holders who have stock in the company may be assured that the company will do business on business principal.

Herman M. Lillo and Martin Ferris of Deer Park township were pleasant callers here yesterday.

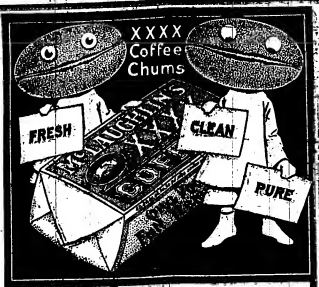
The Rainy Day.

A well known artist recently received a letter from a chap who has regularly made it a practice to borrow money of him. In this letter the chap who is always in financial difficulties surprised his correspondent by saying:



"This time I have decided to reverse the usual order of things, and, instead of borrowing from you, I intend herewith $20, which I am going to ask that you will lay aside for me for a rainy day."

But the artist couldn't find any remittance in the letter. He searched for it on the floor, under the table—in fact everywhere he thought he might have dropped it. Then quite accidentally he turned over the sheet on which the letter was written and discovered this postscript:

"I've just looked out of the window and find it's raining like the very deuce!"—Collier's.

An observant man in all his intercourse with society and the world constantly and unperceived marks down every person and thing the force relative of its value and, therefore, in selecting that person or thing, knows instantly what kind and degree of attention to give it. FAMOUS ARCHERS.

Stories of Wonderful Skill With Bow and Arrow.

The expression "shooting a long bow" does not by necessity mean the telling of a falsehood. It sometimes refers to a wonderful story, which may be true enough, but which is so marvelous as to require a fine grain in the veracity of the narrator to believe it. Such a story is told of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who was a famous archer in his day. Sir Ralph was one day shooting with a party of friends when he made a shot which was considered by all present to be impossible. Sir Ralph, however, declared that he could repeat the shot, and, to the astonishment of all, he did so. Sir Ralph's shot was made at a target 100 yards away, and the arrow struck the target, split the shaft of the arrow which had been shot into the center of the target and then passed on and struck the bull's eye.

Beginning All Over Again

By Nellie Cravey Gillmore

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Kitty came back to herself with a little shiver. The sky that an hour ago had glowed crimson, with all the dazzling gold lights of an Indian summer afternoon in Florida, reflected only the palest violet shadows, deepening gradually to a dull drab. As she looked, the gray merged swiftly into black, and one by one the stars blinked out, shedding a ghastly light over the rippleless surface of the bay.

How long she had been drifting Kitty could never have told, but when she reached for her oars one was missing, and strain her eyes as she would only the shining, speckless water laughed back in the starlight.

A sudden panic seized her. What should she do? Three full miles at least from the place she had started, with only the barren shore of Seals Rock behind her—even supposing she could be lucky enough to reach that!

There was no landing anywhere in sight, and 15 feet from the beach she ran aground in the soft white sand. Mooring her skiff to the solitary post that stood relic of half a decade ago, she removed her shoes, and lifting her skirts from contact with the water, plunged in.

The moon broke suddenly round and clear and full, blending suspended from the sky like a globe of liquid gold. Kitty sat down weakly on a heaped-up bank of sand and looked out to sea. Her lips were trembling helplessly now and the color was quite gone from her face.

Would they come or send for her? It was very likely not. She had left word at home not to expect her before morning, as she had intended staying the night at a friend's house. Somehow, the thought of spending a whole of all nights—the one that was to have been her wedding eve—was intolerable.

And now! She should not only spend it alone, but in utter terror and desolation. For hours she lay there with wide-open eyes, her heart throbbing almost to suffocation, a thousand emotions making tumult in her weary brain.

But by-and-by the silent breath of sea wind stole insidiously into her nostrils; the moon sank gracefully behind a bank of clouds; her eyes closed—her lips parted slightly and she slept.

"Billy!"

"Lord!" he exclaimed, "I've trudged the beach, breadth, and, I was about to say, thickness of this island, since midnight!"

Kitty had lifted herself on one elbow and now sat upright, staring stupidly into the sun-bronzed face above her. It was broad day, and the yellow sunlight, falling on her tangled hair, discovered a whole nest of opals in it.

"How did you know?" she asked, wonderingly, brushing her hand across her eyes as though to clear away a mist.

Rochester laughed heartily, but more as an outlet to the pent-up strain of the past few hours than from any special feeling of amusement.

"Did—did anyone send you?" She looked at him with a dawning challenge in her eyes.

Rochester dropped down on the sand beside her before he answered.

"Not anybody worth mentioning," he said, as matter-of-fact as possible; "the fact is, I happened to see you leave the wharf, and—several hours later—learned, first by accident, that your boat was still out. The storm signals were up, and I was afraid—well, you know," he blundered on awkwardly, "I couldn't just sit by and see your—shipwrecked, could it? I couldn't let anyone ho that, do you think?" he added, half in apology, half in explanation. He had to tell the truth, he might have said: "I am watching every move you make; I haunt the places you frequent; you are never out of my thoughts or my sight a minute longer than I can help." But prudence forbade.

For some time after he had spoken, Kitty sat silent, staring with wide, somewhat angry eyes at the tiny white caps in the distance.

"You are very humane," she remarked shortly, after a bit.

Rochester frowned, digging his tanned fingers clumsily in the sand. "I hope I am," he returned, without looking up. The quarrel had been very bitter; neither could forget that—bitter as only a quarrel can be between two people who love each other foolishly and absolutely.

"You might just as well have stayed at home and let me alone," snapped Kitty, reddening.

"I'm sorry I didn't—now," was the curt response.

Kitty tossed her yellow curls expressively, and said nothing. After that, an awkward period of constraint ensued between them. Rochester was the first to make a move.

"It being the case," he remarked, politely, getting on his feet, "that I might just as well have stayed away, presumably, the only thing left to do is to go back."

Kitty stared, paled despite the rein she had put upon herself.

"Yes," she said, lingering her tie-end without looking up.

"If there is anything I can—"

"Nothing whatever!" she jerked out, turning her back.

Rochester moved away a few paces. "I really think," he ventured, somewhat timidly, "that the sun over here is going to be uncomfortably warm after awhile."

Kitty laughed—but with almost too much enthusiasm for it to be genuine. "I don't mind that," she returned, with her head in the air. "In fact, I—I like it!" She gave her minutest attention to the rearrangement of a refractory lock, as Rochester walked off in the direction of the beach.

Several minutes passed in dead silence. When she trusted herself to look up again, he was coming toward her rapidly. "There's an awful storm brewing," he said, gravely; "we'd better try to beat up a place of refuge at once."

Kitty rose quickly, and together they plowed through the heavy white sand in what seemed a hopeless quest for shelter. But finally they came in sight of a dilapidated old structure—the property of quondam campers—and were soon established under its rickety but friendly roof.

"I hope this delay is not going to cause you too much inconvenience," observed Kitty, the first to speak.

"It will probably interfere with an important engagement," answered Rochester, with a little inward smile.

Kitty turned inquiring eyes upon him.

She felt her heart start painfully. Marie Kensington! Surely that was the name of the girl with whom gossip had tried to connect his—Billy's—name since—since—well, since she no longer had a right to think of him!

"Was it so very important?" she asked in a colorless tone that tried vainly to be casual.

"All engagements are, more or less, are they not?" He gave her a polished glance.

But Kitty did not see it. Her eyes were down now, to hide the pain and shadow that she could no longer conceal, and her cheeks were whiter than he had ever seen them.

For half an hour they sat in silence. It was now past three o'clock. The storm had at last worn itself out, and desultory patches of blue showed through the hurrying clouds.

Rochester rose and walked out into

For Half an Hour They Sat in the open. "I guess we can start now," he observed, taking a sweeping inventory of the outlook.

Kitty rose quickly and made ready for the walk. The air outside was crisp and stimulating after the rainfall, and they walked half a mile without fatigue. But presently Kitty began to feel her feet grow heavy, and a pitiful little droop showed itself about the corners of her mouth. But she held her head stubbornly averted, resolved that Billy should not detect her weakness.

Another 15 minutes, and the shiftlessness of a negro family came into view. Kitty took her seat demurely, and Rochester sprang into the one opposite.

An hour elapsed.

Again the stars blinked out, one by one, and the moon rose round and clear and golden. The mellow dip of the oars was the only sound that broke the stillness. After awhile, Rochester spoke.

"Kitty," he began, abruptly, "don't you think we've had enough of—of this sort of thing? God knows, I have. Is it worth while? Couldn't we both acknowledge ourselves in the bit in the wrong, and—and begin all over again?" His voice trembled strongly under its sweet of calmness.

Kitty did not reply at once. Her gaze was fixed, distantly, on the gleaming line ahead of water, across which the lights were beginning to flicker dimly.

"Do you remember what day this is—what day it was to have been, dear?" He bent toward her till his warm breath brought the crimson into her cheeks.

Kitty glanced up and met his eyes. Her own bore a look he could not altogether fathom.

"No; what were you thinking, then?" he asked, almost sharply, a shadow deepening suddenly in his eyes.

Kitty gave a soft little laugh that mingled musically with the delicious rush of water against the sides of the skiff. "I was giving thanks," she said in a low voice, "for you, Billy."

MADE A NEW FASHION.

Good Joke Played in Old Days on Would-Be Fashionable.

Old Camden, in his "Remains," tells a good story of a trick played by a knight upon a would-be fashionable shoemaker. Sir Philip Calthrop purged John Drakes, the shoemaker of Norwich in the time of King Henry VIII., of the proud humor which our people have to be of the gentlemen's cut. This knight bought as much fine French tawny cloth as should make him a gown, and sent it to the tailor to be made. John Drakes, a shoemaker, coming to this tailor's and seeing the knight's gown cloth lying there, bid the tailor buy cloth of the same price and pattern and make it of the same fashion as the knight's. Not long after the knight, coming in to the tailor to be measured for his gown, and perceiving the like cloth lying there, asked whose it was. "John Drakes, the shoemaker, who will have it made of the like gown fashion that yours is made of." "Then make mine as full of cuts as the shears will make it!" said John Drakes had no time to go for his gown till Christmas day, when he meant to wear it. Perceiving the shoes to be full of cuts, he began to swear at the tailor. "I have done naught but what you bid me," quoth the tailor, "for as Sir Philip Calthrop's garment is, even so have I made yours." "By my faichet!" quoth John Drakes, "I will never wear gentlemen's fashions again!"—London T. P.'s Weekly.

THERE IS A REASON.

The Medical Times Explains Why Doctors Oppose Patent Medicines.

The Medical Times for April in a moment of frankness explains the whole opposition of physicians to "patent" medicines which are taken without a prescription, in the following words:

We will hardly repeat here the specific statement to the effect that in one year $62,000,000 has been expended on patent medicines in the United States. Enough to give every practitioner in the country a yearly income of $2,000. In the face of such facts as these, all talk of love of humanity, altruism, self-abnegation and the like becomes cheap and contemptible. It appears to us that such buncombe should give place to homely common sense.

Reliable authority states that the gross amount of the "patent" medicine business is about $40,000,000 instead of $62,000,000 but taking the Medical Times' figures as correct they represent an outlay of considerably less than $1 per capita for home medication. The cost of doctors' fees exclusive of medicines except such as are dispensed for the same period, probably was approximately $230,000,000. This is reached by allowing an average income of $2,000 to each of the 115,000 physicians in the United States. Even allowing that a gross business of $62,000,000 is to be divided between 115,000 physalcians the income of each would not be increased more than $540.

Accounted For.

Among the many stories told of the Scottish judge, Lord Young, is one associated with an election in Edinburgh, when it was announced that Lord Wolmer had been returned by a majority of three votes. Later a correction made the majority 300, and gave the names of two lords of session who had voted for the successful candidate. Lord Young, thereupon remarked: "That accounts for the two ciphers."

"Yes, sah," he replied suavely. "It's an infinitesimal affinity, sah."

PRIVILEGES OF A GENTLEMAN.

Youngster Probably Will Change Ideas in Course of Time.

There is a smell boy in this town, says the Baltimore American, the son of a rather distinguished lawyer, who has decided opinions as what constitutes true aristocracy. One day recently a friend called upon his mother, and, while waiting for the hostess, was entertained by the small boy.

"What are you going to do when you grow up?" was the stereotyped question she propounded in the effort to start the conversation.

"Oh, I am going to smoke."

"Yes?"

"And chew."

"Oh!"

"And gamble."

"Indeed!"

"And swear."

"Really!"

"And drink corn whisky."

"And why are you golag to do such things?" asked the visitor aghast.

"Oh, all southern gentlemen do them."

Amateur Gardener Could Not Understand Why Seeds Did Not Sprout.

The woes of the amateur gardener are very amusing to others, but decidedly real to the man who has spoiled a suit of clothes, blistered his hands and lost his temper in his efforts to make things grow.

A young man, recently married, early in the spring secured a suburban place, mainly with the idea of "fresh, home-grown vegetables.' Every evening he would hurry through his supper and rush out to his garden, where he displayed more energy than skill. But, alas! When many little green things began to break the ground in his neighbors' gardens, his own remained as bare as the Sahara.

"I certainly has put me money in," he confided to a friend at his office one day. "I can't understand why not a blessed thing has come up. I planted peas and corn and tomatoes."

"Perhaps the seed were refective," the friend suggested.

"I hardly think it was that," the gardener replied, "for I got the very best—paid 15 cents a can for them."

Sad Disappointment.

A verdant-looking old fellow recently entered the office of a down-town woman's exchange, and after a moment's hesitation inquired of the lady in charge: "Is this here the Woman's Exchange?"

"It is," replied the lady.

"Well," continued the countryman, somewhat sheepishly, "I'd like to swap off my old woman for 'most anybody you happen to have on hand."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Chance Not to Be Missed.

One day the office boy went to the editor of the Soaring Eagle and said:

"Fetch him in," said the editor. "If we can find out how he does it we can run the paper for another week!"

The Psychological Moment.

The fact that Priam was elected with the adjuster did not prevent Cassandra from dropping in to say that she had told him just how it would be.

"She was all I saved," murmured the burnt-out monarch, jerking his thumb at the retiring prophetess.

"Say no more," rejoined the other. "We'll call the loss total, and if I could make it say more than that, old man, I'd do it, under the circumstances."

Flow of Artesian Well.

To calculeto the rate of flow of an artesian well a simple plan is to lower n hottlo of aniline fluid to a depth of sey 500 feet and then electrically explode a cap to burst the bottle. The time required for the fluid to appear at the surface gives an accurate gauge as to the velocity of flow. It is claimed that this method gives results as accurate as a weir. The diameter of the pipe being known, the rato of flow readily follows.

HAIR PUFFS AND CURLS.

To Be Effective, They Must Be Carefully Looked After.

Those little puffs and curls that fashionable women are urged to wear this season are charming, but why are they not more careful about having them an exact match? They are often seen totally unlike the natural hair of the wearer, and lose all their charm by this horrid mistake, which is particularly in evidence out of doors. They never can be worn many weeks without having them rearranged and touched up at the hair dresser's, for as they are of growing hair, no matter, how exquisite they may be they can not hold a live color long.

After some women have once had them charmingly arranged on the hair with graceful reference to both hair and hat, they do not know how to do it for themselves, and wear them at all sorts of wrong angles. They ought always to be close, cluingingly, scalest ho head, and not bob off at odd places hephazard. They must never be worn with uncurled locks, for the reference is too marked. Placed just right, they may be distractingly alluring—but, placed all wrong, they are horrors.

Parasols to Match Costume.

This year one of the unwritten laws of fashion is that a special parasol is emiors to match the dress and hat must be designed for each toilette, and that the old idea of becoming seasons of its vogue. Among the most popular laces Irish crochet and cluny are decidedly first, with valenciennes lace a m nn eccessory, if not the principal le nearly every garment. Most really smart lingerie gowns combine cre:olclery with two or even three kieds of lace and valenciennes is sure to be one of them. The coarse Irish crochet motives continue to be popular enough to keep all of crocheting Ireland with its fingers flying to supply the demand.

IN COLORS THAT CONTRAST.

Unusual Combinations That Produce Charming Effects.

Frequently in lingerie frocks one sees many unusual combination of color, a favorite way of carrying out these being in the bordered effects. A brick-dust chiffon cloth made over rose pink is remarkable for its originality. The skirt has a deep border of very dull green, and this in turn is patterned with a Persian design in blue and cord pink, with particles of white smuggled in wherever possible. The corsage is draped very full into the girdle, and as the skirt hangs in gauged effect from under the girdle, all have the appearance of being cut and made into one piece. The yoke is round and cut in see piece, with the coller of Irish crochet, bordered with the faintest lice of pink.

Sometimes panels of coatrasting color are sec ted in lingerie skirts of white or cream-colored betistc, and this leeds to the closer observation that panel effects are steadily growing in favor, probably as a sequel to the return of the taller skirt. In most instances the panels are so narrowed that by the time they reach the waist line they merge into the close high girdle.

Lingerie Gowns.

The majority of the headdressmost lingerie gowns are of princess style. Eyclet work is much liked this spring as it has been among the previous

BRICK SILOS.

In Use in Many Dairy Districts of Wisconsin and Give Satisfaction.

On a recent trip through the heart of the dairy section of Wisconsin, I found the brick silo very much in evidence.

Some of them have stood for several years and are giving the best of satisfaction. They neither freeze, shrink, swell, blow down, or rot out, and keep the silage perfectly. They are made with a double wall of brick with a dead air space between. The inner wall of brick is strengthened by laying in a circle of steel every two feet. This gives it great strength. They are plastered on the inside with cement.

The most of these silos set in the ground from four to six feet. The part of the ground is made of stone, and I found no one that would recommend building them more than 16 feet in diameter but would build as high as convcelent, say 30 to 36 feet above ground. If a larger one than this is desired all seem to agree that it would be better to build two.

The old tub silo was good in its day and is very good yet, but silos have passed the experimental stage now and silo builders are looking for something more industrial and more substantial. I believe the brick one has come to stay. In n tall silo there is a great outward pressure and anything to stand has to be made very strong.

A few cement silos are being built and perhaps in time there will be those that have gained the experience that will enable them to build safely, says the Northwestern Agriculturist. At present one complaint with the concrete wall silo is they do not run the walls true enough so that the silage settles and leaves an air space where the silo should set and the silage will mold. Great care should be taken in building n concrete silo to have the walls perfectly perpendicuior so the silage will hug tight to the sides and leave no air space.

BUYING OR RAISING COWS.

The Wise Farmer Will Raise His Calves.

The practice of raising cows rather than selecting them from the herds of others is to be commended. One of the prominent dairymen of the Elgin district in Illinois, says Farmers' Review, has for a long time followed the practice of going out into the country and buying the best cows he could find, milking them through one lactation and then selling them to the butchers. He said it was a paying investment and that was all he was looking for. We are glad to know that this dairyman has, abandoned this course and is now raising calves from his best cows.

He says that the other practice has been carried on for so many years that it is now difficult to find the good cows to buy and that if a man wants good cows he must raise them. This is the only course that will constantly improve the quality of our dairy herds. From year to year good cows will increase in number in the herd of the man that is always selling off his poorest cows and is raising calves from his best cows to take the place of the poor cows of which he disposes.

Take Good Care of It.

Remember the cow is a machine which transforms feed that the dairyman cannot eat into milk and butter which he can consume. It should also be remembered that it is not possible to put musty and tainted feed into this machine and receive pure and wholesome milk therefrom.

Feed Dairy Cows Liberally.

The dairyman should never forget that about 60 per cent. of all the cow can eat is required to sustain her body and only after this amount is provided can there be any returns to him.

Collieries Under the Sea.

At Cape Breton there are immense collieries being worked under the ocean. These submarine mines cover a thousand acres, and are being increased steadily. The mines are entered at the shore, and the operators follow the vein beneath the water for more than a mile. It might be expected that the weight of the water would force its way into the mine. The bed of the ocean is as tight as a cement cistern. A sort of breclay lines the submarine roof of the mine, and the sediment above is held in place and packed down by the water pressure until there is not a crevice nor a drop of water from overhead.

FULTON'S DREAM OF NAVAL WAR IS REALIZED

HIS PLEA FOR TORPEDO BOATS WAS MADE MORE THAN CENTURY AGO.

ANTIDOTE TO SEA POWER

PLAN OF ATTACK IN EIGHT-OARED GALLEYS DIFFERS LITTLE FROM MODERN TACTICS.

Before the Age of Steam, the Great Inventor Asked the President and National Legislature to Organize Defense with Great Flotilla of Torpedo Boats—Asserted That Such Engines Would Mean "Liberty of the Seas"—Demonstration of Their Power.

New York.—Prophecy rests in every line of a book followed by a century in which are set forth the views of Robert Fulton on the submarine warfare of the future. Attention has been called to the old volume just at the time, when tests of under-sea craft are in progress, under the direction of the United States navy. Hardly an element exists of the art of attack and defense now used in that warfare beneath the waters but was recognized by the genius to whom the achievements of steam navigation are due.

Coincident with the celebration of the centenary of the day on which Robert Fulton's first steamship traversed the waters of New York harbor his almost embryonic insight is verified. The volume in which he outlines his plans is entitled "Torpedo War and Submarine Explosions, by Robert Fulton, Fellow of the American Philosophical Society and of the United States Military and Philosophical Society."

It was printed in 1810 in this city by William Elliott, of No. 114 Water street. On the title page, serving as a text are the words: "The Liberty of the Seas Will Be the Happiness of the Earth." Long before steam and electricity were used as motive power for craft these words were written.

Not only did the inventor foresee prophetically all that would come to pass in warfare, but by a hundred years he anticipated the arguments which are now being made by the advocates of peace against the use of the submarine vessels.

Were he here to-day face to face with the members of The Hague peace conference he would be in a position to meet every argument which they might make against employing craft which, by sending out torpedoes, deal out death unseen.

To President Madison.

His pamphlet is in the form of an unofficial report directed to James Madison, president of the United States, and "to the members of both houses of congress." In its opening pages Mr. Fulton invites them to follow the origin and progress of torpedo warfare in order that they might form a correct judgment of the propriety of adopting it as a means of our national defense."

He speaks frankly of the difficulties and embarrassments which he has undergone and gives the impression that he realizes that the campaign for the adoption of such a method of warfare will be beset with obstacles of every kind.

Although he does not mention it in this work, he once was able to put into practice the far-reaching schemes for the building of submarine boats which he had in mind. His prototype of the craft which are now being tested was called the Nautilus. It was refused in turn by the governments of the United States, of Great Britain and of France.

"I believe that it is generally known that I endeavored for many years to get torpedoes introduced into practice in France and England," he writes, "which, though unsuccessful, gave me the opportunity of making numerous very interesting experiments on a large scale, by which I discovered errors in the combinations of the machinery and methods of fixing the torpedoes to a ship, which errors in the machinery have been corrected, and I believe I have found means of attaching the torpedoes to a vessel which will seldom fail of success. It is the result of my experience which I now submit to your consideration, and, hoping you will feel interested in my intention, I beg for your deliberate perusal and reflection."

Desultory efforts to use torpedoes in naval warfare had been made as early as the sixteenth century, but no military or naval authorities even in advanced years ago believed it would be possible to introduce so irregular a plan of sea fighting.

His First Experiment.

Robert Fulton was working in England under the patronage of two noblemen when, after much negotiation, he induced some of the authorities to witness his torpedo experiments. The first of these was made on October 15, 1805, upon the brig Dorothea, and it is described in full in this remarkable pamphlet.

His first illustration represents the brig being cut literally in two by the tremendous explosion which proceeded from the torpedo which had been devised for the experiment.

"The contrivance Mr. Pitt that a vessel could be destroyed by the explosion of a torpedo under her bottom," writes Mr. Fulton, "a strong built Danish brig, the Dorothea, burthen 200 tons, was anchored in Walmer road, near Deal, and within a mile of Walmer castle, the then residence of Mr. Pitt. Two boats, each with eight men, commanded by Lieut. Robinson, were put under my direction. I prepared two empty torpedoes in such a manner that each was only from two to three pounds specifically heavier than the water and so suspended them that they hung 15 feet under water.

"They were then tied one to each end of a small rope 80 feet long. Thus arranged and the brig drawing 13 feet of water, the 15th day of October was spent in practice. Each boat having a torpedo in the stern, they started from the shore about a mile above the brig and rowed down toward her; the uniting line of the torpedoes being stretched to its full extent, the two boats were distant from each other about 70 feet; thus they approached in such a manner that one boat kept the larboard, the other the starboard side of the brig in view.

Directing the Torpedoes.

"So long as the connecting line of the torpedo passed the buoy of the brig they were thrown into the water and carried on by the tide until the connecting line showed the brig's cable; the tide then drove them under her body. The experiment being repeated several times taught the men how to act, and proved to my satisfaction that when properly placed on the tide the torpedoes would invariably go under the bottom of the vessel.

As far as the experts are concerned who witnessed the preliminary stages of this experiment, the whole proceeding was entirely the honoring of a crack-brained inventor. Among those to whom Mr. Fulton explained his torpedo idea was that he intended to do with the Dorothea was Earl St. Vincent. The nobleman, after hearing everything the American genius had to say, reflected deeply for several minutes.

"Pitt is certainly the greatest fool that ever existed," he remarked at length, "to encourage a mode of war which those who command the seas do not want and which, if successful, would deprive them of it."

This inventor continued to the final stage of his experiment and filled one of the torpedoes with 180 pounds of powder and set the clock-work to 18 minutes. The experiment began on October 16, 1805, at five o'clock in the afternoon.

"My dear fellow," said Capt. Kingston, one of the experts, just as the second torpedo boat was under way, "if that thing were placed under my cabin I should feel no concern for the consequences."

"Urgent business," writes Mr. Fulton, "had called Mr. Pitt and Lord Melville to London. Admiral Holloway, Sir Sidney Smith, Capt. Owen, Capt. Kingston, Col. Congreve and the major part of the officers of the fleet under the command of Lord Keath, were present.

The Annihilated Ship.

"At 40 minutes past four the boats rode toward the brig and the torpedoes were thrown into the water, the tide carrying them, as before described, under the bottom of the brig, where, at the expiration of 18 minutes, the explosion appeared to raise her bodily about six feet. She separated in the middle, and the two ends went down.

"In 20 seconds nothing was to be seen of her, except floating fragments; the pumps and foremast were blown out of her, the fore-topsail yard was thrown up to the cross trees, the four chain plates with their boats were torn from her sides, the mizzen chain plates and shrouds, being stronger than those of the foremast, or the shelf being more forward than aft, the mizzen mast was broken off in two places; these discoveries were made by means of the pieces which were found afloat."

This is the history of the first really successful torpedo experiment. Despite the remarkable success which it made in earlier centuries, few of the naval experts of that day believed that powder could explode under water. The idea that the shock of such an explosion under the bottom of a vessel would have any effect upon it was looked upon as wild and chimerical.

Predicted Nation's Growth.

Singularly enough, Mr. Fulton not only foresaw the extension of submarine warfare and the growth of the United States as a naval power, but also predicted with remarkable accuracy the growth of population. His figures could not of course take into account the development of railways, the existence of which he could not foretell, nor of the acquisition of thousands of square miles of additional territory.

"The United States," he writes, "is doubling her population in 25 years, or, with probable correctness, say 30 years."

His table of estimates is as follows: 1820, 10,429,602; 1850, 20,850,204; 1890, 41,716,408; 1920, 81,432,816.

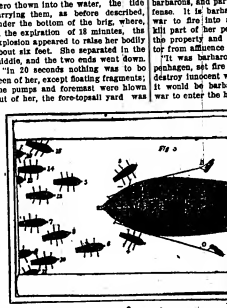
It happens, owing to exceptional growth, that the population is now as much as it should be 12 years from now.

He quotes from Arnauld to show that in 1790 England was the great naval power and that France and Spain were holding their own. He quotes the increasing cost of armaments in Europe as an argument for devising some means of destroying them end thus promoting peace.

"I will also show," he continues, "the increasing resources which, if science does not check it, will enable England hereafter to support a marine of 1,500 armored ships with as much ease she now does the 760."

In consequence of the invention of gunpowder, Mr. Fulton declared that ships of war had increased to their enormous size. He concludes by saying that not until science shall point out the way to destroy ships of war will it give to the seas the liberty which shall obtain perpetual peace between nations separated by the ocean.

Use of Torpedoes Defended.



"In numerous discussions," concludes Mr. Fulton, "which I have had on this subject and its consequences, instead of giving liberty to the seas, its tendency would be to encourage piracy and buccaneering, by enabling a few men in a boat to intimidate and plunder merchant vessels, thereby prodncing greater evil than the evil it will remedy.

"This idea is similar to the one which might have arisen on the invention of muskets, which, giving to an individual the power of certain death at a distance of 50 or 100 yards, robbers might infest the highways, and from ambush shoot the traveler, and take his money. Yet there is not so much robbery now as before the invention of gunpowder. Society is more civilized. All civilized society will in its own interest combine against the robber, who has no chance of escape.

"But men without reflecting, or from attachment to established and familiar tyranny, acclaim that it is barbarous to blow up a ship with all her crew. This I admit, and lament that it should be necessary; but all wars are barbarous, and particularly wars of offense. It is barbarous for a ship of war to fire into a merchant vessel, kill part of her people, take her and the property and reduce the proprietor from affluence to penury.

"It was barbarous to bombard Copenhagen, set fire to the city and destroy innocent women and children. It would be barbarous for ships of war to enter the harbor of New York, fire on the city, destroy property and murder many of the peaceable inhabitants, yet we have great reason to expect such a scene of barbarism and distress unless means are taken to prevent it. Therefore, if torpedoes should prevent such acts of violence, the invention must be humane."

Since the foundation of the present most, in 1799, three states have established 26 of the 43 otherwise unequal Pennsylvania, dwelling, eight, Massachusetts seven and Maryland five.

FOOLING THE PUBLIC

TRICKS OF THE TRAVELING RETAIL GROCERY AGENTS.

GET WHAT YOU PAY FOR

The Price May Be Small, But the Goods Are Expensive Even at That and Not Big Profits.

You may know something about the modus operandi of the traveling grocer, and how the house after paying him 25 per cent. commission still makes a princely profit. There may be some things, inside affairs that it is well that the people in general may know. It will be found on close investigation that the average Mercantile Supply company, Buyers' association or whatever name is used to gull the unsuspecting farmer, consists of one or two schemers who have a small office in some large city, and a back room in the near neighborhood where the "stores" are assembled for packing and the mixing done. The re-packing and the mixing are two important parts of the work of the company. When the "representative" sells John Jones 100 pounds of sugar for $4.62; five cases of canned goods at $2.40 a case; three boxes of dried fruits at ten cents a pound, a few gallons of sweet cider at a bargain and ten or 15 pounds of spices at a profit of 200 per cent., the order is sent to the main office. There it is recorded. The boy is sent down to the wholesale grocery house which generally stands in with the concern, brings back a lot of ordinary bulk dried fruits, the cases of seconds or thirds, in canned goods, and the average run of poor spices. In the packing room the dried fruits are overhauled, washed up if possible as in the case of prunes, and packed in the new boxes, supposed to contain full 25 pounds, but only run from 18 to 22; branded with some fictitious mark and shipped out with the other supplies. The poor spices are ground over again run through a mill with a lot of ground nut-shells, bark or other cheap material, and then some fresh or other cheap material be added. The extracts are of the cheapest class, synthetic and the pure fruit flavors are products of coal-tar, doctored up with coloring matter to look good. Vinegar is the pure thing about it aside from the glass in the bottle containing it.

And the tricks of the box-car outfits are legion. The teas sold are never up to the samples shown. Coffee comes in some cases over the country carrying with him samples of Ceylon teas that were worth 45 cents a pound wholesale. He sells them simply this tea at 50 cents. He received large orders. Every order was filled with teas that cost only 20 cents a pound, and the funny thing about it was that there was no kicking, because the farmer knew nothing about teas, and were satisfied as long as they thought that they got a fine Ceylon article. The same way with coffees. If there is anything that even coffee experts know little about it is coffee. It is a very rare merchant who knows the classes of coffee he is handling. The box-car man generally comes up to a cheap big-berry, tells all about it being a great mountain Mocha and sells three pounds for a dollar, that is at the rate of 17 cents a pound. Should the local grocer try to sell the same grade to his customers at such a price, they would go up a roor that would raise the roof of the store. Still the farmer continues to bite at such baits, and doesn't squeal.

Where the Money Is.

More than one-fourth of the population of the United States proper lies in less than a dozen eastern states as per cent. of the money in manufacturing states. In the banks of one, New York state, is contained nearly 40 per cent. of the money of the country. New York city alone has in its banks 25 per cent. of the money in the country. This has been made possible by the conditions that enable the large cities to draw trade from all over the country. In fact, great cities must have support of a large territory. But one of the great evils which injures the masses who are residents of agricultural district is the lavish and unjustifiable drain of local system of drawing support from local trade centers and communities to the cities. This system takes from the rural districts the money which that should be retained to build them up.

The Drinking Orchid.

One of the most remarkable plants known to horticulturists is the drinking orchid, which is found in South America. This orchid takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty, by means of a tube which it lets down into the water. The tube when not in use is coiled upon the top of the plant.

The formation of the orchid is different from others of its species, having sharp leaves, lanceheaded-shaped, growing round the stem and radiating from it. From the center of the plant hangs the tube, about one-eighth of an inch thick and one-fourth of an inch wide. When touched it gradually contracts and rolls itself up in a spiral-like coil. As a result these orchids are to be found growing directly over the water, or where water has been, and in the latter case it is the most pathetic to see how the tube will work its way over the ground to a pool or river.

Where the Fool Irritates.

The most irritating thing about a fool is that he seems to be enjoying himself so.

NOT A GOOD SYSTEM.

How the Mail Order Business Injures the Agricultural Sections.

We must admit that the mail order system is a legitimate business if it is carried on legitimately. It is a great American privilege to carry on trade in this way. Yet the principle from an American standpoint or any other standpoint that is consistent with equal rights for all is entirely wrong. Through the mail order system the merchants suffer a direct loss. To them it is an unfair competition. It diverts trade from established channels. The loss of the merchants in the local town means a loss to the town itself, to every resident of the town and the surrounding community. It is the business of the city or town that makes it a live place or a dead one. Dependent upon the activity of a town is to a great extent the value of all farm lands in its trade territory. Thus is the farmer affected by any system that causes a deterioration in his home town. Yet the farmers are the main supporters of the catalogue houses. They assist in feeding that snake that is stealing their eggs and they little realize it. They are as wilfully interested in the upbuilding of their home town as the merchant. It is for their benefit as well as for all in the community that the town is there. There is a more vital phase of the question that few farmers realize. That is the evils resulting from the vast capital that is concentrated in the large financial centers. It is this surplus of money that makes it easy to build up trusts and combinations. These trusts effect the ethics and the prosperity of the farmer. He does not stop to think that when he sends his money to the distant concern that he is doing just so much to help along the trusts.

HELPS FOR TOWN BUILDERS.

Some years ago on bill boards and street cars and in the pages of the magazines were run a series of advertising cards the prominent feature of which was "Spotless Town." The idea can be little doubt as to the wholesome lessons taught by this unique advertisement. The town that is kept in good condition, its walks in good repair, its streets well graded, and all neat and clean, is a reflection upon the residents of the place, and is evidence that the town is already dead or feet dying. Should any town be given an impression upon strangers, keep streets clean, business places attractive, and don't forget that the front yards are the general conditions of the residences indicate the character of the people who reside in them.

Residents of agricultural sections who a few years ago looked upon the automobile as a nuisance, are beginning to realize that it is a great factor in road improvement, and is creating a more universal interest in country roads and their betterment, with a corresponding benefit to the farmers. It is as much to the interest of the people of a town that there be good roads leading to it, as it is to the farmers. We must use them in handling their goods to market.

There is a vast difference in the farmers of to-day and the farmers of a quarter of a century ago. It is very largely the improvements brought into existence in a single generation will change conditions. Every land written that makes life in the towns more desirable, also finds a way of conferring a benefit upon the farmers. There never need for the resident of the farm district to not have all the up-to-date things that can be found in the best of the homes. The telephone and the rural delivery has brought him within a "stone throw" of the city.

Living for the Children.

Froebel's sentiment "Come, let us live for our children" rests on a sound philosophic basis. To live for them is to call out the highest qualities of parenthood. And we cannot live for them in the truest sense until we become familiar with their natures. It is the endeavor to meet those needs in the largest way possible that we find our own characters richly developed in strong and well-developed parenthood. We practically become what we are by what we have done or what we are willing or unwilling to do for our children. The principle is universal, and should find its application among children at all times and in all places has not the church found great ground in which to recognize the primary and fundamental place of the child in society? If so, it is obvious how that ground may be recovered.—Homiletic Review.

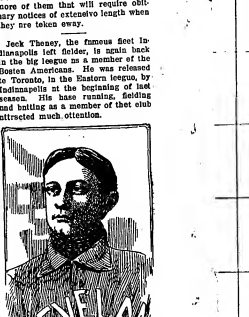
Anticipating Age.

Why do people allow themselves to fret about getting old? Nothing is more pathetic to see than the wistful look that comes into the face of a near-art horse, anywhere. Now, if it was one of those chug-chug wagons coming in here to break the speed limit laws we wouldn't stand for it for a minute."

Thus it was, the victim of overconfidence, that Tiny fell.—Puck.

The Gulls of the Greeks.

At first the more thoughtful ones regarded the gift suspiciously. Then, taking further thought, they said, one to the other:



"Aw, what's the dif? It's only a near-art horse, anyhow. Now, if it was one of those chug-chug wagons coming in here to break the speed limit laws we wouldn't stand for it for a minute."

Thus it was, the victim of overconfidence, that Troy fell.—Puck.

Sporting Gossip.

The death of Ezra Sutton a few days ago in a private hospital in Boston removed from the scene of his triumphs on the baseball field one more of the veteran players who helped make the national pastime famous in its younger days. Sutton was one of the first and best third baseemen of a quarter of a century ago, and attracted attention first while playing on the old Forest City team of Cleveland in the early '70s. His greatest reputation was won, however, on the Boston National league team from 1877 to 1888, for which he played third base uninterruptedly during that period of 11 years. Sutton was a native of New York state and was 57 years old when he died. For the last six years the veteran player had been a victim of locomoter ataxie and a great sufferer. Only a fortnight before his death he expressed a desire to see another baseball game before his death, a desire which it was impossible to grant. One fact is impressed by the death of Sutton which has a bearing on the old argument whether there are more stare to-dey then a quarter of a century ago. That is the infrequency with which the death of a star of 25 years ago is chronicled compared to what will happen when the present active generation of baseball players near the three score yeer merk. While the veterans of 25 years ago who left their mark on the game and in the memories of the fane drop off now and then and recall the days of their prowess there recently, there will comn a time when to-dey's bell players will be called to account for their earthly deeds. There will be a decision of the old argument. There may not be greater stars on the diamond to-day than there were years ago, but there are more of them that will require obituary notices of extensive length when they nre teken away.

Jack Thoney, the famous fleet Indianapolis left fielder, is again back in the big league as a member of the Boston American. He was released to Toronto, in the Eastern league, by Indianapolis at the beginning of last season. His fine running, fielding and batting as a member of thet club nitrsected much ottention.

Jack Thoney.

Thoney woe exchanged for Firet Beeeman Grimshaw and Outfielder Jamas Delehanty, the letter recently purchmed from Washington. The New York Americanes expect to get their return from the western trip, but Denny Hoffman, who was doing poorly, returned to the south and Manager Griffith made no meve to get Thoney.

Johnny Reiff, who rode Richard Croker's heree to success in the English derby recently, is an Ohio product. He moved to Findlay with his perents a number of years nge, and there spent his early days. Findlay is in northern Ohio, where they now reside. Young Reiff secured his lessons in riding on the plains of Kansas. He has a brother, Lester, who le almost as successful as himself. Their saintics and presence when almost mounted to their $150,000. The fattering success with which they met, however, did not disturb their heads, and they started to America and invested their earnings. When Johnny returned to Findlay a few years ago he first thing he seked for was supper. His elder asked him why he did not get his meal on the dining car. He replied that he did attempted to do so, but they could not change the bill he had tendered. It was not long after this until Reiff had of a square meal. When young Reiff returned to his home here he found his education sadly neglected. He retained the services of Clinton Cole, now residing in Toledo, and a brother of Commodore Cole, to instruct him. He took two hours' instruction each day and was a very apt pupil.

E. B. Talcott, former owner of the New York Nationales, was asked his opinion regarding Rusie and Mathewson as great pitchers, but he did not feel up to discussing the question. "Rusie came once in a while," Mr. Talcot said, "that the speediest pitcher that ever stood in the box was Dutch Carter, of Yale. I know we offered Carter $7,000 a year to pitch for us, but he would not play professional ball.

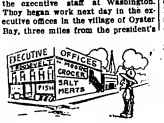
VOL. VII. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JULY 19, 1907. NO. 16.

The President's Vacation

Roosevelt Always in Touch with Affairs of the Nation

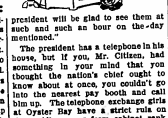


DEVOTES PART OF EVERY DAY TO PUBLIC AFFAIRS

OYSTER BAY.—Although President Roosevelt is settled down at Oyster Bay for a four months' vacation he will not be able to escape from a good deal of the labors and duties of his job. The public business at Washington goes on just the same. There are officials to appoint, questions of policy to decide, commissions in the army and navy to sign, many other things that no one but the president can attend to, and which President Roosevelt would let no other man attend to even if he had the power.

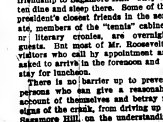
White he spends the summer in his modest and comfortable country house at Sagamore Hill he is obliged to devote a few hours a day—often more than a few—to the nation's business. When the president went down to Oyster Bay recently he was accompanied by Secretary Loeb, Assistant Secretary Latta, and four clerks from the executive staff at Washington. They began work next day in the executive offices in the village of Oyster Bay, three miles from the president's house. These offices are connected by direct wire with the executive offices adjoining the White House at Washington. The clerks at the capital are therefore in as close touch with their immediate chief, Mr. Loeb, as if he were in his own office there. Mr. Loeb, in turn, is in constant touch with the president. The whole arrangement works out in the same manner as if the capital and all the departments had been moved from Washington to Oyster Bay.

One difference is that the president never visits the executive offices in Oyster Bay. Whatever business requires to be brought to his attention is taken up by Secretary Loeb to Sagamore Hill. Mr. Loeb goes to the president in the forenoon about 11 o'clock, after he has gone through the mail and sorted from it the letters and official papers which need to pass under the executive eye at once. Some days Mr. Loeb goes back to the village in time to put in an hour's work before luncheon. More often his luncheon has to wait an hour for him.



EXECUTIVE OFFICES THE PRIDE OF VILLAGERS

THE executive offices at "the summer capital," as Oyster Bay folk take pride in calling their village, never fail to impress visitors by their unpretentiousness. They consist of seven office rooms and a storeroom, into which a loft above a corner grocery has been divided. Mr. Moore, the enterprising purveyor of pure food to the villagers and surrounding gentry, is a famous man every summer. The whole country hears each summer in the press dispatches of "the executive offices over Moore's grocery." Mr. Moore's pride would be greater if the president should come down some day and transact some important piece of business there.



Secretary Loeb has a large, sunny room in the front overlooking the business center of the village. His door is always open; any one can walk in upon him, get a pleasant greeting and see as much of the government wheels going round as he could in Mr. Loeb's office. Opposite office. All he will see is Mr. Loeb busy at a big flat-topped desk, with mother desk close by covered with the newspapers which the secretary to the president reads diligently. He will see the rest of the staff in the five other rooms. One room is occupied by one of two telegraph operators who are on duty by turns from nine a. m. to 11 p. m. They are kept busy most of the time. Much of the matter is summaries of correspondence, to which Secretary Loeb directs routine formal answers to be returned.

LOEB DECIDES WHO CAN SEE CHIEF EXECUTIVE

A LARGE part of Mr. Loeb's business is summed in deciding "who's who" in the matter of requests for personal interviews with the president. Few persons are allowed to go up to Sagamore Hill and ring the door bell. Of course, cabinet officers, senators and a few representatives would be permitted, if they chose to arrive in Oyster Bay unannounced, to drive up to the presidential door and send their cards to Mr. Roosevelt. But these privileged men are the very ones who would never think of doing so. All visiting statesmen write or telegraph beforehand, asking whether it will be convenient for the president to see them on a given day. The carrying of the answer pays through Loeb's hands. He writes those gentlemen that "the president will be glad to see them at such and such an hour on the day mentioned."

The president has a telephone in his house, but if you, Mr. Citizen, had something in your mind that you thought the nation's chief ought to know about at once, you couldn't go into the nearest pay booth and call him up. The telephone exchange girls at Oyster Bay have a strict rule on that. All persons, from cabinet rank down, who call for Mr. Roosevelt's number are switched over to Mr. Loeb. If it's all right, Mr. Loeb says so, and you "get" the president. If Mr. Loeb doesn't know you he asks you your business and probably advises you to put it into writing, for Mr. Loeb is a methodical and careful secretary.

CABINET OFFICERS OFTEN VISIT SAGAMORE HILL

THE cabinet is rarely called together in the president's vacation, and then only to consider matters regarded as of the highest importance. Nevertheless, in the course of a summer most of the members of the cabinet pay a visit, either of business or friendship to Sagamore Hill. They often dine and sleep there. Some of the president's closest friends in the senate, members of the "senate" cabinet, or literary cronies, are overnight guests. But most of Mr. Roosevelt's visitors who call by appointment are asked to arrive in the forenoon and to stay for luncheon.

There is no barrier up to prevent persons who can give a reasonable account of themselves and betray no signs of the crank, from driving up to Sagamore Hill, on the understanding that they are not to halt their horses, but drive around the house and out again. If any person should gain entrance by giving this assurance to the secret service men at the outpost and then try to break faith and seek entrance to the house, he would be stopped by other secret service men on guard near the porch.

The president's bodyguard is commanded by "Jim" Sloan, who has had the chief responsibility for his safety since Secret Service Agent Tyree was made a United States marshal. Sloan now has eight men to help him. Guards at the house and at the entrance from the highroad a quarter mile away are changed with the regularity of military discipline, night and day. The guards are all picked men, who have shown not merely zeal and devotion, which are essential, but horse-sense and quick judgment.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

DIGGING GREAT CANAL

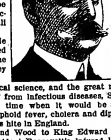
Col. Thomas W. Symons, U. S. A., who has been engaged as chief consulting engineer for the great New York barge canal, has some original methods of canal digging. Uncle Sam has merely loaned him to the Empire state until the $101,000,000 improvement is completed.

The story of Col. Symons' career is a success story. He was born in Michigan of poor parents. He early expressed a desire to join the army, and after overcoming numberless difficulties received an appointment to West Point. He graduated four years later at the head of his class. He was first stationed at the torpedo school, Willets Point, now Fort Totten. He was then detailed successively upon western survey work, in Oregon, Washington, California, Nevada and Utah, as chief of engineers of the department of the Columbia, on the Mississippi, and on the task of tracing the Mexican boundary from El Paso to San Diego. In 1886 he went to Buffalo, where he remained for seven years in charge of river and harbor work, and the construction of lighthouses on Lakes Erie and Ontario. While in Buffalo he built the longest breakwater in the world, which is design and certain peculiarities of construction has become a model to be copied by engineers here and abroad.

It was while he was stationed at Buffalo that Col. Symons became interested in the study of canal work, and his writings and reports on the scheme which is now being carved across the map of New York state first brought the matter prominently before the public. Governor Roosevelt appointed an advisory board of citizens and recommended to the state the plan of enlarging the existing canals to a size adequate to accommodate barges of 1,000 tons. It was only natural, therefore, that the governor and the canal interests should want Col. Symons to supervise the work when the scheme was finally adopted and the money appropriated to carry the great work on.

POLICEMAN TO PASTOR

Brooklyn, the "city of churches," has in the list of her hours of worship one that interests the public chiefly through the personality of its pastor. It is the Gospel Mission church, at Evergreen avenue and Moffat street, and its pastor is Rev. John E. Brown, formerly a member of the New York police force.



He resigned from the department 12 years ago, and, according to his own story, which he never tires of telling for the benefit of the man who sunk into the mire of intemperance, passed through a period when he "slept on a truck in the Bowery, drank with the bums, and was one of them."

He became interested in religion, reformed, and entered upon evangelistic work, in addition to the duties of his trade—that of a painter and decorator.

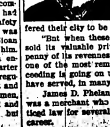
He has traveled as an evangelist over most of the northeastern part of the country, and not long ago succeeded the pastorate of the Gospel Mission church, which is conducted on undenominational lines. He receives no regular salary, depending upon his secular calling for his own support (he owns his comfortable home in Williamsburg), but it is his purpose to carry on the work of the church without giving the entertainments so often resorted to for the purpose of securing funds.

His 12-year-old daughter is his organist.

KING EDWARD'S DOCTOR

Sir Frederick Treves, the favorite physician of King Edward of England, is not a Christian Scientist, but he subscribes to a doctrine that is strikingly similar to one of the beliefs of Mrs. Eddy's followers. He believes the use of medicine will soon be a thing of the past.

Speaking in London at the opening of an isolation hospital recently, he observed that a time was not far distant when the bottles on doctors' shelves would be reduced to a very small number.



Resort would be had to simple living, suitable diet and plenty of sun and fresh air. He expected to see the time when people would leave off the extraordinary habit of taking medicine when they were sick.

Referring to the discoveries in bacteriological science, and the great results achieved in the reduction of the mortality from infectious diseases, Sir Frederick said that he looked forward to the time when it would be an anomalous fact for persons to die of scarlet fever, typhoid fever, cholera and diphtheria as it would be for a man to die of a wolf's bite in England.

During the visit of Gen. Corbin and Wood to King Edward in 1902 the king showed much concern over President Roosevelt's injured leg and said to Gen. Corbin: "Do you think he'd mind if I sent him my doctor? He is the best in the world." This opinion is shared by the British public, which refers to Sir Frederick as "the man that saved the king's life."

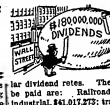
Just before King Edward's coronation Sir Frederick performed the delicate operation of removing the royal appendix. He frequently startles the public by his frank utterances on medical subjects.

LEADING FRISCO CITIZEN

James Duval Phelan, for six years mayor of San Francisco, was in the conviction of Mayor Schmitz and the confession of "Boss" Ruef the dawn of a new era of great prosperity for the city of the Golden Gate.

Mr. Phelan is president of the Mutual Savings bank of San Francisco and one of the wealthiest and most influential business men. He explains the situation in these words:

"The east might well have complained of the government of San Francisco and withheld its credit prior to the fire of April, 1906, because an serious attempt had been made to expose and punish the criminals who held public places, and a charge against the citizens might lie that they supinely bore the yoke without protest and suffered their city to be despoiled by organized grafters.



"But when these grafters, like carrion, preyed upon the fallen city, and sold its valuable privileges at a time when the municipality needed every penny of its revenues, the men of San Francisco rose to the occasion, and now one of the most remarkable prosecutions in the history of the criminal procedure is going on under the shadow of our great disaster, which seems to punish the criminals who held public places, and a charge against the citizens might lie that they supinely bore the yoke without protest and suffered their city to be despoiled by organized grafters.

James D. Phelan is a native of San Francisco, 45 years old. His father was a merchant who amassed considerable wealth. The younger Phelan practiced law for several years, but has found his greatest success in a business career.

SEMI-ANNUAL CUTTING OF WALL STREET MELON

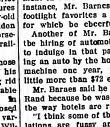
NEW YORK.—Melon-cutting time is at hand in Wall street. A pleasing function at any time, it is going to be salubrious this season, because the divide will be the largest in history. The July dividend and interest payments of corporations will reach the stupendous total of $18,881,849.

July and January are the months when the great bulk of corporation profits are up for division. The prosperity that reached such great headway last year and is still under way is responsible for the magnificent proportions of the July melon this year.

The payments will be $18,097,674 greater than those of last July. Some corporations that never before paid dividends come up smiling with profits for their stockholders. Others that were obliged to suspend dividends now cheerfully renew, and many companies announce an increase over their regular dividend rates. The dividends to be paid are: Railroad, $36,750,089; industrial, $61,017,272; traction, $7,068,675; bank and trust companies, $7,700,000; total, $92,553,037. The amount last July was $80,752,831.

Among the railroads the most notable increases in dividends have been made by the Vanderbilt lines. The largest amounts to be disbursed by railroads are Chicago & Northwestern, semiannual, $3,466,661; Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, semiannual, $2,967,990, and New York Central, quarterly, $2,885,250.

The largest amounts to be distributed by industrial companies are United States Steel, common stock, quarterly, $2,541,512; Anaconda, quarterly, $2,100,000; American Telephone and Telegraph, quarterly $2,621,023; General Electric, quarterly, $1,364,314, and Western Union, quarterly, $1,216,757.

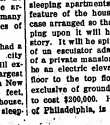


HOTELS PREPARED FOR HOT SUMMER WEATHER

THERE is one of set of business men in New York who have their establishments all ready for summer whether that fickle season delays its coming or not, and they spend all sorts of money to do it. These are hotel keepers and the owners of apartment hotels. In readiness for the straw hat and summer visitor season they had veritable companies of housekeepers and under servents at work before the real summer weather made its debut, changing the appearance of the public and private rooms of their establishments from the heavy richness that goes with the winter temperature to one that comports with the hot days of July and August.

These preparations include covering all the heavy furniture in the sleeping rooms and private parlors with thin stuffs to make them look as cool as possible; the taking down of thick curtains and putting up thin ones; and often of putting rollers under some of the best rooms where the prices warrant such an extensive change. In all of the public rooms of the apartment hotels the bangings are covered with linen, if they are not removed entirely, the chairs and sofas are also fitted with gayly colored crestones and no a final touch even the piano is shrouded with a covering so that no one can possibly add to the nervous strain of the hot weather by playing on it.

MAKES MONEY FLY IN PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS



THE latest "Broadway Monte Carlo" has been discovered.

Everybody in the white light district is amazed at the lavish expenditures of Oliver Barnes, the 22-year-old grandson of Col. Oliver Weldon Barnes, builder of the famous Horseshoe curve on the Pennsylvania railroad.

Mr. Barnes, it is estimated by those who have kept careful account of his public spendings, has been getting rid of about $500 a day in his "inalienable right," the pursuit of happiness. In addition he has periodically disposed of tens of thousands of dollars in various ventures, in connection with Wilson Mizner, ex-husband of Mrs. Yerkes, of the Hotel Rand, at Forty-ninth street and Broadway.

Since Mr. Barnes has been in New York his daily expenditures have been punctuated by little breakfasts and vaudeville entertainments for which he has paid as lavishly as did Count Boni de Castellano for similar amusement in Paris. A few weeks ago, for instance, Mr. Barnes gave to a few footlight favorites a small breakfast for which he cheerfully paid $1,500. Another of Mr. Barnes' fancies is the hiring or automobiles. He began to indulge in that pastime by engaging an auto by the hour. He kept the machine one year, paying for it a little more than $72 each day.

Mr. Barnes said he bought the Hotel Rand because he was dissatisfied with the way hotels are run in New York. He set up to date. Finding that Mr. Mizner held similar sentiments, I joined him in the purchase of a hotel which we intended to make the finest in New York. But that's only a side bet."

NEW GOULD MANSION TO HAVE RURAL FEATURES

PLANS have been filed for the new city mansion, to be built by George J. Gould on the northeast corner of Sixty-seventh street and Fifth avenue. Mr. Gould's house on the site of the proposed mansion will be torn down at once. The building is to be 46x113 feet, and the plans provide for a six-story house. The entrance will be upon Sixty-seventh street. The architect will try to reproduce as many as possible of the rural features of Georgian court.

At Georgian court the Goulds had a great swimming pool. Their city house will contain one which will exceed the size of some in the largest Turkish baths and clubhouses in New York. The pool will be 20x55 feet, built on the top floor of the house, save one. The kitchen and the sleeping quarters of the servants will be on the top floor. The living-room and the salon, petit salon and ball room will be on the first floor. It is supposed that the two salons and the ball room will be so arranged that the whole floor may be thrown into one when necessary. The upper floors will be given over to the library and sleeping apartments of the family. A feature of the house will be a staircase arranged so that the person stepping upon it will be elevated to any story. It will be spiral, along the lines of an escalator adapted to the needs of a private mansion. There also will be an electric elevator from the first floor to the top floor. The building, exclusive of ground or furnishings, is to cost $200,000. Horace Trumbauer, of Philadelphia, is the architect.

TORNADO KILLS ONE IN SOUTH DAKOTA

FARMER IS CARRIED FIFTY FEET THROUGH THE AIR AND CRUSHED.

Two Women Reported Killed Near Mount Vernon—Houses and Barns Wrecked—Much Damage Done to Growing Crops.

Mitchell, S. D., July 15.—There was but one fatality in the tornado which visited this section Saturday evening. All telephone wires were down and no outside information could be secured until this morning.

John M. Pease, living three miles north of Mount Vernon, was killed. A part of his family had gone to the cellar when the storm approached and others went across the road and took refuge in a grove. Mr. Pease and a few mongrels followed. Started a few moments before the storm struck them to see if the children were safe, and when a hundred feet from the house the wind picked him up and carried him fifty feet in the air, and in dropping him to the ground he was crushed. He lived but a few minutes after the children reached his side. The funeral was held this afternoon.

A few years ago Mr. Pease was a prominent politician in the Populist party of the state and was one of the leaders in the reform party.

Farms Hit.

Two women were reported killed near Mount Vernon, but this has not been verified.

Additional details were received as to the extent of the damage done by the storm east of Mount Vernon. The house of Mr. Riley was carried into the roads and set down, and but little damage was done to it other than rocking it. Much of the furniture was wrecked.

On the Herman farm the house and barn were wrecked and scattered for some distance. An immense barn was partially destroyed on the Connor farm and Mr. and Mrs. Connor barely escaped with their lives. The White brothers' house was destroyed.

TRAIN WRECKED IN SOUTH.

Six Person Killed and Twenty Injured in Tennessee.

Johnson City, Tenn., July 15.—Six persons not instant death and twenty were injured when the east bound vestibuled No 42 on the Southern railway collided with a switch engine one mile east of Johnson City last night. The switch engine was in charge of a hostler, who, when he saw the passenger train coming toward him, reversed his engine and jumped. Scarcely had he done so before the passenger train crashed into the light engine.

The engine of the passenger train, baggage car, mail car, and second class coach were derailed and overturned, but the switch engine was not lifted from the rails and with full head of steam started on a wild run that did not end until a switch was thrown and the engine ditched at Carnegie. The dead were Knoxville people.

Street Car Runs Away.

Minneapolis, July 15.—A Cedar and Emerson car, running at a terrific rate, jumped the track at the foot of a steep grade at Fremont avenue and Thirty-third street, last night. It turned on its side and plowed over the ground a distance of fifty feet. Five passengers were in the car, four of whom were hurt. The motorman and conductor, escaped with a few bruises. The accident was due to the failure of the air brakes to work and the hand brake had no effect on the car.

French President in Danger.

Paris, July 15.—The national fete was marred by an attempt on the life of President Falliores by Leon Malliere a naval reservist of Havre, who, it is believed, is suffering from the mania of persecution. Malliee fired two shots at the president, but did not hit him. He was at once arrested.

Would Oust Risk Companies.

Topeka, Kan., July 15.—Injunction suits were filed in the second district court here Saturday by Attorney General F. S. Jackson against 63 foreign fire insurance companies, charging them with alleged violation of the state anti-trust laws. The suits are based on information filed by Charles H. Barnes, superintendent of insurance, and seeks to prevent the companies from using the Sheridan rating sheet in writing Kansas insurance. The suits involve every fire insurance company in the state.

Look Like Green Bugs.

Preston, Minn., July 15.—Insects, supposed to be green bugs, have destroyed patches in the oat fields here, aboute.

Unwritten Law in Missouri.

St. Joseph, Mo., July 15.—Raymond Teson pleaded insanity and the "unwritten law" as his defense for the killing of George Mayhan and a jury acquitted him here. He killed Mayhan last October. The jury decided that Teson was insane when he shot Mayhan and that he is still of unsound mind. The slayer will be committed by Criminal Judge Casteel to the state insane asylum until the reason is restored. It was proved that Mayhan was intimate with Mrs. Teson.

BOLD PAWNSHOP ROBBERY

THIEVES IN INDIANAPOLIS GET PLUNDER WORTH $3,000.

Clerk Struck Down and Fatally Injured While Showing Goods to Two Men.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 12.—Two men entered the pawnshop of Emil Mentel and Charles Modias on Massachusetts avenue, in the downtown district, Thursday night and after striking the clerk down with a piece of hose cord rendering him unconscious, escaped with plunder valued at $3,000. The clerk, Simon Gold, was fatally hurt.

Up to a late hour the police had obtained no clew to the identity of the robbers.

At the hospital Gold stated that he was preparing to lock up for the night when two men entered and asked to look at a diamond ring. After purchasing a costly stone, the robbers requested that they be given a suit case which was stored in the rear of the store. While he was in the act of showing the suit case one of the men struck Gold a stinging blow over the head with a piece of hose. The clerk managed to get to the telephone and notified the owners of the pawnshop. Upon their arrival at the store Gold was found in a critical condition.

The thieves got away with $150 in cash, $1,500 worth of diamonds, two dozen gold watches and numerous other valuable articles.

Omaha, Neb., July 12.—Robbers Wednesday night fatally beat Han Pak, a Chinese restaurant keeper, and robbed his strong box of $500 in cash. An Iceman found Pak lying in a pool of blood in his kitchen. He died in the hospital.

TOBACCO TRUST IS ATTACKED.

Government Files a Petition Against the Big Combine.

New York, July 11.—With a severe thud the blow has fallen on the tobacco trust. Attorney General Bonaparte, who for a long time has been investigating the great international combine, under the president's direction, Wednesday caused to be filed in the United States circuit court in this city a petition against the following concerns:

American Tobacco company, Imperial Tobacco company, British-American Tobacco company, American Snuff company, Americus Cigar company, United Cigar Stores company, American Stogie company, Macandrews & Forbes company, and Conley Foil company.

Fifty-six other corporations and 29 individuals connected with the foregoing companies also are named.

The corporations and individuals constituto what is generally known as the "tobacco trust," and it is charged against them sets forth the intention of the government to dissolve this trust by breaking up the agreements under which the concerns are working.

TORNADO STRIKES LOUISVILLE.

One Man Killed and Much Damage Done to Property.

Louisville, Ky., July 10.—A terrific wind storm which burst upon the city shortly before five o'clock Tuesday afternoon brought death to one man and injury to several other persons.

Many horses and mules were killed, buildings unroofed, smaller structures blown down and unprecedented damage done to shade trees all over the city. The result of the weather bureau show that the maximum velocity of the wind was 68 miles an hour during the height of the storm and the wind blew at the rate of 60 miles for 15 minutes. Several streets are impassable for blocks owing to the trees which litter the roadways. Street car service was suspended for several hours.

OHIO BANKER INDICTED.

Accused of Trying To Bribe a Prosecuting Attorney.

Pomeroy, O., July 11.—Late this evening a special grand jury returned an indictment against Banker E. C. Fox, of Middleport, charging him with attempting to bribe Prosecuting Attorney Albert P. Miller. Fox was immediately arrested, locked into court and placed under bonds.

The indictment grows out of the wrecking of the Middleport bank last spring at which time $115,000 in deposits disappeared. Fox was indicted at the time, but has not been brought to trial. Miller claims that in March Fox approached him with a proposition to settle the indictment against him in consideration of $2,000 to be paid to Miller.

Feudist Killed in Card Game.

Jackson, Ky., July 15.—Curt Smith, brother of John Smith, the noted feudist, was shot and killed by Sigel Turner in a duel over a card game. Smith is alleged to have fired twice at Turner before the latter killed him. Smith was an important witness for the commonwealth against Judge James Hargis and his associates in the mountain feud cases. Turner surrendered Friday to the officers here.

Chicago Contractor Drowned.

Grand Rapids, Mich., July 11.—Thomas Smith, 60 years of age, a teaming contractor of Chicago, was seized by an epileptic fit while launch riding on Spring lake. He jumped into the water during the seizure and was drowned. Mr. Smith had a summer home at Spring lake.

RAILROAD OPPOSES TWO-CENT FARE ACT

PENNSYLVANIA LINE RESISTS IN COURT LAW PASSED BY LAST LEGISLATURE.

Counsel for Corporation Attacks Constitutionality of Statute, Holding Loss Will Result—Same Issue Decided in Iowa

Philadelphia, Pa., July 12.—President McCren of the Pennsylvania railroad was the principal witness Thursday in the equity proceedings instituted by that company against the city and county of Philadelphia to restrain it from enforcing the two-cent railway fare law passed by the last legislature. The law goes into effect October 1, and provides a penalty of $1,000 for each violation of its provisions. Most of the railroads of the state have started similar actions, and Thursday's proceedings were regarded as a test case.

Attitude Taken by Road.

John G. Johnson, of counsel for the Pennsylvania railroad, in opening the proceedings, said the commonwealth had no constitutional right to make rates for the Pennsylvania railroad under its charter. But, for the sake of argument, even if the law was constitutional, the two-cent rate is unreasonable and will not return a fair profit for the capital invested.

City Solicitor Gendell, in his statement to the court, said that the county was made a defendant because the only penalty for violation of the law is payable here. He thought the proceedings should have been brought against the commonwealth as it is a state matter. Nevertheless, he said, the city is being a defendant he would guard its interests which, in this case, are not great.

Profit and Loss Estimate.

The first witness examined was Max Riebenack, comptroller of the Pennsylvania railroad. He presented a summary of earnings and expenses on state business for the first three months of the present year. This three months of the present year. This three months of the present year. This summary showed that the average rate per passenger per mile was 1.907 cents.

The earnings for the three months were $3,070,935, and the expenses $2,921,607. If the two-cent law had been in force during these three months the earnings would have been but $2,347,033. Estimated figures for the entire year 1907, based on those of the first three months of the present year, were also submitted.

Denies Two-Cent Fare Injurious.

Des Moines, Iowa, July 15.—Judge McPherson of the federal court Thursday denied the application of two stockholders of the Iowa Central and the Minneapolis and St. Louis railroads for a restraining order against the directors of these roads to prevent them from putting into effect the two-cent passenger rate passed by the Iowa legislature. The case will go to trial July 4.

The judge based his action upon the ground that no injury to the roads was shown, but the complaint that the new rate would cut down dividends was not proved, that increased passenger travel might increase receipts and that under rule 94 of the Supreme court the case was not properly brought, as no charges of bad faith on the part of the directors was alleged.

LEACH DIRECTOR OF MINT.

Superintendent at San Francisco Appointed to Succeed Roberts.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 12.—President Roosevelt Thursday appointed Frank A. Leach, of Oakland, Cal., director of the mint to succeed George E. Roberts, who resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National bank of Chicago, made vacant by the death of James H. Eckles.

Mr. Leach is at present superintendent of the San Francisco mint. He will assume his new duties next month. Washington late in the present month.

CALLS WAR TALK FOOLISH

ADMIRAL YAMAMOTO BLAMES THE SENSATIONAL PRESS.

Noted Japanese Entertained at Luncheon by President Roosevelt—Soft Scoff at Alarms.

New York, July 11.—Admiral Baron Yamamoto, one of Japan's most distinguished naval officers, is the guest of New York. The admiral and his suite arrived here from England on the steamer Carmania Wednesday morning and will remain here until Friday.

The admiral's first day in New York was the busy one. He was interviewed by half a hundred reporters, had his photograph taken a score of times, received visits from Mel. Gen. Frederick D. Grant, Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, Capt. J. D. Adams, acting commandant of the New York navy yard, and a number of other military and naval men, took a long automobile ride and dined with the members of his party.

In his interviews the admiral deprecated the war scare which has repeatedly appeared in both Japan and America. He said that no small incident could break the friendship which has existed for so many years between Japan and the United States. He thought the sensational press of both countries largely to bleme for the war talk. As to the prospective transfer of the entire Atlantic battleship squadron to the Pacific, that was a matter solely for the American government to decide and one that he could not advise him in the least, except in that it was a novel experiment.

New York, July 12.—Admiral Baron Yommoto Friday met for the first time President Roosevelt, the man, more than any other men, was responsible for the conclusion of peace between Japan and Russia after a prolonged war, during which Admiral Yamamoto was Japan's minister of marine.

In a private conversation the representatives of the two countries discussed the cloud which has been hovering over the long lasting friendship between Japan and America, and each one expressed the opinion that it was merely a passing shadow and one which could in no way reach a climax that would shake the confidence each country has had in the other since the day Commodore Perry induced the Tokugawa shogun to open the island empire to communication with the outside world.

JAPANESE SPY IS CAUGHT.

Arrested While Making Drawings of Fort Rosecrans, Cal.

San Diego, Cal., July 12.—A report was in circulation Thursday that a Japanese had been arrested at Fort Rosecrans in the act of making drawings of the fort.

The arrest, it is said, was made two days ago, but where the Japanese now is and who he is is not publicly known. Major Getchell will give no information.

Washington, July 12.— It was stated at the war department Thursday that no report had been received there regarding the arrest of a Japanese at Fort Rosecrans, near San Diego, while sketching fortifications.

Iowa State Bar Adjourns.

Davenport, Ia., July 12.—The Iowa State bar association closed its annual meeting Friday. The following were elected: President, D. D. Murphy, Elkader; vice president, J. W. Sollinger, Davenport; secretary, C. W. Dutcher, Iowa City; treasurer, Charles S. Wilcox, Des Moines. Waterloo got the meeting for 1908.

King of Siam May Visit Us.

New York, July 13.—The charge d'affaires of the Siamese legation at Washington, Phra Ratanayapit, who arrived Friday from London; where he went to pay his respects to the king of Siam, said that it is likely the king will visit the United States next year.

"UNWRITTEN LAW" FREES SLAYERS

MRS. BOWIE AND HER SON HENRY ACQUITTED OF THE HUBERT POSEY MURDER.

Avenged Girl's Wrong—Jury at La Plata, Md., Requires but Five Minutes to Reach Its Verdict Freeing the Prisoners.

La Plata, Md., July 13.—It took the jury in the Bowie murder trial Friday but five minutes to decide that, in southern Maryland, at least, the "unwritten law" is the law to which the seducer must look for himself unswerving able. And while there was no demonstration when the verdict became known, there was sufficient evidence that the verdict of the jury was the verdict of the people of this section of the state.

Both jury and people acquit Mrs. Mary E. Bowie and her son, Henry, of all blame for their acknowledged slaying last January of Hubert Posey, the seducer of their daughter and sister, Priscilla Bowie, who, with her fatherless child, made a most pathetic picture in the courtroom during the progress of the trial. That there was no demonstration was doubtless due to the fact that the verdict of the jury was announced to the judges while they were at dinner during a recess.

Frank Appel to "Unwritten Law."

State's Attorney Wilmer's request to the jury that they bring in a verdict of manslaughter, not of murder, made Thursday evening, was not more noteworthy than the frankness with which Congressman Sidney E. Mudd, of counsel for the defense, appealed to the "unwritten law" in behalf of his clients. Throughout his address, which evidently voiced the sentiments of most of his hearers, Mrs. Bowie and her son sat in stolid composure, while Priscilla Bowie, seated outside the rail among the spectators, wept continuously.

"Gentlemen," said Congressman Mudd, in opening, "we shall claim that these defendants were justified by the unwritten law. We have called the 'unwritten law.'" He then cited many cases in which the avengers of outraged daughters, sisters and wives have been acquitted, and continued: "Never since the formation of this government has there been tried before a jury of American citizens a single case of murder following wanton seduction in which the verdict ban been other than instant acquittal."

Cites a Bible Precedent.

He argued for the "supremacy of the law inedibly written on the quick-beating human heart over the cold type of the statute book;" and cited the biblical story of Jacob's daughter Dinah, wronged by the shekem, whom Dinah's brothers killed.

At the conclusion of Congressman Mudd's argument, Congressman Pegram again addressed himself to the jury, arguing against the "unwritten law" and referring his hearers to ten law," and referring his hearers to the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," but he urged the jury to give the defendants the benefit of a reasonable doubt and repeated that he did not ask for a verdict of murder, but for one of manslaughter. The jury, however, evidently took Mr. Mudd's view of the case and when they filed into court it was to declare the killing of Hubert Posey was justified.

BUILDING FALLS, THREE DEAD.

Newly Erected Concrete Structure Collapses In Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, July 11.—Three men are known to have been killed, one was fatally hurt and 18 others were hurt in the collapse of a new concrete building Wednesday at the plant of Bridgman Bros. company, manufacturers of steam fitters' supplies, at Fifteenth street and Washington avenue, in the southwestern section of the city.

The building was just nearing put under roof, when a section about 30 feet in width and extending the entire length of the structure collapsed. Most of the men were at work on the side which gave way, and they were carried down in the debris.

ESCAPES AT PRISON'S DOOR.

Albert Peverette, Convicted Bank Robber, Regains His Freedom.

Marquette, Mich., July 12.—Within 50 feet of the prison here and about to be turned over to that institution, Albert Peverette, bank robber and convict—one of the Richland bank robbers who broke out of the notorious Lake Shore gang—escaped from two guards Thursday at midnight while the latter were entering the prison driveway. Peverette leaped from the carriage they were in, having slipped the shackles from both hands and feet.

Lipten May Challenge Again.

London, July 13.—It is probable, although Sir Thomas Lipton will not admit it, that the New York Yacht club will receive a challenge for the America's cup for 1908. The time for challenging does not expire until October and it is not likely that the challenge will be sent out until the last moment.

White Camp Kills Seven Miners.

Hazleton, Pa., July 12.—Seven mine workers, all Italians, were killed by an abandoned slope of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company at Honey-brook Thursday by deadly white damp. Three others are missing. A

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Two Children Burned to Death.

Warren.—Two children were burned to death and another narrowly escaped a similar fate in a fire which destroyed the home on the farm of M. Kjelve, who lives in eastern Marshall county.

The mother and father had arisen early in the morning and gone to the barn to do some milking, leaving the three children sleeping. An electrical storm came up and it is believed that the house was fired by a stroke of lightning. It was some little time before the parents discovered the blaze and when they reached the house the two older children, aged five and seven years, were dead. The baby was still alive, but almost suffocated.

The older children apparently had tried to crawl to safety as their dead bodies were found near the door. Both had been horribly charred.

Six Hurt in Collision.

Hibbing.—Six of the eighteen men who were riding on a handcar on the Missabe road, were seriously injured when the car was struck by a string of empties. The others jumped when they saw a collision was inevitable and escaped serious injury.

The men were graders who had been to town for supplies and were returning to their camp. About a mile out of Hibbing a locomotive pushing a string of empty cars dashed into the handcar wrecking it completely. The injured were taken to the Duluth hospital.

Victim of Gasoline Stove.

St. Paul.—Lying helpless on the floor where she had fallen in a frantic attempt to reach the door, Mrs. Ellen C. Reed, eighty years old, was burned to crisp, dying before her awful plight was discovered. A gasoline stove was responsible.

It will never be known just how the accident occurred. Mrs. Reed was preparing the noon day meal for her son, and it is thought a quantity of gasoline leaked from the stove and caught fire, the flames spreading to the thin summer dress worn by the aged woman.

To Build Both Ditches.

Tyler.—A final hearing on the Judicial ditch in Lyon and Lincoln counties has been held at Tyler with Judge Olson presiding. After all objections were heard and the motion from Thomas Davis for a jury trial on benefits and damages was overruled by the judge, the final order was issued for the establishment of both ditches. Further proceedings for construction of the ditches will be pushed with energy and perhaps water will flow in the new canals early this fall.

Child Burned to Death.

Richmond.—As the result of overturning a gasoline stove the three-year-old son of J. Haffner was so badly burned that death ensued some time later. During the temporary absence from the kitchen of the little one's mother the child accidentally pulled the stove over on top of him. The gasoline blazed up and the child's clothing caught fire and was entirely burned from his body.

Mail Plant Burns.

Mankato.—Fire damaged the plant of the Mankato Malting company to the extent of $20,000, including loss on building and stock. The insurance is $10,500. The fire started in the cupola ninety feet above the ground and worked down, but was confined to the shaft, which contained much machinery. One of the firemen was overcome by the smoke on the roof. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Fall From Buggy Kills.

Harris.—Julius Holm, thirty years of age, met with an accident which has resulted in his death. While out driving with some friends the buggy struck a hole and he started to jump out to prevent the vehicle from tipping, and in some way his foot caught, throwing him to the ground. He landed on his head and he lived but a few hours.

Plague of Gnats.

Lake Crystal. — Horsemen and chicken fanciers are at their wits' ends for a remedy for gnats that are killing horses, especially colts, and chickens. The insects bury themselves in the horses' and chickens' ears, which is the cause of the death of the animals.

NEWS NOTES.

Virginia.—Gus Johnson committed suicide in the railroad station at Iron Junction, in a dramatic and highly sensational manner. A number of persons were in the station awaiting the arrival of trains when Johnson suddenly bared his breast and plunged a long bladed knife into it. He was placed on a train and hurried to the hospital here.

Springfield. — Charles Merklngjer, an electrician, was scalded by steam from a broken pipe and is in a serious condition.

Belle Plaine.—His mind unbalanced by worry over the illness of his wife, Frank F. Rezek of this place committed suicide by shooting himself in the stomach with a shotgun.

Dawson.—A man named Acenberg, a trainman, was critically injured here by being run over by a train. His right leg and right arm were so badly injured that they had to be amputated at the Dawson hospital, where he was taken.

Judge Severances Dead.

Mankato.—Judge Martin J. Severance died after an operation for a goitre, from which he had been suffering several months.

He was born in Franklin county, Massachusetts, Dec. 24, 1826, moved to Henderson, Minn., and in the fall of 1856 was elected county attorney. He served two terms in the legislature as a representative of Sibley county in 1859-61. On Aug. 14, 1862, he enlisted as a private in company I, Tenth Minnesota infantry, serving as such until 1864, when commissioned captain.

After the war he resumed the practice of law at Le Sueur, but in 1880 moved to Mankato. The following year he moved to St. Paul and formed a law partnership with W. F. Wardon. The same year he was appointed by Governor Pillsbury judge of the sixth judicial district to succeed Judge Dickinson, who was appointed to the supreme bench. He was re-elected several times, serving until 1900. He was one of the most gifted orators in the state and a member of the Loyal legion.

He leaves a wife, one son and one daughter.

Bitten by a Rabid Cat.

LeSueur.—Miss Mary Holste, of this place, while alone in her yard, was attacked by a strange cat, which sprang at her, fastened its teeth in Miss Holste's left hand and held on desperately despite the most determined effort to break its hold.

The pain was very great but Miss Holste, instead of fainting, placed the cat on the ground and knelt on its neck till she had choked it to death, and then had the body to have it examined. It was found to have been undoubtedly mad and Miss Holste left for the Pasteur institute for treatment.

Grass Bug Harmless.

St. Paul.—According to Professor F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, the tarnished plant bug or "grass bug" has made its appearance in Minnesota wheat fields too late to do the growing crop any damage. The wheat plants nra now so far advanced that the bug, which sucks the juices of the stalks and leaves, cannot prevent them from maturing.

His Pants Exploded.

St. Paul.—Firecrackers, matches, potash and violent application of shoe leather, by his mother, caused serious injury to 7-year-old Henry Nichols. The boy had some left-over fireworks, which he carried in a trip pocket. When his mother spanked him there was an explosion. The boy was badly burned and the mother's hands were also burned.

NEWS NOTES.

Little Falls.—Eleanor Wieland, the eleven-year old daughter of Herman Wieland, a farmer residing east of this city, had a narrow escape from being gored to death by a bull.

Moorhead.—The bodies of Miss Olga Staake of this city and Vincent Vidger of Fargo, N. D., who were drowned in Lake Park, were found at the bottom of the lake in thirty feet of water.

Breckenridge.—The body of Ralph Njka, nineteen years old, who was drowned in the Red river about four miles east of here while in bathing with a brother, was recovered two miles below the point where he was drowned.

Minneapolis.—Growing despondent, after suffering for years from consumption and other illnesses, Jack Ryan, an ex-sailor, about 45 years of age, committed suicide by taking an overdose of morphine in his room at the Beaufort hotel.

St. Paul.—The board of game and fish commissioners has issued a new pamphlet containing the game laws of the state as amended by the last legislature. They may be had on application to the office of the board in the capitol.

Ulen.—Lightning struck the barn on the farm of T. N. Wiger, living north of here, killing seventeen horses and four cows. The barn was set on fire and totally destroyed with all its contents. The loss will reach $5,000, with only small insurance.

St. Peter.—Flood sufferers along the Minnesota river valley are to make an effort to recover from the state for the damage that has been done to their crops and lands during the extension of the county drainage systems between this city and Big Stone lake. It is held that, as the state has permitted the owners of highland farms to improve their property by draining sloughs and marshes it should be held responsible for the resultant losses along the bottoms, and so they will ask the next legislature to reimburse them.

Albany.—The five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Deimel of this place was accidentally shot in the forehead by his playmate, George Newirth. The young boys were playing with a 22-caliber revolver which they thought was not loaded. The bullet pierced the skull just above the right eye. The boy is in a serious condition.

St. Paul.—The district judges of the state met at St. Paul, as is their annual custom, at the state capital, and with an almost full attendance discussed matters of interest to the bench and bar at large.

Care of the Face

No woman who is genuinely fond of outdoor sports ever thinks now of giving them up for the sake of preserving her complexion. The day of the creamy-faced belle and protected from the ravages of the sun and wind has passed. To look pretty and do nothing, to be a slave to complexion shields and creams does not suit the energetic woman of to-day. She is independent and free of old-fashioned notions and she enjoys a life in the open that does her more good in the end than hours of coddling would.

The average woman has believed that if she played a game or exercised outdoors until she was in a glow and perspiration she should dab her face with cold water and dry it with a towel. In some instances she waited until she cooled off a bit before applying water and soap. Afterward she would bathe her face in cold water and, when she did understand the reason for the sunburn or prickly heat. Water is excellent for the skin, and despite what beauty specialists say it has never been made the official cause of a bad complexion. On the contrary, the woman who makes a point of using soap and water lavishly, though intelligently, always possesses a fine skin. Cosmetics and lotions alone will impair. It freshness which no amount of cold cream and lotion can replace. Soap and water is better to use warm or hot than cold, but it is necessary to follow it with a cold cream between these hours when the skin requires cleansing. Quantities of water are necessary to give the face a proper bath, and the first application should be made with a very soft complexion brush, well covered with lather from a good skin soap. Pour soap is responsible for many skin troubles and especially complexion ills. The next bath should be of clear water to free the pores of soap, and a third one of tepid or cold water will serve to tone up the skin and to make it react, especially if a soft Turkish towel is applied carefully to dry it.

A woman need not think she is being foolishly careful of her complexion if many uncomfortable and

The Summer Shoe

Women Should Remember That It Ought to Be Larger Than That for Winter.

Some women who ordinarily have no trouble with their feet suffer a great deal at this season of the year from chafing. While certain remedies, such as alum water, salt water or cut lemons, afford temporary relief, it is wiser to obviate the cause, which is due to the rubbing of shoes or stockings, sometimes both.

Black cotton hosiery is sometimes not comfortable, as the thread is rather tightly twisted, so that there is no "give," as in the cotton or silk. The stockings may give trouble if they are too large, as the wrinkles will chafe the feet.

However, the main source of trouble is apt to be the shoes; they may be small, and so draw, or the trouble may be with the leather. Chemicals are used to tan the leather, and sometimes these chemicals affect the feet, if they have not been properly eliminated and "worn out." Another common cause is tightness.

It is the weakness of many women to show a small foot with a close-fitting shoe. With this end in view many people have their shoes made really too tight. If the leather is stiff, the wearer will feel the pinch somewhere, and will probably not buy that size of shoes. If the leather is soft, however, no immediate pain is felt, and the boots are not thought of as tight.

It is especially important in summer that the foot shall have as much room as possible without slopping. Heat alone is apt to make the foot swell, and so it is wise to have shoes for the season half a size larger than those for winter wear.

In fitting a pair of shoes do not slip on the shoe and then hold it up to see if it fits. Stand up and rest the weight on the foot as in walking, and the foot assumes a different shape.

When there is a tenderness and swelling, bathe the feet in warm salt water—sea salt, if possible—and rub gently until they glow. In the morning repeat the bath and rubbing, then dust on to the feet some foot ease or foot powder. This will cure any soreness and tends to prevent its recurrence by hardening the cuticle.

Inexpensive Lace Blouses.

It may not be necessary to hint to the ingenious woman that quite inexpensive lace blouses can be made more modishly to connect with a cloth skirt, thereby achieving a complete suit, by making a design of narrow stitched cloth bands and arranging them tastefully on the bodice? But a suggestion offers endless chance for original ornamentation. The girdle should be of cloth, too, and the bands arranged with extreme smartness, perhaps extending up from the girdle to the bust and there forming circular lines with pointed ends punched with tiny buttons. Small cloth buttons could be used to dot the lace, and a pair of tiny bands of cloth could tip the choker.

To Finish Girdles.

It is the fad to finish off girdles with a row of prim little bows, some times with jeweled buckles and buttons in the middle; with triangular loops, executed in the same fashion, and with twisted ribbons in the shape of buckles decorated with little bows. Large, flat rosettes, soft knots and various lengths of sash ends all contribute to the finish of the ever present girdle.

Idea Is Good One

Last Summer's Mode, That Is Really Smart, Has Retained Popularity for This Season.

A mode launched last summer and much liked then, though it did not become popular enough to get common, was the wearing of a check skirt in white and black or white color. One of the smartest of these early models has a circular skirt of fine white mohair barred off in half-inch checks by fine lines of black.

The jacket is a loose, vague little affair of heavy, soft cloth, black cloth for the skirt, with open sleeves and rounded stockinette fronts. Under these rounded fronts hangs a loose stockinette arrangement of finest handkerchief linen, heavily and exquisitely embroidered by hand—the whole yielding an excellent imitation of antique embroidery and matching the creamery tone of the skirt.

This embroidered piece is loose from the outer silk and the embroidered border shows all around the edges of the silk fronts. A puff sleeve and embroidered cuff of the linen appear under the open sleeve of silk.

Workbags of Ribbon.

To make those captivating 1830 workbags, fill them with ribbons from the wrists of every up-to-date maiden who goes to the club pizzas to work away her time and dallies with some little embroidery or lace-joining; some very lovely, wide china silks and fine satin ribbons can be bought for $3.65 per yard; the exquisitely shaded floral designs irresistibly caught for loose sash ribbons can be bought at either edge in some pale tint, the actual width of the ribbon 11 inches.—Vogue.

Princess Pinafore

This pretty pinafore is in the Princess style. The front is straight, fitting without fullness; the back is also straight, but is drawn in at the waistline by a sash of the material, coming from the side seams. The pinafore is suitable to be made in most kinds of muslins, lawn, seersuv, or diaper. Two small pockets trimmed with lace are placed each side the front; the neck and armholes are also edged with lace. Material required, 3¾ yards 36 inches wide.

TWO SICILY SPOUTERS.

ETNA'S ACTIVITY NOT EXPECTED TO CONTINUE LONG.

Stromboli in Stats of Mors or Less Continuous Eruption, as It Has Been from Time Immemorial.

Rome.—Prof. Ricco, director of the Catania observatory, furnishes the following information about the recent eruptive activity of the two volcanoes Etna and Stromboli.

After the great eruption of 1886 Etna was silent up to 1892. It is true that in 1891 the volcano emitted a dense volume of smoke followed by a downfall of ashes, but this was due to a landslide extending over 400 meters on the northwest edge of the central crater.

In 1892 Etna became active, smoke and ashes were emitted and in the bottom of the crater a portion of the mountain collapsed, with the result that acerise, lapilli and stones were thrown to a great height, but fell back into the crater, thus producing what is generally known as an intercrateruus eruption. Meanwhile several shocks of earthquake were felt intermittently until seorina again began to be erupted in considerable quantities. The eruption lasted for over six months, and was continued in the year following, but on the whole the lava emitted did not produce any damage, as it fell back inside the crater.

The recent eruption is characterized by the absence of lava, as well as by its intermittent nature, and it is not likely to continue and much less to increase. Very probably it will be limited to partial and small eruptions like those of the afternoon of the appearance of fumaroles.

As regards Stromboli, Prof. Ricco's report is more detailed.

Stromboli is on an island belonging to a group of seven volcanic islands to the north of Sicily, facing the continent. This island is about three miles in length and two miles broad, and its highest altitude, a peak which is probably the crater of an old volcano, is about 1,900 feet.

The active crater of the volcano is about 450 feet below the highest peak, and it is surrounded to the south and east by a high ledge of rock which in case of eruption protects the inhabited part of the island, the two large masses of agglomerated lava from former eruptions on each side of the crater slope down to the sea, and in case of eruption lead the lava torrent to the sea, preventing it from spreading over the island.

These natural protections render the island habitable and almost immune from the effects of eruptions. The soil is purely volcanic and composed of basalt, lava, scoriae, lapilli and ashes. The island is very fertile and covered with vegetation, notwithstanding the scarcity of water. The vapors emitted from the volcano are naturally condensed and converted into water which runs into a spring known as the Schicciola.

Stromboli is in continual activity and has been so from time immemorial, so much so that to the ancients this volcano served the purpose of a natural lighthouse in the navigation between Sicily and Magna Grecia and the Campania. During the middle ages the island was used as a penal settlement where convicts were sent instead of being executed.

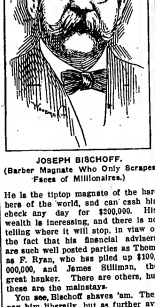
The volcano has been studied diligently since 1889 and a record has been kept of the different phases of its activity. Generally eruptions happen in the following manner:



The volcano begins to show its activity by loud detonations and explosions. Subsequently a sound like that of steam escaping from a boiler is heard and the crater is covered with smoke. Lately the explosions accompanying eruptions have been very intense, and resemble the firing of heavy artillery.

Although the volcano is continually active it has periods of repose and the longer these are the more intense is the activity that follows them; still the eruptions have been called paroxysms of harmless anger. More dangerous than the eruptions are the earthquakes, but theso, fortunately, are very rare.

MAGNATE BARBER STILL SHAVES.

Joseph Bischoff Can Cash Check for $200,000.

New York.—The John D. of barberdom is Joseph Bischoff, 82 Wall street.

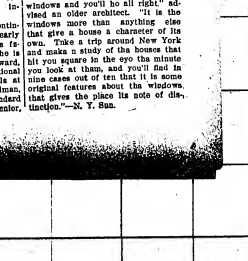
JOSEPH BISCHOFF.
(Barber Magnate Who Only Scrapes Faces of Millionaires.)

He is the tiptop magnate of the barbers of the world, and can cash his check any day for $200,000. His wealth is tremendous, and there is no telling where it will stop, in view of the fact that his financial advisers are such well posted parties as Thomas F. Ryan, who has piled up $100,000,000, and James Stillman, the great banker. There are others, but these are the mainstays.

You see, Bischoff shaves 'em. They pay him liberally, but as further evidence of their appreciation of his skillful services they take him about occasionally on Jaunts on the orehord, where the money tree grows. They let him carry a basket, while, in and their shears, they are accompanied by four-horse trucks.

Bischof became a barber in war times, and in 1873 he hranched out as the proprietor of a shop in Wall street. Friendly tips on the market given him by financiers set him going on a very comfortable tide of prosperity, and in time he acquired several tanement houses. In these latter years, acting under the advice of such millionaires of the saw school, he has sold the houses and gone in for real capitalism. His speculates not at all, but is an investor.

Despite his wealth, Bischoff continues at work. He has a set of early morning visits to attend to his favored cstomers. At 6:45 a. m. he is at the home of James T. Woodward, president of the Hanover National bank. Half an hour later he is at the dressing room of James Stillman, one of the big men of the Standard Oil company. After Stillman, senior, his son passes under the razor. At 9:30 o'clock, always on the dot, Bischoff reaches the home of Thomas F. Ryan. Then three sons of the latter receive his attention in their Wall street office. After that Bischoff is in on deck in his shop, where millionaires come in all day.



Bischoff says of his early morning customers that all lean toward a high good humor, and appear to be bright and eager for the day's work. He also observes that it seems to be characteristic of the big fellows that they have tough, wiry hair. His did not say bristles.

GOV. CARTER TO QUIT.

Chief-Executive of Hawaii Will Not Serve Another Term.

Washington. — George R. Carter, governor of Hawaii, will not serve another term after the present one, which expires on the 22d of November, it completed. The governor recently made known his position in respect to the matter to the president, who wished him to continue in office. The president has appointed W. F. Frear, chief justice of the territory, to the office.

The governor said that affairs were moving along very nicely in the islands, and that while there is no great prosperity there is no depression.

The Architect's Tip.

A young architect was puzzling over the plans of a building which he wished to make of distinctive appearance. "Just do something to the windows and you'll ho all right," advised an older architect. "It is the windows more than anything else that give a house a character of its own. Take a trip around New York and make a study of the bouses that hit you square in the eye tha minute you look at them, and you'll find in nine cases out of ten that it is some original features about the windows, that gives the place its note of distinction."—N. Japan thinks the balance of the United States, except California are pretty good people, but they would undoubtedly like to give them a trimming but before they go to far they had better look up article 111 of the confederation of states, and there they will discover that the people on the western coast have pretty fair backing.

The U.S. government has commence bloody war against the tobacco trust. Hurrah! Hurrah! Glory be! We can put up with the sugar trust, the meat trust, the lumber trust, oil trust, coal trust, and a few other cotopi trust, and a few other cotopi handling non essentials, but bla med if we can stand to have a bunch of side-whiskered plutocrats monkey with our "chewin terbacker."—Crookston Journal.

Some of the crooked reolution signers that got fired out of the Red Lake River Transportation Company, for shady transactions have been busy lately circulating fals reports in Thief River Falls and elsewhere to injure the company to gratify their malice and spite, because they got fired out of holding any position of trust in it. The more they talk the more honorable men become convinced that the Board of Directors did just the proper caper when they fired them bodily. When you hear a man talking that the Red Lake River Transportation Co. are not O.K. call him out to one side and tell him if he is not one of them fellows that got put out of the company for doing crooked work.

A prominent politician from Deer Park township remarked on a visit here, Wednesday. "That he did not see why Thief River Falls was so anxious to get the question of county seat removed before the voters, as he was firmly convinced that with a six weeks campaign they could only secure a bare majority if they did that, and would come far short of the 60 per cent required to move the county seat".

Of course we don't claim to know much about it but we admit the opinion that it will be about an even scrap if the matter should come to a vote, with both towns alive to the fact that it was a life and death struggle between them

An Event.

"What's the matter? You look as if something extraordinary had happened."

"Something extraordinary has happened. Do you see that street sweeper—the fellow who is stirring things up?"

"Yes. What about him?"

"When he saw me coming a moment ago he stopped and didn't try to choke me with dust and gurma."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Of Course He Did.

"If I were nominated for the presidency of the United States," said Mr. Slimpack, "I would"—

"You nominated for president of the United States!" his wife interrupted. "What are you thinking of? You mean if we were nominated, don't you?"

Then he wisely changed the subject. —Chicago Record-Herald.

Insecure Umbrellas.

We English, of course, get what we call hardened to horrible climatic changes. Nevertheless I am convinced that our solemnity of demeanor is guaranteed by our grey skies, our piercing east winds, our heavy, yellow fogs and our slushy roads and pavements. The waterproof face is the direct result of a firmament of lead. Many of us English people look like macintosh umbrellas.—London Queen.

Clearwater Specials.

Now it is wet and muddy again.

Miss Ida Lillo took her sister Elvira down to Red Lake Falls on Sunday where Elvira will go to summer school.

Martin Hyland and his daughter Martha was down to Gully for a few days visiting with their friends, and returned home again Sunday.

Mrs. A. W. Brekke visited with Mrs. A. Rolandson on Monday.

Mrs. R. Fore visited with Mrs. I. Lillo on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Burmand and family visited with the family of John Hanson on Sunday.

Mr. Julius Brekke who has been visiting with his friends and uncle left for his home in Nilsville on Monday.

Tilda Biendal returned home from Osmund Mandis place on Monday where she has stayed for a few days.

Mr. Andrew Rolandson and Con Short was down to Plummer Saturday with 42 tubs of choice butter for shipment.

The Clearwater Ladies aid society will meet with Mrs. John Hanson the last Wednesday in July, come early and bring your thimbles along.

Now comes the good old haying time and we think the farm will be better prepared for next winter.

Mr. Ottos came home on Sunday from the woods and is now going to start haying on his farm in Town of Deer Park.

Mr. Herman Lillo and his brother Oscar went down to Crookston on Monday where Oscar is going to prove up on his claim.

Shadow Etiquette.

"I spilled the Kaffir chief respectfully and hearty," said the sailor. "Can you imagine my surprise when he give me a kick?

"'Get off my shadder,' he says.

"'Wot?'

"'Get off my shadder.'

"I was standing, by crimus, on his shadder, the shadder at his command, I skipped from there to the face. He groaned. When I got on to sault ground again he says to me:

"'Didn't you never have no bringin up? Look at you now, lengthenin' out your shadow longer'n mine. Cruel, unmanly you, or I'll warm your hide with this here club.'"

The sailor gave a loud laugh and emptied his glass of milk.

"Them Kaffirs," he said, "regards their shadders as part of themselves. A polite Kaffir would no more walk on another's shadder than a polite American would hit a lady. They have a regular code of etiquette. You mustn't an no account tot your shadder to longer than a shade. You must keep your shadder to make it smaller, and that there crouch for the purpose of diminishin' the shadder is thought by the perfect philosophers—I don't say I think so, mind—to be the origin of the bow."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Much Law, Poor Case.

Among lawyers there is a saying that in the trial of a case an attorney if light on facts must be heavy on law The other day an attorney was preparing to begin his office in one of the big office buildings to go to the courthouse to try a case. From the shelves of his library he had taken many large law books containing decisions and opinions of higher courts. At intervals a boy went in and out of the door, and each time he bore in his arms a stack of the books which he carried to"undercread wagon that stood in the street below. The attorney was to use the books in the courtroom. Another lawyer, who is of southern birth and who always addresses his friends with some fancy title, watched the boy as he went in and out carrying the law books. Then he drew his hands deep into his trousers pockets and said to the lawyer:

"Well, Ab'l sweah, kunnel, you must have no case at all."—Kansas City Times.

Nobody Was There.

To take the census of the British empire is a matter of difficulty in certain districts. A native official was ordered to take a census of what was known to be a populous village in Uganda. He returned with the report that there was no population, the explanation being that the inhabitants had fled on hearing of his approach. Most precise instructions were given to him, and he paid another visit to the village. The result of his inquiry was given thus in the tabulated form: Number of huts, 257; inhabitants, men over eighteen years of age, 0; men under eighteen years of age, 0; women, 0; children, 0; total, 0.

Rare Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the burial place of the celebrated playwright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have originated with Jack Young (afterward knighted), who, walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow 13 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer in his "Phrase and Fable" says Shakespeare called Jonson "Rare Ben," but does not say where. According to Chambers' "Book of Days," the phrase formed the concluding words of the verse written and displayed in the clubroom at Sam's clique at the famous Mermaid tavern. The epitaph "Rare Ben Jonson" is said to have been first uttered after the appearance of his highly successful farce "Bartholomew Fair." The epitaph has been copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on the covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Deception of Wild Birds.

Falcons—hawks, the largest species—can compress their features and look so very like if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can hump into any position they think most suitable. It is useless to look for these self-preserving traits in any of the family kept in zoological collections, for the birds are so confounded to see large numbers of people gathered before a cage or standing in front of them that they lose the "cute" matter and assume a look of the most perfect indifference. They keep this up for a certain time their food will be brought to them and they will then otherwise perfectly safe. The owls in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage, like the bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is not so often seen when in captivity.

A Train For Tyler.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency of the presidential office he arranged to make an excursion in some direction and sent his son Bob to arrange for a special train. It happened that the railroad superintendent was a strong Whig. As soon as he had no favors to bestow on the president and informed Bob that his road did not carry any special trains for the president "What's said Bob. "Did you not run a special train for the funeral of President Harrison?" "Yes," said the superintendent, "and if you'll bring your father in that coffin on a pass I shall have the best train on the road."

A Canton Clock.

The famous cloisonne or watch clock of Canton is housed in a temple on the city walls. Three big sections, on successive shelves and a fourth and lowest one with a wooden canopy over all, form the whole clockwork. The water descends by slow drops from one jar to another, the lowest jar floating in the last jar telling the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 5 o'clock since 1321 A. D. the lowest jar has been emptied, the upper one filled and the clock thus wound up for another day.

The First Milk Dressmaker.

As far back as 1730 there was in Paris a man dressmaker, probably the first of his kind. His success was due to his genius for concealing and removing defects of figure. He wore a beautiful carriage on the shoulder and had an estrichbon in the shape of a pair of corsets and an open pair of scissors hung on the panel of each door. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Doctors and Solemnity.

The days are past when a very self respecting doctor was expected to dress in a style tastefully blending the garb of the undertaker. But a—was—lished and impenetrable solemnity" is still a priceless possession for those who would achieve success in medicine. If this is a natural gift, so much the better; if not, it should be acquired at any cost.—British Medical Journal.

Chinese Gamblers Penance.

A Chinese cook named Chin Kan had been engaged by a wealthy Chinese in Hong Kong to cook for him. Ah the money he cannot had been lost in gambling. On one occasion his master paid him some money for the provisions he was to buy. The cook lost all the money at one stake. Finding that his debts were accumulating day by day, on the twenty fourth day he went into the kitchen and chopped off the forefinger of his left hand as a self punishment and warning in order to relinquish this evil habit of gambling in the future. He bandaged the wound through the pain, but was brought round again in a few minutes.—Singapore Times.

Pet Boars.

The nicest pet the French forest affords is the marcassin, or baby wild boar. It is almost human in its clever doings, delights in funny pranks, has an evident sense of humor, makes friends with children and dogs and even lends itself to mimic hunts, playing the part of the hunted animal in the antics are performed on all fours. The only creature to which the marcassin objects is its distant relative, the pig. Directly it sees a animal it backs is up and its growing tusk is bared. In babyhood it has a lovely coat of very dark brown and tan. When the silky hair is shed and bristles take its place the temper grows coarser. If married and personal cares come on, the wild boar puts away its childish ways and wants to take a family to the forest to feed there on acorns and beech mast. Woe to the hound or, to the keeper who attempts to keep him back. In the forest the paterfamilias may be called the first line of defense, the sow the second, and the little coal gambol round her.—Paris Cor. London Truth.

It's Results That Count.

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, she really also wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, blessing color. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Children Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where girl babies are drowned like the superfluous kittens and others in which it is not uncommon for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution. On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devoted lives of children men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Bachelors and virgins have been the saints of the world, and the children are the philanthropists, the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the great writers, leaders and thinkers of the race. Plato, Joan of Arc, Savonarola, George Washington, David Hume, Locke, Spinoza, Thomas Carlyle, Florence Nightingale, Ruskin and Herbert Spencer are only a few of the great names in this class. An interesting volume could be written on the indebtedness of the world to childless men and women.—New York Medical Journal.

The logs are running pretty thick in the river this week, but maybe a boom has broken up near the outlet.

Walt McAndress returned home from Thief River Falls on the new boat Wednesday, A. Eve driving his team home.

Haying will be on top next week, and we hope to see a little more favorable weather than we have been having lately.

Nels Olson who has been doing carpenter work for Walt McAndress sprained his ankle so bad on Sunday last that he is laid up for repairs.

We have five acres of breaking that we desire to let out to be broken the first of next month. The land is well cleared of brush and other obstructions.

The farmers new boat will take an excursion party out of Thief River Falls next Sunday, just to give the people down there an opportunity to see a good boat run on the river.

The New steam float manufactured for the Red Lake River Transportation Company, made its first trip down the river on Monday last, returning on Wednesday. The new boat seems to be O.K. and is a credit to the company that got it built.

There is some talk of giving a new name to our first steam boat. It was the intention to give it the name of Duchamp, as an honor to that gentlemen, but later developement have proven that he has not honored the company and they now decline to honor him.

Now that we have a sure way to get to town rain or shine, by boat, why not get up a big excursion to go down to Thief River Falls to the fair next month? If we could arrange it so as to get the new boat to go down Wednesday August 7th and return Thursday evening August 8th, there would be a large number up this way that would go down to the fair that would not go otherwise. A farmer certainly gains lots of information by attending a county fair, and as they are going to have an up to date fair at Thief River Falls August 7, 8, and the 9th those who do not feel able to attend the state fair in September should at least attend their own county fair.

Ray Arndt has gone up to Coleria Minn. to work in the mines this summer.

There is some talk of getting Miss Kuehnel to break the bottle to name the new farmers boat.

Mrs. A. Eve and sons have picked and canned 50 quarts of said strawberries this year. Who says this is not a fruit country.

Andy Erickson of Thief River Falls made the farmers a present of a fine new flag for their new boat, so when you see "Old Glory" proudly waving over the new boat think of Andy.

We have some choice farms for sale in Highlanding which we are offering at bed rock prices at present, but realestate is going to go up as soon as the outside world catches onto the fact, that this is a famous steel wheat country.

That Monopoly.

A. D. Brown of Little Oak has entered a complaint with the secretary of state about a steam boat monopoly up here that would make a person aquainted with the true situation, smile. He calls the Red Lake River Transportation Company a monopoly and secretary of state Schmahll will investigate. We hope he will, and when he does he will find the company is composed of far mers living along the river that have been putting in from 10 to 20 dollars apeace to baild boats to get their freight up the river. The board of directors and the Board of managers of the Company are all farmers, (we mean actual farmers, not state experimental farm farmers) that are making their living on their farms. Now if Mr. Brown or secretary of state Schmall want to get into the monopoly they have just as good a chance as the rest of the people living along the river, they can buy a share in the company for $10 and have as much to say about the boats as any other member of the company. The complaint that the boats can not take freight out from Thief River Falls is true, but it can not be helped as there is not boats enough to take it out. If Mr. Brown wants to build a boat to take freight up the river he can do so the same as the rest of the farmers are doing. He is about the only farmer, or business man from Little Oak to Thief River Falls that has not put money into the enterprise to get a line of boats running on the river, and if Mr. Schmall, or him can show The Red Lake River Transportation Company any law whereby they have got to haul freight up the river for Mr. Brown for 25 cts. a hundred when they can get 50 cts., we suppose they will have to do it, or if they have to take him up as a passenger for 25 cts. and charge his neighbor $1.00 they will do that.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of lead sulphate added. THE OFFENDING HAND

By Annie Hamilton Donnell

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Jeffy felt better about that hand when he kept it in his pocket. He couldn't see how black it was—it had looked very black when he shut it up there, two hours ago. He remembered it now with a little shudder. That nursery soap and water a little tempered with heat might possibly have made it look less guilty had not experience to him—did not occur to him now.

Of course nobody had seen when he slid his white nightgown over his little trousers and waist. How close could he keep his hand—that hand—in his pocket, he meant to, all night? Jeffy felt better about it there. In a sense it was in prison, where that hand—that—that—you know—ought to be incarcerated for their sins. In a sense he seemed to be making reparation. Not exactly to Elizabeth—noo, but still—Jeffy twisted about under his little white covers miserably. That hand hurt him—may be because it was cramped and stiff, maybe not. Maybe because—that. Jeffy wondered if Elizabeth ached there.

Of course, Elizabeth was to blame—still, she was very little. All at once, Jeffy lifted in the dark, Jeffy remembered how very little Elizabeth was. Her head just came to the edge of the dining-room table; you're pretty little when you have to stretch up on tiptoe to see what there is going to be for dinner. Perhaps when you were as little as that you'd have meddled with your big brother's things—you might have.

Elizabeth was very little and Jeffy was a big brother. Jeffy was a big man. He had always rather domineered over Elizabeth, but he had never done—that, before. Oh, no, no, I tell you! Never!

"Does it show, I wonder?" The little boy in bed thought, among the other thoughts.

"I'm going in and see," he said with a little premonitory shiver of dread.

Elizabeth, because she was so very little, slept beside mother's bed in her dainty white crib. Jeffy could see the whiteness of it shining faintly through the dark. He crept toward it very quietly. On the edge of it nestled Elizabeth snugly, just her small, serene face in its restful radiance. Jeffy could see it distinctly.

She was lying on that cheek. He could not see it at all. The other cheek was fair and sweet, with a dimple in as though a dream-angel had been there and kissed it a minute ago and that were the print of the kiss. The "big brother" stood looking at it with a strange impression that Elizabeth was turning the other cheek also. He flushed all over his little guilty face.

Somewhere downstairs a step sounded and disturbed Elizabeth in her sleep. She threw up both small hands, then with a restless little heaving of round body and white covers, turned over on her pillows.

"It shows!" gasped Jeffy, and fled back to his own room to horror. He had seen little parallel red creases in Elizabeth's other cheek. He didn't for a moment doubt their origin.

"It shows!—it shows!" he groaned in the awful loneliness of night. Perched on the side of his bed with his little lean hare legs a-dangle, he thought about what the Dibla said—Jeff's thoughts did not quote verbatim:

"If thy right hand striketh thy sister, cut it off an' cast it into Hell Fire," he repeated under his breath. "an' there shall be gnashing—an' there shall be gnashing."

He shuddered. The precise signification of gnashing puzzled him a little, but it meant something awful—awful! An' cut it off mesself—oh, oh!

"Er—r!" softly shuddered Jeffy, thinking how hot hell fire must be. You were to cast it into hell Fire, where there would be gnashing—if it ever struckest thy sister. The Bible said you were. And it had struck her, it had struck Elizabeth.

The darkness seemed to grow darker, the stillness stiller in Jeffy's room. The little figure on the bedside swayed unsteadily—swayed again—fell backward on the bed. Jeffy was very tired. It tires you to—to—what does it tire you to do? Yes—oh, yes, that. An' it makes you tender still to—to—feel—sorry—so awful sor—

Some one seemed to be speaking in the room, but there was no one there. Jeffy could see, for it had grown light, as if many lamps had been lighted. Or else it was one great lamp, the sun. Could it be morning? The voice called out and now it seemed to be his own voice calling to him.

"Come, Jeffy, time to go," it said, brusquely. "The sooner you get it over with the better. I suppose you know that?"

"Yes," shivered Jeffy, answering himself, "I've got some o' my clothes all on. I'll be ready in a minute."

"Well, be sure you are. You're going to the One With Spectacles, I suppose?"

"Yes, to the One With Spectacles. He was the kindest one. When Elizabeth had the croup he came and when mother was sick. He was the one," that always smiled. But how—of course now he wouldn't smile."

It was too early for office hours, but the One With Spectacles was at home. He put out his hand to Jeffy and smiled—but that was before he knew.

"Why, Jeffy, this you?" he said. "What can I do for, you?"

Jeffy stretched out his right hand and shut his eyes.

"Cut it off an' cast it into Hell Fire," he said rapidly. "It would be over soon if you kept your eyes shut an' never budged."

The One With Spectacles started a very little, but recovered himself the next instant. He proceeded to examine the small hand gravely.

"It does look pretty black," he said to a professional tone. "Been offending long you, has it?"

"Oh, no, Elizabeth—please hurry! I'd rather you'd do it f-fast," trembled the little voice.

"You are sure you want it done? Better think twice. You won't be able to put your meat, you know."

Jeffy knew.

"Or write in your copy book—or play ball—"

Or play ball—oh! But the small right hand did not waver.

"I know," Jeffy said.

"It'll be pretty hard to button your buttons, of course—"

"Of course."

"And it takes two hands to writhtie. Still, if you say so—"

Jeffy nodded. Something was the matter with his voice; it would not go.

"Well, then, steady! It's going to hurt, of course—now then!"

The hurt of it woke Jeffy. Something awful seemed to have happened and it required a little time to realize what it was. Then he remembered. His hand—oh, how it hurt! He shuddered as he drew it painfully out of its cramped prison, and it made him rather faint to look at it—

"Why?" Jeffy suddenly found in his relief. Why, the little calloused brown right hand was there! It felt numb in some parts and throbbed in others, but there it was! Not cut off—not cast out. You could pinch it and wriggle the fingers—you could cut meat with it, whittle with it, button buttons—anything! The One With Spectacles was only a dreadful dream.

In mother's room next door, Elizabeth was sleeping to herself. Her little, thin, clear voice piped up presently. Elizabeth sounded happy. Jeffy sat up on the bed—he had slept all night outside the covers, slanting across them—and listened eagerly. Then if Elizabeth was happy, she—she wasn't unhappy. She hadn't laid anything up. Perhaps if he were to go in there now and say:

"So's Me," Elizabeth Smiled.

"Elizabeth, I'm sorry—I'm sorry—I'm sorry, Elizabeth!" he cried. The gay little song ended suddenly and the gay little singer whirled about.

"So's me," Elizabeth smiled.

Which Way

This story is told of a major who was in command of troops who were in pursuit of some outlaws. In the chase he arrived at a village to discover that he was too late to intercept them, and finally ordered the horses unsaddled and fed.

Now the major's hostler was a son of Ireland, ignorant of everything pertaining to the equestrian art, and, coming in from the village in a state bordering on intoxication, he put the major's saddle on a horse facing to the rear. When the horses were brought up for a fresh start the major, instantly discovering the mistake, demanded the reason for it.

"An' sure," said Pat, a little terrified—"an' shure, major, an' I didn't know which way you was going!"

An explosion followed—the major was satisfied—and Pat escaped punishment.—Harper's Weekly.

SAVED FROM DREAD FATE.

Kind Woman's Assistance Meant Much to This Tramp.

A certain lady, noted for her kind heart and open hand, was approached not long ago by a man who, with tragic air, began:

"A man, madam, is often forced by the whip of hunger to many things from which his very soul shrinks—and so it is with me at this time. Unless, madam, in the name of pity, you give me assistance, I will be compelled to do something which I never before have done, which I would greatly dislike to do."

Much impressed, the lady made haste to place in his hand a five-dollar bill. As the man pocketed it with profuse thanks, she inquired:

"And what is the dreadful thing I have kept you from doing, my poor man?"

"Work," was the brief and mournful reply.—Harper's Weekly.

WESTERN MEN IN NEW YORK.

Brains of Mountain and Prairie in Demand in the Financial Center.

Ever since the early days, when D. O. Mills, J. B. Haggin and James B. Keene "emigrated" from California to New York, the metropolis has been drawing largely on the west and south for its supply of "men who do things." Theodore P. Shonts, both a southerner and westerner, who was undertaken to solve New York's great transit problem, is the latest importation in response to the call of the east.

The promptness with which Thos. F. Ryan, of Virginia, turned the Equitable Life Assurance Society over to its policyholders, as the elect of a majority of its Board of Directors, and divested himself of the control of the stock which he bought from Jas. H. Hyde, and the success of the new management of the Society under the direction of President Paul Morton, have created a demand for the strong men of the south and west that is greater then ever before. Under the Morton regime the Equitable seems to made a better showing than any other insurance company in the country in spite of the increasing economies and increased returns to policyholders.

E. H. Gery, head of the great corporation in the world—the U. S. Steel Co.—John W. Gates, Henry C. Frick, Norman B. Ream, Wm. H. Moore and Daniel G. Reid are other westerners who are among the biggest men in New York.

MAN AND HIS WAYS.

Farm's Brain Has Evolved a New Style of Cradle.

A new cradle has been invented—and by a man. Which latter statement is a dedundency—for no up-to-date woman would credit or think of inventing anything so pernicious to her infant's welfare. Has she not become enlightened to the dreadful life of that time-honored institution of our ancestors? Dare she imperil the intellect that is to wrest the twentieth century by untimely "jugglings" in its embryo stage? Four nodders ahas! When colic's gripes assail, it may not know the luxury of a steady tramp swung across fields of waving dew—strange to say, man do not jeer at this dictum of the new motherhood—much less will its experience-wise bliss of being lulled to rest in a wooden-slatted cradle or fluffy bassinet, swayed by the foot of a mistress being who swings and crones, swings and crones, till baby woes are merged in blessed silence. Your nodder claims that sideways rocking is, indeed, injurious to babykins, but to his eyek, not to his brain. Therefore he has constructed a cradle that swings lengthwise, and is shaped like a boat!

Perhaps He Was the One to Blame.

Hicks—He first met his wife when he was a camping trip down in the Maine woods, but their marriage isn't happy.

Wicks—Ah, I see. He mistook her for a bear.

A SMALL SECRET.

Couldn't Understand the Taste of His Customers.

Two men were discussing the various food products now being supplied in such variety and abundance.

One, a grocer, said, "I frequently try a package or so of any certain article before offering it to my trade, and in that way sometimes form a different idea than my customers have.

"For instance, I thought I would try some Postum Food Coffee, to see what reason there was for such a call for it. At breakfast I didn't like it and disapproved the same, so I naturally concluded that my taste was different from that of the customers who bought it right along.

"A day or two after, I waited on a lady who was buying a 25c package and told her I couldn't understand how one could fancy the taste of Postum.

"I found out what is the matter,' she said, 'you put the coffee boiler on the stove for just fifteen minutes, and ten minutes of that time it simmered, and perhaps five minutes it boiled; now if you will have it right, you must fifteen minutes after it commences to boil, you will find a delicious Java-like beverage, rich in food value of gluten and phosphates, so choice that you will never abandon it, particularly when you see the great gain in health.'

Well, I took another trial and sure enough I joined the Postum army for good, and life seems worth living since I have gotten rid of my old time stomach and kidney troubles."

Postum is no sort of medicine, but pure liquid food, and this, together with a relief from coffee worked the change. "There's a Reason."

POULTRY AND BEES

IDEAL POULTRY HOUSE.

Convenient Arrangement for the Accommodation of a Flock.

Several houses have been built in this vicinity the past year after the plan given in the cut, written a Michigan farmor to the Farm and Home. It is an ideal arrangement for keeping small flocks for breeding purposes. The sills are poles 15 feet long and four inches in diameter at the top end.

Framework of Small House and Run.

Fasten cross sills on with one-half inch bolts, two at each corner. The house part is 4½ feet high at the rear, six feet six inches in front and six feet wide. Cross sills are 2x4, the braces 2x4 and the uprights and other timber 2x2. The yard is covered with wooden mesh wire netting and the sides and roof of house with inch boards and roofing paper. There is a window in front and n door at the side. The house and yard can be easily moved to new land once or twice a week.

BEST POULTRY AND EGGS.

The Consumer Is Coming to Realize That They Are the Cheapest.

Consumers of dressed poultry are gradually realizing that the best table poultry and eggs are the cheapest for them to buy; that the edible portion of a nicely fattened, well dressed fowl is nearly twice that of a thin one of the same size—sufficient to more than offset the difference in price. The quality and flavor of the meat of the well fleshed and fattened bird is also superior to that of the poorer fowl, though it necessitated but little difference in the labor required to market the two kinds.

It happens, too, that the old claim that "an egg is an egg" has almost ceased to be of existence. Whatever may be said regarding the color of the shell as an indication of its contents, it is certain that it does signify good size and of uniform shape—and color also —is a better purchase than a dozen of assorted shapes and sizes at the same price. And it is the nice, clean, fresh looking eggs heaped up in a basket that always attracts the purchaser's eye and leads him back again to the same place when more of this staple is wanted.

As the poorest become better acquainted with this matter, says Nor'-Western Agriculturist, they will insist upon having the best quality, and the dealers will be glad to pay the producers better prices and buy more stock. As there is more profit in this better quality, it will be certain to receive his full share of the benefit.

RAISING TURKEYS.

How One Successful Poultryman Handles His Flock.

In regard to raising turkeys, will say that I feed them stale bread and milk, not sloppy, and corn meal wet with milk, so it will stick together. Once a day, a few days old we let them run in the lucern to get bugs and grasshoppers, but do not let them stay out long at a time, as the little ones get thirsty. When they come in we have plenty of feed and water for them, says a writer in Rocky Mountain Farming. After they get a few weeks old we feed them cracked corn and wheat, and as soon as the grain is cut we never feed them until the stubble is cleaned up. We drive them out twice a day and let them fill up and the more grasshoppers they can get the better. They will soon get strong enough to hunt fall. I think they are the finest thing there is for turkeys. But above all, we must give the good care and not let the chickens reb them of their feed. Another thing that is good for them is to cut their toe nails even with a pair of shears and feed it to them; they will eat lots of it. This is as near as I can tell you how we handled our turkeys last year.

HENOLOGY.

The brooder must be carefully ventilated or the chicks will have fresh air, but will not have to be exposed to drafts.

Give the fowls the run of the orchard; both will be benefited thereby.

A Leghorn hen will lay as long as she eats.

Feed less, and she will pay as long as she eats.

The handling of an incubator is not a difficult matter, but one cannot do it by instinct. The directions that go with each incubator should be carefully followed.

Chickens usually sell for more per pound than hogs, and it is an established fact that a pound of chicken meat is made at a lower cost than a pound of pork.

Don't forget that chicks—though small—require certain amount of grit. A run in clean, dry sand for a few days has been found beneficial before first feeding.

The first essential in the production of eggs is the health of the hens. You can never have a flock of record-breaking egg-producers if any of them are unhealthy.

BUILD RIGHT WHEN BUILDING.

The Well-Constructed Poultry House is the One You Must Enjoy.

It costs little more to build a poultry house right than it does to build it in such a slipshod way that it will be forever afterwards unsatisfactory. Some of our more progressive poultry men have taken great pains in the construction of their poultry houses and are now in possession of poultry establishments that are a credit to themselves and an improvement to the farms on which they exist. We have before us at the present moment a picture of the poultry house owned by one of our prosperous farmers, says Farmers' Review.

The poultry house in question is of one story and built with an ordinary roof. This gives the best effect artistically. The windows on the south side are about five feet from top to bottom and they reach down nearly to the level of the floor. This insures a large amount of sunshine to dry up the moisture that necessulates in the henhouse and that should be daily dried up.

The yards are of wire stretched on whitewashed posts. At the bottom of the fence le n series of hoards running around the entire yard. This keeps the hens from burrowing under the wire; About the only suggestion we could make to improve this would be to paint the posts, and fence a segreen to do swoy with the white of the posts. White posts are very obvious and become dirty easily.

The above house is divided into different compartments and from each compartment a door opens into the yard. There are as many yards as there are compartments, and this makes it easy to keep the flocks seperated.

A picture of the interior shows that the various apartments are separated by a wire netting. This is always advisable as wire netting is very sanitary. It can be sprayed with water or anything else. It permits the passage of the air and the sunlight and is a help to cut the darkness, which is always a bed thing to exist in too great quantities in a poultry house. It is not only a cover to dirt, but n protection to the lice and mites and disease germs. Direct sunlight is a destroyer of germs.

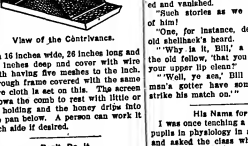
There should be more well-constructed poultry houses or one more than should be so built that they will last indefinitely, and be always serviceable.

CHICKEN CHOLERA.

About the Only Cure for Sick Birds is tis Hatchet Cure.

We hear n grent deol about cures for chicken cholera, but it is my opinion that if a man has the misfortune cholera in his poultry establishment the best thing he can do is to get up early in the morn and shoot as many as possible, if they seem to have the cholera. I have no faith in any remedies. If the remedies seem to do good I know then that the fowls have no cholera, but have indigestion, as a result of improper feeding.

It is my belief, continues this correspondent of Farmer's Review, that there is very little chicken cholera in the couotry. When it does come it makes a clean sweep of most of the birds in a flock. I have known of flocks that were simply exterminated by the disease.



I have not heard of a genuine case for so long a time that I feel sure that with proper sanitation we will not have much more trouble from it. It is sold to have come from Europe and to have swept over this country like a plague at first.

My way of keeping out cholera and all such diseases is to take all my own birds. In doing this I think I am presenting n harrier to disease.

DEVICE FOR UNCAPPING HONEY.

Home-Made Contrivances Which Will Prove a Great Convenience.

I have n plan of making a device for uncapping honey which I think will interest others, writes a correspondent of Prairie Farmer. I take a pan 16 inches wide, 26 inches long and six inches deep and cover with wire cloth having five meshes to the inch. A rough frame covered with the same wire cloth is set on this. The screen allows the comb to rest while all the honey holding and the honey drips into the pan below. A person can work it each side if desired.

Don't Do It.

To many bee-keepers "a bee is a bee." When driving through the country, how many apiaries of pure Italian, Carniolans, or even pure black or hybrids can we do we see, asks Gleanings in Bee Culture. Sometimes we run on to an occasional yard of a fancy race; but more often there is a general mixture of a whole lot. This habit of swinging around from one kind to another, mixing and crossing, is not the way to get the most profitable results and satisfaction out of bees. Don't do it.

Good Management.

The cure-all in the poultry yard is good management. Its principal virtue is that it is preventive. With it there is no need for stimulants, regulators and other makeshifts.

Mrs. Emma Stoll, of Appleton, Wisconsin.

"A neighbor, advised me to use Peruna. I began to improve at once."

MRS. EMMA STOLL

Mrs. Emma Stoll, 1000 Oneida St., Appleton, Wis., writes:

"Peruna has done me a great deal of good since I began taking it and I am always glad to speak a good word for it.

"Three years ago I was in a wretched condition with backaches, bearing down aches, and at times was so sore and lame that I could not move about. I had inflammation and irritation, and although I used different remedies they did me no good.

"A neighbor who had been using Peruna advised me to try it, and I am glad that I did. I began to improve as soon as I took it and I felt much better.

"I thank you for your fine remedy. It is certainly a godsend to sick women."

Catarrh of the Internal Organs.

Miss Theresa Berthes, White Church, Mo., writes:

"I suffered with catarrh of the stomach, bowels and internal organs. Everything I ate seemed to hurt me. I never had a passage of the bowels without taking medicine. I was so tired mornings and ached all over. I had a pain in my left side, and the least exertion or excitement made me short of breath.

"Now, after taking Peruna for six months, I am well as ever was. Peruna has worked wonders for me. I believe Peruna is the best medicine in the world, and I recommend it to my friends."

SOMEWHAT OF A REFLECTION.

Naive Comment of Debutants That Amused Hostess.

A charming hostess of one of the "big houses," as they are called in those who are ensconced into them, has the added beauty of prunature white hair. That which seems to her contemporaries an added charm may appear to the crudely young a mark of decline, at least so it appears in one instance of which the hostess herself tells with enjoyment.

The lady is a connoisseur of antiques. At one of her teas a debutante rich with the glow of youth, but sadly conscious with the cause of sensitive, was handed a cup of tea; the cup was beautifully blue and wonderfully old. The debutante leaned forward to fighten the strain on her youthful guest by a pleasant diverting remark, said: "Your cup is a hundred and fifty years old!"

"Oh," came the debutante's high strained tones; "How careful you must be to have kept it so long!"

Her Aim.

A man who runs a truck farm in Virginia tells of the first employment of a colored man named Sam Moore, who is in his employ, recently found himself in the hard position of difficulty in evading the onslaughts of a dog from a neighboring farm. Finally the dog got him, as Sam kicked at him.

Sam's wife, hearing a tremendous yell, rushed to the rescue of her husband. When she came up the dog had fastened his teeth in the calf of Sam's leg and was holding on for dear life. Seizing a stone in the road, Sam's wife was about to hurl it when Sam, with wonderful presence of mind, shouted:

"Mandy! Mandy! Don't frow dat stone at de dawg! Frow it at me, Mandy!"—Youth's Companion.

Bill's Reason.

Hugo Osterhaune, the new coptoin of the Philadelphia Commercial, praised at the dinner in New York the old salt of the past.

"He has disappeared," said Capt. Osterhaus, sadly. "We made fun of him, and before our ridicule he blushed and vanished.

"Such actions as we used to tell of him!

"One, for instance, dealt with an old shellback's beard.

"Why is it, Bill,' a youth asked the old fellow that you never shave your upper lip clean?'

"'Well, ye see,' Bill answered, 'a man has to have some place to strike his match on.'"

His Name for It.

I was once teaching a class of small pupils in physiology in a rural school and asked the class what name was given to the bones of the hend as a whole. A little girl raised her hand.

"What is it, Mary?" I asked.

"Skull!" she answered.

"Correct," said I; "but what other name has it?" expecting some one to answer "cranium." All were silent for a while, then a little fellow who seemed to be in a deep study quickly raised his hand, his eyes sparkling and a confident amile spreading on his face.

"What is it, Henry?" I saked.

"Noggin," was his immediate reply.—Judge's Library.

Aunt Electa's Elopement

By Elliott Walker

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Come! Aunty. Don't sit nodding in your chair any longer. Do go to bed."

"What time is it, child?" Electa Brown blinked, groaning slightly as she straightened up.

"Nine o'clock. You ought to be asleep. Half past eight is your regular hour, you know." Rosie's plump shoulders twitched nervously.

"I know. When is your pa coming home? I guess I'll wait for him. Ow!" Aunt Electa caught at her knees with an agonized squeak. "There!" she added remorsefully, "I didn't mean to let out a word, Rosetta, but my old rheumatism has got me again. I'll have to get Nathan to help me upstairs. Dearie!"

The girl stepped to the front door, biting her lip.

"Raining yet?" her aunt called.

"No, not yet. It's thundering a little." Rosie backed irresolutely to the rittting room to put a cooking hand on the old woman's arm.

"Father won't be here until after ten, Aunty," she said, hastily. "I'll help you to bed. Come!"

"Well, I'll be more comfortable there, I suppose. Ow! Walk it right ute, child. Let me stretch my legs to limber 'em. That's better. I'll rest a second."

"Ready, Aunty?"

"Pretty near. What a hurry you're in, Rosie. I pat a dollar in that letter to Jos Berry about the ginger cordial. 'Tisn't everyone I'd trust, but Joe's honest. Ho hasn't been here for some time, has he? I thought you two were sort of keeping company three months ago."

"Yoah! He's only a station agent. I—I—pahaw! That talk didn't amount to anything. People are always gabbling about me. I wish they'd 'tend to their own affairs."

"Well, you're mighty pretty, my dear, and only eighteen, with no mother. Of course, folks are interested. Your Pa's spoiled you, I guess, into thinking you're a real grown up, when you ain't but a child in most ways. I will say never saw a girl so hard to get nigh to as you."

"I'm that way," returned Rosie, petulantly. "I hold my tongue, do my work and suit myself. It's a good plan, and I'd thank older people to do the same, even you, Aunty. There!"

"Oh! I didn't mean to rile you, Rosie," said her aunt, humbly. "I'm aware that I just came here to help, and will you could hire a woman. Now if you'll give me a lift; my dear. Ow! All right. Why! I'm just your height. And not much fatter than you are, child. Funny, I never noticed that. Careful. Careful. One step at a time. Don't go so fast."

The girl laughed in a forced, unnatural manner as they toiled up the steep stairway.

I'll have you in bed in two minutes, Aunty. Stand here by the door, while I light the lamp. So! Lean against the jamb. Where are the matches? Oh! yes. I—Good heavens!"

Noiselessly the door had been pulled to. There came a sharp click. Rosetta was a prisoner. Down the stairs sped Aunt Electa. Her rheumatism seemed not to hinder those flying feet. Regardless of shrieks and pounding from above, she skipped into the tiny closet off the hall, presently to emerge with her neice's long cloak, hat, veil and small hand bag.

"Thought so," she grunted. "All packed and ready. I was sure of it. Poor, foolish little thing. Thank the Lord for good eyes, sharp ears and having lived in Dresser. I'll fix this business."

Arraying herself carefully, the old woman extinguished the lamp in the sitting room, closed and locked the front door, and stole out into the blackness of the night.

In the road she paused. A long roll of thunder echoed among the hills. As it died, she heard the sound of distant rapid wheels.

"Oh! yes," she murmured. "I'm waiting, you scamp. I go to bed early. Don't I? Somebody goes out doesn't she? These moonlight nights with Pa at the store, and Aunt Electa around asleep were very convenient, eh? Only she wasn't. It was a trifle chilly peeking through the blinds, but it paid. I knew you at the very first glimpse, my boy. The wind was blowing my way when you said 'Sarah' sleight on the nine forty-five, Rosie.' You spoke too loud, son, under that tree, I'll go. I'll fool you, and there's a gentleman at the station who is wondering at the P. S. on a letter. 'If Rosie is obliged to take a train Saturday night, please look after her.' That tells nothing, but Joe will be on hand. So will Electa Brown. Who was she?" The horse stopped with a jerk.

"Climb in, Rosie, quick! Good! That's nimble. We've got to hurry. I know you wouldn't fail me. One kiss you darling."

Aunt Electa submitted to the smack with fortitude. Her veil loosed the shock. She snuggled close to her victim, with bowed head, for the lightning's glare might betray her. Her heart beat wildly, as they dashed on. Far, far in the distance blew a faint whistle. It was the nine-forty-five.

There was no one in the tiny, dim waiting room as she sank into the corner seat, quite faint with the exertion of her part. Where was Joe?

Her nerves rallied as she heard her companion's sharp order at the ticket window.

"Two for Draghury."

There was no clergyman at that benighted village. No, nor a justice of the peace. Electa gasped end tors off her veil.

A figure slipped out to the platform. It was the old ticket agent—a shabby, ancient veteran. The woman heard his shrill call.

"I'll take your place now, Bell. Guess the lady you was lookin' for is inside."

As the broad shouldered young fellow stepped over the sill, the man, counting his change at the window, turned and beckoned to the corner occupant.

"All aboard," he grinned, and stopped, blankly, shading his eyes, with a quick forward glide. Aunt Electa stood up.

"I guess you've made a mistake Mr. Tarleton Blighty' she said, clearly. "I haven't, though. You're remember-es over in the town of Dresser, on account of sixteen silver spoons and some worse things. Good 16oks and a sick tongue won't save a thievin' rascal from a proper handling. I don't know where you came from, but I do know where you're going, and that's on this train with your two tickets to Draghury. Throw him on the cars, Joe, or under the wheels."

And Mr. Blight took his train as a small boy takes his first dive. As he crashed to a breathing position, Bell glanced apprehensively at his heavy right hoot and smoothed the knuckles of a massive fist.

A bit of white paste board lying near the platform's edge caught his attention. He picked it up.

"Good for one day and train only," was his grim comment. "I'll keep this for luck."

"I'll drive you home," he said. "No more trains tonight. Gurney can look up."

When Rosetta was roused from her apathetic despair by a loud knock on the door of her prison she did not answer. For an hour the girl had wept and raged alternately. She hod heard the buzzy halt immediately to dseh nlong. With it had gone her dreams of luxury, of fun rniment and jewels, the attractions of the great city where Mrs. Blight should shine.

Oh! such a wretched, deceitful medie soma old woman.

"Rosetta!" the strange ring in her artful tons compelled a reluctant reply.

"Well, I just wanted to say that I borrowed some things and eloped to the station with that moonshine hero of yours. He felt very bad when Joe Bell helped him on the train. Here is the ticket he meant for you. I'll shovo it under the door. Joo and I will sit up for your Pa. Come down when you feel like it."

The key turned in the lock. Rosie escaped for the card. The old woman heard a startled cry as she hurried to the stairs.

In five minutes Rosie appeared at the sitting room door. Her face was white, her eyes blazing. She moved with a stately tread. Electa, kissed her, impulsively, and drew back.

"Will you go to bed now?" she whispered. "I—I've something to say to Joe."

"Like a streak, child," smiled Aunt Electa, departing with alacrity.

WEDDING FEE THAT LASTED.

Minister's Honorarium Was Unusual, But Gratifying.

The number of marriages in a country parish during a year is seldom large enough to make the fees nod of an addition to the minister's slender salary, and the fees themselves are sometimes of a curious nature.

One New England clergyman tells of a wedding fee which lasted ten times as long as any other he ever received, and which, he believes, has never been duplicated.

The wedding was that of a thrifty widow to an elderly bachelor, who was sadly in need of just the care and the feeding he would receive at the widow's hands. The wedding was a lively one, and the clergyman says he was about to depart, the bride stepped up to him and whispered:

"I sent Henry over with your fee last night an hour ago. He wasn't in a position to give you one, but I told him he could jog it over and that you would show his good will. I hope you'll like it; you always have."

When the minister reached his home he was greeted by his wife, whom the 6-weeks-old baby had kept at home that evening.

"The hodgepodge brought over your fee a while ago," she said, in a voice shaking with laughter. "I had him put it out in the kitchen."

"That's a pretty place for a wedding fee!" cried the minister, as he hurried out to the kitchen, followed by his wife.

There he found his fee—two dozen glass jars, bearing neat labels which set forth the nature of their contents as "six of currant jell," six of "spiced currants," six of "grape jam," and six of "sweet pickle."

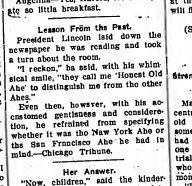
"I've laughed over that fee more than any other," said the minister, "but we also had more solid enjoyment out of it than out of any other I've ever received."—Youth's Companion.

THE VILLAGE ANGLER.

Under a spreading sycamore,
The village angler stands.
A tough and sturdy boy is he,
With soiled and sunburnt hands,
And the imprints of his unshod feet
Are all along the sands.

He goes on Sunday to the stream,
Although, of course, that's wrong.
Whenever a bullhead takes his hook
He yanks it, hard and strong.
And if he doesn't get a bit
He bums a cheerful song.

Loafing, fishing, pleasuring,
So through the week he goes;
Each morning sees him at the creek,
Whose fishin' holes he knows.
Each evening sees him trotting home
To seek a night's repose.



Thanks, thanks to thee, my patient kid,
For the lesson thou has taught.
Thus, at the dog grounds of life,
Our shines must be sought.
We waste our days and do about
The fish we haven't caught.

THE STORY OF A WISCONSIN MAN IN WESTERN CANADA.

Three Years Ago Worth Only $2,000; To-Day is Worth $15,000.

The following is a copy of a letter, of which the Agents of the Canadian Government throughout the United States receive similar ones many times during the year:

Cayley, Alta., Dec. 7, 1906.

Agent Condina Government,
Watertown, S. D.

Dear Sir—

Your letter dated Nov. 27th at hand and was very glad to hear from you. I see that you are still at work persuading people to move into the Canadian Northwest. I must tell you that I owe you many thanks for persuading me to come out here, am only sorry that I wasn't persuaded sooner, and there is still plenty of good chances for many more right in the present time. I hope that you will be able to induce more to make a start out to this part of the country.

Now I must tell you what I have accomplished since I came out here and it won't be three years till the 1st of July. I shall shortly receive my patent for my homestead, the homestead cost me $10.00 in all, to-day it is worth $30.00 per acre, but it is not for sale. Then a year ago last May I bought 320 acres at $7.00 per acre and sold this foit for $20.00 per acre and cleared a profit of $4,160.00. How is that for this Northwest? I now have 320 acres of land and all paid for, 16 head of horses, 30 head of cattle, 22 pigs, 2 sheep and about 150 chickens and other poultry, and all new machinery and everything is paid for. We also bought 8 lots in Calgary and 7 in High River. We gave $470 for the 15 lots and they are sold for. At present I consider myself worth $15,000.00, and when I left Wisconsin less than three years ago I had about $2,000.00. This year I threshed a little over 4,000 bushels of grain, have about one thousand bushels of fine potatoes and about five hundred bushels of turnips, Mrs. Beisiegel sold about $100 worth of garden truck and poultry this fall. Now there are lots of others in this community who did as well as I did in the same length of time.

The family and myself are all well at this writing and hope this letter will find you the same.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) PHILIP BEISIEGEL.

ENTICED BY THE BAR.

Strenuous Actions Mildly Explained by the Minister.

Many stories are told of the eccentricities of clergymen and sayings of an old clergyman who lived in Maine some years ago. At one time there had been a fight among some men, one of whom was seriously hurt. A trial took place, and the old minister, who had seen the affray was summoned as a witness.

"What was Benson doing?" was the question.

"Oh, he was slashing around."

"Well, sir, just what do you mean by that?"

"Why, he was knocking about him here and there."

"Now, sir, kindly tell us plainly what Salson did to this man."

"Why, he—he enticed him," said the old minister slowly. "He enticed him with a crowbar. He used the crowbar to persuade the man—to entice him, and by a series of pokes and blows he succeeded in doing it," said the minister, smiling.

SCALY ERUPTION ON BODY.

Doctors and Remedies Fruitless—Suffered 10 Years—Completely Cured by Cuticura.

"Small sores appeared on each of my lower limbs and shortly afterwards they became so sore that I could scarcely walk. The sores began to bleed, but small scaly eruptions appeared. The itching was so severe that I would scratch the sores until the blood began to flow. After I suffered thus about ten years I made a renewed effort to effect a cure. The eruptions on the limbs had appeared on every part of my body except my face and hands. The doctor in my native county, and many remedies gave no relief. All this was fruitless. Finally my sight began to fail and I was rapidly becoming bald. A few months after, having used almost everything else, I thought I would try Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap. After using three boxes I was completely cured, and my hair was restored, after fourteen years of suffering and an expenditure of at least $50 or $60 in vain endeavoring to find a cure. B. Hiram Mattingly, Vermillion, S. Dak., Aug. 18, 1906."

COULD HARDLY TOTTER ABOUT.

A Vivid Description of the Most Insidious of Diseases.

Miss Emma Shirley, Killbuck, N. Y., writes: "Kidney disease mysteriously fastened itself upon me two years ago and brought awful headaches and dizzy spells. I was all unstrung, weak and nervous, could scarcely totter about. Pains in the side and back completely unnerved me. My food disgusted me, I looked badly and the kidneys were noticeably deranged. I sank lower and lower until given up and at this critical time hagan with Doan's Kidney Pills. Details are unnecessary. Twelve boxes cured me and I weigh six pounds more than ever before. They saved my life."

Tip from the Sage.

"Well," observed the sage of the park bench, "this business of chasing dogs around the town and taking them to the pound may be all right in some ways, but it certainly is wasting a lot of valuable power."

"Power?" ejeculated the park policeman in surprise.

"Yes, power. When a dog is in a good humor he wags his tail, doesn't he?"

"Believe he does."

"Well, now, if we could keep all the stray dogs in a good humor and stand them in a row and let them wag their tails from morn till night, why, man, there would be enough power generated to run a trolley line Niagara wouldn't be in it. Wonder to me some genius don't try to harness those wags."

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist, Going Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested Standpoint, Has Written a Remarkable Series of Articles, Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

JAPAN PLAYING POLITICS WITH CHRISTIANITY

Shiminjoseki, Japan.—As I leave Japan for Korea, it is necessary to summarize the results of three months' investigation into religious conditions and missionary work in Japan. I find that some of the statements now to be set down are rather sensational; this is due to the facts, and not to their reporting. Indeed, unimportant news could scarcely be expected from the country which embodies the world's greatest political problems, the far eastern question. That much-discussed question, one learns who painstakingly studies it on the ground, is really a commingling of racial, religious, economical and political questions. The reader of these articles who has not seen in them more than a treatment of missions and religion has not grasped all the meaning that the writer intended to convey.

Playing to the Western Gallery.

The Japanese government, which has ever before its eyes the important advice of inflocecing western opinion, has been playing politics with Christianity. Like any other nation in similar circumstances, it has employed every agency at hand that would serve its own purpose; since the western world is nominally Christian, Japan has, throughout the present era, displayed a favorable attitude toward Christianity. Indeed, that shrewd old statesman, Marquis Ito (whom many Americans have been led to look upon as a sort of main prop of the church in Japan, although, judged by even the loose Japanese standards, he is "a most immoral man") proposed that Japan make Christianity its state religion. I have the personal testimony of educated Japanese that they themselves, became Christians 20 years ago for the sake of the country. The help of missionaries was freely used by the government, first, because it was needed, and secondly, because Japan wanted to appear to be pro-Christian here. Undoubtedly there has been a measure of this same sort of ministerial favor to government's recent gifts to the Young Men's Christian association army work.

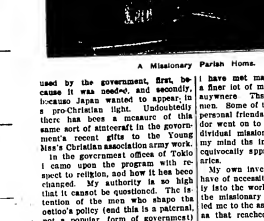
In the government schools Christianity is not a popular, form of government) was that the Crown Prince of Japan should become a baptized Christian, so that the next emperor should be counted among the Christian rulers of the earth. The personal convictions of the crown prince did not figure in the matter at all; the rulers look upon Christianity without any regard to the beliefs of individuals, which is a serious oversight as I shall show. Given yet it is possible that the program may be overturned by the sincere conversion of the crown prince to Christianity, an event, however, which is quite improbable.

For the second part of the government program reverence the first. The plan has been changed. It has now been decided that it is unnecessary for Japan to become a Christian nation. They next emperor will not be a Christian. Independence and toleration in religious matters will continue to be the national policy, but the same official whose views look best, expressing ueclares it to be his belief that Japan will never become a Christian nation, although there will remain, alongside of Buddhism and Shintoism, a Japanese Christian church.



An Elder Statesman's Keen Views.

On the same point let me quote Count Okuma, one of the older statesmen and the most influential individual in Japan. I had a long interview with him in his beautiful home, upon many phases of the Japanese problem, including this one. "Japan has the most perfect religious liberty in the world. So great is the spirit of toleration here that a conference of national relations was recently held in Tokio by the Christians, Buddhists and Shintoists. But this very conference showed a lack of seal on the part of each for its own faith. This same lack of ardent, vast, and tenacious fervor, to surrender beliefs, is also noticeable, I understand, in America. As to Christianity in Japan, I would say that it has spread as a moral philosophy, rather than as a religion. It may continue to grow, and be widely accepted, but it will never become a national religion. Had Christianity been our ancient faith, the situation would have been different. Moreover Christianity would have been greater in Japan were it not for the denominational divisions and strife, which have hindered Christian growth here. I am glad to notice a decrease of this, both in Japan and America. Mission boards should take into account the importance of this matter."

"What of the missionaries themselves? They have done only good and not evil. Their educational work especially has been great—too much cannot be said in favor of it. But not all missionaries have been successful; there are some who are failures. My own opinion is that there is still a place in Japan for the best type of missionary. Especially do we want able teachers and great thinkers."

New Ambassador Wright Sizes Up Missionaries.

Count Okuma's words have caused a digression from the first point of this article. Before returning to it, and while still on the subject of missionaries, let me quote the opinion expressed to me by the American ambassador to Japan, Hon. Luke E. Wright: "When I came to the orient I was disappointed in the missionaries. Decidedly disappointed. I expected to find them, as in every other calling, all sorts of men, with a proportion of nonecount ones who had come out here because they could not make a living at home. But I must confess that I have not met a single missionary who could not pass anywhere. Both in the Philippines and in Japan they are the best class of men I have met among missionaries, and a finer lot of men I have never seen anywhere. They are first class as men. Some of them have become my personal friends." Then the ambassador went on to speak in detail of individual missionaries. He left upon my mind the impression that an unequivocal approves of the missionaries.

My own investigations, while they have of necessity gone more intimately into the work and qualifications of the missionaries in Japan, have led me to the same general conclusion as that reached by the ambassador. I have met personally the missionaries, of all creeds, stationed in every part of Japan. I have seen them at work and at play. I have sought out the criticism against them and their work that could be heard. Wherever I have learned of a critic or antagonism of the missionaries I have tried to get the worst he had to say. From scores of Japanese, Christian and non-Christian, I have gleaned opinions of the missionary force. Summing all up I am constrained to say that the missionaries as a whole grade higher than even the ministers at home. They devotion to their work, and to the welfare of the Japanese is unquestioned. The results of their labor are beyond doubt really great. To say that their converts are not genuine and their work superficial is simply to betray a lack of knowledge of conditions that are apparent to any unbiased observer. Of course there are individual missionaries not a few who are misfits and should be recalled, and of course there are minor points on which the missionaries are undoubtedly open to criticism. Nevertheless, these cannot affect the general verdict, that the missionaries are creditable representatives of the best life of the Christian nations, and that their efforts are bearing fruit which justify the cost.

The Question of the Optimists.

This leads right back to the main question, "Will Japan become a Christian nation?" As opposed to the negative view of nearly all the government officials whom I have talked, I find every Christian, foreigner and Japanese, taking a confidently affirmative view. In no case has a Christian betrayed the slightest note of uncertainty on this point. They ridicule all idea of an amalgamation of Christianity, Buddhism and Shintoism, saying that this is Buddhist talk. Buddhists, while they welcome and foresee impending defeat, and wants to cajole Christians, but eventually Japan will become, in the lives of her people, and, consequently in her government, a Christian nation. This confidence on the part of the Christians is rather inspiring; they have the faith of their creed.

Missionaries are quick to point out the weakness of the official prediction. The latter are all based on the assumption that Christianity may be treated as an equity, and dealt with as the government would deal with a monetary system, or a naval code. Christianity may not be considered thus, say the missionaries. It does not thrive by the approval of cabinets, or succeed by imperial edicts. They do not want official sanction or endorsement; that would be as dangerous to the church as it was in Constantine's day. Christianity is slowly but steadily growing in Japan, and it will continue to grow incessantly, by being accepted as the personal belief of individuals. Its appeal is not to men in the mass, but to men one by one. As a personal, vital experience, taking first place in the individual's life, it will exert its power and find its place.

Thus all the plans of the government may be upset by the change in belief and ilts of the people; and, since the missionaries rely on the supernatural aspect, which officials ignore, it may come to pass that even the next emperor will be a Christian, just as many persons in all branches of government service have become believers in the gospel of Christ. As the seed in the crack by road a tree that splits the rock, so by its inherent vitality and growth, Christianity in Japan will overthrow alike the devices of statesmen and the old creeds of the nations.

How the Movement Works.

In the next breath, after telling you that Christianity will never conquer Japan, the statesman will confess to how badly the west cannot possibly understand. Unquestionably, Christianity is erecting there in a large body of its people. I have been at pains to assure myself that the Anglo-Saxon standards of virtue prevail among the Japanese Christians as they certainly do not among the people generally, or even the Buddhist priests. The place of womsn must be radically changed if Japan is to rank with the civilized nations; admittedly the most potent force in effecting the alteration already accomplished are the mission schools and the churches.

With respect to eleemosynary institutions—the cars of the insane, lepers and other incurables, the reform of inciptical criminels, the provision for orphans and destitute, the display of kindness to dumb creatures, etc.—Japan has scarcely emerged from barbarism. Practically every advance in these particulars has been made by the missionaries. Despite endless twaddle that has been written about the Japaneeo home life, it is undoubtedly truo that the Christian, or, say, the American conception of a home is only now being learned, and that from the missionaries. The dissoluteness and subterranean natures of the Japanese character, which has brought shame upon the nation in its business dealings with the world, is being replaced by straightforwardness and integrity on the part of the thousands who are accepting the bible standard of conduct.

The Situation as It Stands.

So far as figures may do so, the missionary situation in Japan may be set forth very briefly. There are 40 organized missionary societies, or organized religious bodies, doing work in Japan. These maintain a force of 889 white missionaries and a still greater number of native workers. They possess property, in the way of churches, schools, residences, etc., to the value of $1,279,902. Or native Christians enrolled in the Protestant churches there are 60,862, including catechumens; in the Roman Catholic church, 59,437 and in the Greek church, 19,115. Roughly speaking, this means a Christian force of 150,000 persons, who look forward to the evangelization of a nation of 45,000,000 people. While Japan is not going to become Christian in a day, she has made a most substantial beginning in that direction.

The Japanese Protestant churches display certain characteristics well worthy mentioning in this resume. First is the tendency toward union. All Presbyterian bodies are now in Japan. All Methodist bodies formally unite next May. The Episcopalians and the Church of England are one. The Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestants are uniting, as in America. Left to themselves, the Japanese Christians will undoubtedly form one church, with denominational and doctrinal distinctions of ecclesiastical government mean little to them. The tendency toward union in this country also are ahead of America in respect to united religious efforts.

Precious Heritage.

Sweetness of temper is a precious heritage. It gives beauty to everything. It brings its windows open to ward the apice country, and fills the home with perpetual delight. The fortunate possessor of a sunny soul is God's evangel in a dark world. He is a living gospel which no one will ever repudiate, and the blessedness of which all men will appreciate. The body will grow old and the smooth brow will be furrowed, but a happy disposition is an'aureole to the gray crown of age. Blessed is the man who looks out upon the world of God and whose soul is responsive to the outlying vision.

OUR WEALTH-MAKERS

AMERICAN FARMERS LEADERS IN ENRICHMENT OF NATION.

DOLLARS BY THE BILLIONS

Annual Value of Farm Products in the United States Greater Than the Output of the World's Mines.

Statistics gathered by the United States census hareau afford interesting studies to those who care to delve into economic subjects. According to the government reports issued covering the years ap to 1906, the total amount of capital invested in manufacturing in the United States is $12,686,675,678. During the year 1905 there was produced of manufactured products $14,802,147,087.

The same authority gives the information that the farm values of the United States reached the enormous sum of $20,614,001,836, and to this must be added $13,114,492,056, which represents farm improvements. It is needless to say that the value of miscellaneous stocks, etc., but it is sufficient to say that during the years 1905 and 1906 the annual production of the farms of the United States amounted to $6,000,000,000. It will be seen from this that while the value of farms and improvements is very nearly three times the annual production of the farms, that the prodnction of the farms annually is only about one-half of the value of the manufactured products, but when it is taken into consideration that the farm supplies more than 60 per cent. of the articles that enter into the manufactures, it shows how important is the American farmer.

Each year the wealth produced by American farms was five times greater than the value of gold and silver produced in the United States for the year. It is estimated that the gold produced in the world since the discovery of America by Columbus up to the present time is approximately $11,368,000,000. During the same period the production of the silver of the world was $12,420,000,000. Thus it can be seen that about every four years American farmers add more wealth into the world greater than all the gold and silver that has been produced since Columbus' time. The wealth of the United States is now estimated at $115,000,000,000. American farmers are adding to the wealth at the rate of between $6,000,000,000 and 7,000,000,000 yearly. The total wealth of Great Britain and Ireland is placed at $60,200,000,000. At the present wealth producing capacity of the United States it will be more than ten years the wealth he produces would aggregate more than the total wealth of both the great kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The total wealth of all of Italy is estimated at $13,000,000,000. Each year two years the American farmers produce enough to buy the kingdom of Italy, and every year American farmers produce wealth sufficient to purchase all of Belgium.

Outside of the 50 agricultural states and territories the possessions expended $57,039,765. This includes the Louisiana purchase, the Philippines and Alaska, the Philippines and all United States possessions, covering 2,037,613 square miles of territory, which is more than the American farmers each year is valued at 104 times the amount that was necessary to buy all of these possessions. The cotton crop alone for 1906 was more than sufficient to pay expenditures the United States for its expenditures on account of the acquirement of the vast possessions mentioned. It is useless to further make comparisons, the American farmer is the great wealth producer of the nation. His wealth is based nearly all the manufacturing, and it may be said nearly all the commerce.

While the farmer is a great wealth producer and is one of the most independent of the American laborers, he has perhaps just reason for complaint as to compensation received for his labors. While the results of his labor has given employment to an army of millions of workers, the farmer has been subject to the operations of combinations that directly oppose his best interests. These are the great trusts that control the marketing of what the farm produce. None will deny that the distributing agencies are necessary, but when these agencies become oppressive and make extortionate charges for the handling of the produce of farms, they become institutions that are oppressive. But the American farmer to a great extent appears to be responsible for the building up of such combinations. In quantity he has ignored simple principles recognized in business and which are important to him. President McKinley in one of his addresses made the statement that to locate the factory near the farm was the greatest economy and the highest prices for farm produce; in other words, the factory makes the home market. For years farmers in the agricultural sections of the United States have by their conduct contributed toward the support of the stock gamblers and the managers of the trusts, but have assisted in making possible the building up of mammoth aggregations of capital in great financial centers, and this capital has been used in the furtherance of combinations that have made it possible to dictate to the farmer what prices he must take for all that he has to sell.

money sent from districts to the large cities means the concentration of wealth in these cities and greater support for the trust builders. They should also understand that their farm values to a great extent depend upon the activity and importance of the home town. Should the farmer relieve himself of the burden that is placed upon him by the trusts and combinations, he can do it by assisting to the greatest extent the building up of industries in his own town, his county and state. The question is worthy of the most careful consideration of every resident of a rural district. The greatest utilization of all home resources can only be brought about by a cooperation of the people. Every land owner and every person employed in the tilling of the soil, should give greater study to economic questions and discover, if possible, how much better all conditions under which he labors can be made by a practice of the old-time home patronage rule.

D. M. CARR.

DEVELOPING THE COUNTRY.

Progress of Agricultural Districts and Cities and Towns Go Hand in Hand.

The building up process of a country commences with the cultivation of the soil generally. First the pioneers, the settlers on the land, begin the building of homes, and closely in the wake of the agriculturists follow the towns.

Town building is an interesting study. It is the highest development of communism. As far back as we can reach in the history of the world we find the spirit of community of interests. When Columbus reached America he found the Indians had their villages. Even among the most barbarous races the communal spirit is found. In our state of civilization cities and towns represent most perfect communial development.

Where there are people engaged in any industry, it is necessary that there be tradesmen to supply necessary wants. These tradesmen generally seek the most convenient location in the settlement and form the nucleus of the town and city. With the outbing of the contiguous territory, new industries are brought into existence and gradually there is a growth of the hamlet to the proportions of a village. The village soon becomes a small city, and its importance is gauged entirely by the trade that it can command to give employment to the people residing within it. Its geographical location is always an important factor in town and city building. The average agricultural town has a limited territory for its support. From this territory must come the trade to maintain it. The large cities are small towns "grown up." While the small town may receive its support from the limited territory surrounding it, the city is maintained by the trade given it by a multitude of small towns, and by certain conditions that perhaps may make it a place where manufacturing and jobbing may be carried on advantageously. While the geographical position is important to the small town, it is more important to the large city, as there are numerous conditions to be met, and such things as transportation facilities and freight rates are highly important.

It may be said that the majority of American cities and towns are dependent to a great extent upon the agricultural sections of the country. The farms supply the major portion of the articles of commarce and manufacture, and as well the trade that supports the towns and cities.

The community should take pride in the progress of the town which it has been instrumental in building up. The town is all important to the residents of rural districts as it affords educational and social advantages that would otherwise not exist. In many localities there is an erroneous impression that the interests of the residents of towns are different from the interests of the people of the surrounding territory. A little thought will show how the interests of both classes, the residents of the country and the citizens of the town, are equal; how the town depends upon the country for its support, and how the country looks to the town as a market place and as a convenience in general. The more liberally inclined town will be much to the interest of all residents of rural districts that the home town be a prosperous place and that all its interests be protected.

Try for Factories.

Small manufacturing plants are desirable factors in the business of any town. There must be employment for the residents of a city or town, and any means of supplying this need is commendable. There is only one thing that many citizens do not take into consideration, and that is, it is the better class of people of a town to build up industries already established than to strive to gain new industries. A manufacturing plant is beneficial to a place in accordance with its payroll and its output of goods that bring a revenue to the town. Some small concerns that will employ a dozen hands will have a payroll of perhaps $25 or $40 a day. The value of its products may amount to $15,000 or $20,000 annually, all depending upon the character of the business. But what is most considered is the payroll. From the average town this it is estimated that trade lost, and which goes to large cities through the mails, is more than $100 a day. If citizens of a community would retain this $100 a day and do their trading in the home town, it is evident that it would be twice as beneficial as the small factory that brings a payroll of $40. Of course,

Sporting Gossip

So many games were postponed last spring because of wet grounds that the management of the Washington American league team has taken the initiative to obtain some sort of protection for the infield against rain. Lee Lemat, a local inventor, has given the matter much thought, and believes that he has solved the problem. He has a device which is going to make it possible to play ball games on all days, even when it is pouring, and no such thing as wet grounds stop will he seen if his invention will do what he claims of it. Lemat will build a tract on the whole, which will be placed in the center of the diamond. The canvas is rolled up on it and can be run out in all directions, covering the entire infield by means of small trucks, which carry the canvas to the extremes of the infield. In this way the infield can be covered and protected from the rain to less than two minutes, and it can be cleared and be ready for play in about the same time.

President Noyes and Manager Cantillon had a long talk with Lamat the other day, and he will soon show a model of his invention. If the invention will do what is claimed for it, one of the machines will be purchased and few games will be postponed at National Park thereafter.

All these things unite to make him a most voluable and wonderful baeeball player.

Jimmy Britt has decided to take a fall out of Hamlet. Hamce has been stung good and hard by the stage bug. Said Jimmy: "I know I have the class to kick in with these high brows. All I lack is the opportunity. Why, look at Jim Corbett. Soo his hit theatre. What's the matter with Corbett? I do'ne same? I think I can win the stage championship from him without turning a hair." Last week a breathless, hhree-legged little boy ran into the constable's office at San Rafael and said there was a crazy man in his pa's ten-acre lot. After the constable had called together a guardeized company he constantly approached the raving maniac and pounced upon his back. After the victim had been bound and gagged some one remarked that the feature resembled those of Jimmy Britt. Sure enough, when they lo-sened the supposed maniac turned out to be Jimmy. He was out there leaving "Cora Belings in a Country Graveyerd" to tatters.

The longest game of baseball ever played in the world was contested between the Henry L. Pierce grammar school of Dorchester, Mass., and Bennett's school of Brighton recently. For seven hard teams struggled for supremacy, the Pierce school finally winning out by the small score of 4 to 3. The game, which lasted more than three hours, abounded in spectacular plays on the part of both teams. Neither side scored until the third inning, when the Pierce school scored two runs, but in the fifth the Bennett boys made three. This was evened up in the fourth by Pierce. Then for 23 innings both sides went out in order. In the final inning the boys from the Pierce school bunched their hits, scoring the final and winning run. One remarkable feature of the game was the fact that both pitchers stuck in the game until the finish, although both were allowed to give way to some of the substitutes.

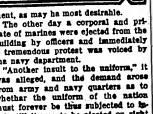
Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—The big public "show" buildings of Washington are the "flirtation clearing-house" of America.



The capitol and the splendid library of congress are the favoritas, but others are only less popular. For many years the problem has been a serious one with custodians, watchmen and policemen, and this spring it has been worse than ever.

Yoong men and women of the high school age, it is declared, make the library of congress a regular headquarters for the purpose of flirting. There are young men and women of maturer years who do much the same, and, finally, all kinds of people make the place a headquarters for meeting by appointment, or without appointment, as may be most desirable.

The other day a corporal and private of marines were elected from the building by officers and immediately a tremendous protest was voiced by the navy department.

"Another insult to the uniform," it was alleged, and the demand arose from army and navy quarters as to whether the uniform of the nation must forever be thus subjected to insult, till it was to be elected on sight from public buildings.

Then came the explanation that the two marines had been especially offensive in their advances toward women in the building, and that when their cases came to be looked into ample testimony against them would be adduced.

SMUGGLING IS POPULAR AMONG RICH AMERICANS

"WE have confidential information that the manufacture of trunks with false bottoms abroad is a thriving industry just now," said a treasury department official the other day. "These trunks are designed primarily for rich Americans who are now traveling in Europe and who will secrete diamonds, pieces of jewelry and other valuables in secret trays, false bottoms and other places where an inspector would not be expected to look.

"These trunks are made very cleverly and, although it is an old dodge, it will be worked with some success this year. They used to make them trunks with false bottoms of such depth that the deception was quickly discovered. They do them much better now and our inspectors will have to keep a sharp lookout to prevent fraud.

"You would be surprised to know how many of our captures of smuggled goods are made. Our inspectors would be unable to expose many of these cheats but for information furnished by disgruntled maid servants. Many a foe woman returning to this country with a lot of undeclared jewels and other valuables has been discomfited by a word judiciously dropped by her maid. It is not always the wisest thing for a wealthy woman to discharge her maid too soon after returning from a purchasing expedition abroad. More than one Fifth avenue woman is wondering to-day how the government got the tip that she was bringing a diamond necklace without the formality of declaring it.

"Modest clerks in high-priced jewelry stores in Paris earn a good deal of money on the side by keeping United States government officers advised of the purchases of wealthy visitors by traveling Americans. When the Americans return home their statements are carefully scanned to see if all their purchases are included. Many seizures are made in this way. The clerk is always rewarded by a percentage of the extra penalty imposed and in the same way maids and other servants who furnish information are paid."

AN EXAMPLE OF SHORT CUT TO INNER SOCIETY

IT'S really quite legitimate in Washington, you know, where one officially, scarcely stays but more than one consecutive minute—to take all sorts of social short cuts. One may not wait for the natural evolution of such things. Time flies. The other fellow's turn is close upon us. So its hustle, hustle, and bump yourself while your stock is at a premium.

The meteoric career of the Shonts at the capital offered an interesting example of the "off-again-on-again-gone-again-Finnigan" system. Very charming people, indeed, with permanent wearing qualities were Mr. Theodore P. Shonts, former chairman of the Panama canal commission; his wife and two attractive young daughters, Miss Theodora, sought in marriage by the Duke de Chaulnes, and her sister, Miss Marguerite. The Shonts girls have lovely clothes and a cordial grace of manner with a southern flavor to it. Much of their life has been spent at their father's handsome estate near Mobile, and on southern waters in the paternal yacht Margadora. "Margadora" is a graceful telescooping together of the names of the two Misses Shonts.

A story runs that at the outset of her brief Washington career, Mrs. Shonts, with of the present president of the Interborough Metropolitan company of New York, desiring to give a large dining while comparatively a stranger, was assisted in the making out of her guest list by a friend who was a veteran social expert here. A certain venerable senator, who had never met the host and hostess, vague as to identities, was numbered in the list. "I am most happy to know you, Mr. Senator," amiably proclaimed the lady of the house, "you will find on the table there the name of the lady whom you are to escort to dinner."

"Yes, thank you, madam," said the old gentleman, in no wise recognizing his fair hostess, producing from his pocket a small card contained in an envelope, and proceeding to scrutinize it through his glasses. "I already have my happy fate right here. She seems to be a party by the name of—er—let me see—by the name of Shonts, or something of that sort."

ANTS THREATEN TO EAT SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE

ABOUT 17,000,000 or 18,000,000 white ants have decided to raze the Smithsonian institution, and the preliminary work has begun.

Where the white ants came from nobody can tell. They cannot be killed by any means except fire or a liberal use of kerosene. They increase more rapidly than any other known species of ant, and that is at a rate almost beyond computation. They are hideous to look at, being soft, unlike the North American ant, and bristling with a slight fuzz.

They are armed with little sawlike mandibles, which can make their way through the hardest wood in an incredibly short time.

Whole window sashes were turned from solid, wood to sawdust under the industry of their sawhills. The flooring was eaten away from the walls for the space of three or four inches, and the cases in which rare specimens of butterflies and birds were kept were chewed to fine powder.

Now there is positive danger to the institution in their annual appearance, as the building is drawn on so heavily to feed them that the woodwork has become weakened.

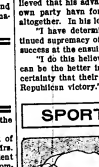
If something be not speedily done to exterminate the white ants the building itself will be exterminated.

The Smithsonian institution is one of the nation's greatest ornaments. It was presented through a fund by the late James Smithson, a son of the duke of Northumberland, and the legacy, brought to this country in gold sovereigns in 1838, yielded as a building fund more than $500,000.

The building is used to house specimens of natural history.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

IS MAINTAINING REPUTATION



James Hazen Hyde, former vice president of the Equitable Life Assurance society, after a year or so of near-oblivion, is doing things again in the French capital. Pending a settlement of the controversy provoked by the proposal to merge two prominent New York trust companies, one of which was founded by Mr. Hyde, it is pleasing to learn that this gentleman maintains his reputation for being the most fastidious male American who ever set foot in Paris. That he would fall below the standard he set up in his own country was unthinkable, but confirmation of faith in his artistic cyclidics toward perfectly symmetrical dilettantism is welcome.

At the recent "battle of flowers" in the Bois de Boulogne one of the most enthusiastic contestants, accompanied by a hair enormous automobile, accompanied by a hair dozen pretty women, the former American fad maidens gathered, according to the historians about the wealthy nobles of Mayo's day.

But in one respect Mr. Hyde is bidding for the reputation of a demure person. The flowers he flung were the most quiet in nature, the most discreet children of Flora.

When he wears the ribbon of the Legion of Honor recently bestowed upon him its fine red line will be the only concession he will make in his symphony of violet. His Paris admirers are wondering whether he will extend the creed to his cravat and his hosiery.

BLIND "BOSS" TO RETIRE

In a communication to Secretary Nathan M. Wright of the Republican state central committee of Rhode Island, Gen. Charles R. Brayton, who for 20 years has been known as the "blind boss of the party," tendered his resignation from the executive committee of the state central committee. The reason that Gen. Brayton gives for withdrawing is "that the active management of the party may be placed in the hands of abler and younger members."

For some time Gen. Brayton has been the burning issue before the Rhode Island legislature. Gov. Higgins worked with all his might to carry out his campaign pledge to oust Brayton from the statehouse.

Brayton, a chair in the high sheriff's office this year, put his word was law in the legislature. The politics of Rhode Island has been a source of wonder of every state leader in the country. They have tried to copy his methods.

During the last year Brayton has been roundly denounced, and it is believed that his advancing years, poor health and the opposition to him in his own party have forced this preliminary step toward retiring from politics altogether. In his letter of resignation Gen. Brayton says:

"I have determined on this course out of no lack of interest in the continued supremacy of the Republican party nor from any doubt of its complete success at the ensuing fall election.

"I do this believing that the active management of the party now united can be the better intrusted to its many abio and younger members with the certainty that their enthusiasm and combined efforts will result in a decisive Republican victory."

SPORTSMAN AND CHRISTIAN

Is Marion W. Savage, of Minneapolis, Minn., millionaire, Methodist, horse racer and circus owner, consistent? That is, can he race horses and hn a really true Christian?

Marion Savage admits that he is a race-track sportsman and says that he knows hn is a devout Christian. People who are best acquainted with him will also tell you that he is a good church man, whose deeds are actuated by his scriptural belief. They say they knew him as a poor man only a few years ago, before he made his money on a stock tood, and that his religion of them days has not changed one whit.

At Savage, Minn., Millionaire Savage has the finest stable in the world. On his farm are 225 rich horses. Dan Patch has the finest stall of them all. Other well-known race horses owned by the Methodist millionaire are Crescens, 2:03¾; Directum, 2:05¾; Arion, 2:07¾. Of them Mr. Savage proudly says:

"They are the four fastest and most famous harness stallions ever owned by one man or one farm in the history of the world. Arion was sold for $125,000 in 1893; Dan Patch sold for $60,000 ($180,000 has been refused for him); $100,000 was offered for Crescens and $25,000 for Directum."

In the midst of all the excitement Mr. Savage is always a Christian, devout and watchful of his actions. Fabulous offers to send Dan Patch to the post in the east on Sundays have been consistently refused.

"Dan is a Methodist, too," Mr. Savage always says.

PREMIER OF NEW ZEALAND

Sir Joseph G. Ward, who succeeded Richard J. Seddon as leader of the Liberal party in New Zealand and premier of the country, on the sudden death of "King Dick" Seddon two years ago, is a man of great capacity. Though he was an Irishman little is known in began his career as a plebeian a way as did Seddon, the miner. Ward began as a telegraph messenger and was later an operator. He became Seddon's right arm. Seddon never covered over his native burly roughness, but Ward is a smoothly polished statesman and diplomat. There is not so much one man power now as under Seddon, because Ward relies more on his ministry. His policies are characterized, however, by their directness and vigor, and it seems that all of his efforts are along the lines of clean administration. His cabinet—called ministry here—is interesting. William Hall-Jones, formerly a carpenter, is minister of public works and railways, and he is also a sort of vice premier; J. A. Millar, minister of marine, customs and labor, was a sailor; G. Fowlds, minister of public health and education, was a draper; R. McNab, minister of lands and agriculture, is a university product; James Carroll, native minister and of stamp duties, is a Maori, whose ancestors for generations or two back were cannibals, and Dr. Finlay, the attorney general, is a self-educated man, who took to the law. Besides being practically the president of the country, Ward also is colonial treasurer and minister of posts, telegraphs, telephones, and minister of industries and commerce.

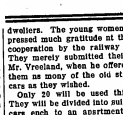
Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—Brooklyn's famous "split church" is about to be dismantled and it is a matter of conjecture as to what use the small piece of ground upon which it stands will be used. The little split church is on the Lenox road, near Flatbush avenue. It is in the center of a district inhabited by some of Brooklyn's most fashionable families and many of them will be glad when the church has been razed, for it is a reminder of a "trick" that they do not take particular pride in. The church was built by well-meaning people in order to prevent the installation of a saloon on Lenox road. Several years ago a large structure with stores on the ground floor and flats above was started on the southwest corner of Flatbush avenue and Lenox road. Members of the Park Side church, then in the hands of a Methodist congregation, learned that a German intended to put a saloon in the corner building. There was no saloon on Lenox road then and most of the residents of the street did not want one on it. Particularly did the members of the Park Side church, many of whom lived on the road, object. After trying by appeals and protests to prevent the opening of the saloon they decided to start on a new tack. According to the laws of New York state a saloon cannot be opened within 200 feet of a church. The Park Side church was farther down the street, on Lenox road, and did not come within the prescribed radius, so no objection could be made to the German's saloon on this ground. So to forestall the saloon-keeper it was decided to build a church on a narrow little plot which would bring the saloon within 200 feet and thus prevent the opening. The church was duly built. It was complete in every detail, but was a joke as to size, being merely a miniature. It is about 15 feet wide and about twice as long. When packed to its capacity it will hold about 50 persons. It is nevertheless a church. It has a steeple, Gothic windows and all the usual details. Hence, when the German tried to open his saloon the matter was carried into court. But to the chagrin of the church members the supreme court held that the miniature religious structure was a church according to the letter of the law but not according to its spirit, and that as regular church services were not and could not be held there it was a piece of spite and not a church at all. It reached her legal age.

MISS VANDERBILT SOON TO RECEIVE MILLIONS

MISS GLADYS MOORE VANDERBILT will be the central figure next month at a birthday party to be given in her honor at The Breakers, the Newport home of Mrs. Alice G. Vanderbilt. Miss Vanderbilt will at that time attain her legal age, and a pleasing feature of the function will be the delivery of her inheritance from the estate of her father, the late Cornelius Vanderbilt. This inheritance amounts to $12,500,000, and will make her America's richest girl.

When Cornelius Vanderbilt died in 1899 he bequeathed $7,500,000 to each of the five children, except Cornelius, Jr., the money to be paid each heir upon reaching legal age. Cornelius, Jr., was cut off with a mere $1,500,000, because he married contrary to his father's wishes.



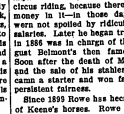
Alfred was designated head of the family, and it was provided that the bulk of the estate should be given to him in installments. Certain funds were placed in trust with the provision that they should be distributed when the youngest child, Miss Gladys, reached her legal age.

Under careful management her heritage of $7,500,000 has grown to $10,500,000 in the seven years since the death of her father. She will receive in addition $2,500,000 from other funds of the estate, the total of $13,000,000 making her one of the richest unmarried women in the country.

Amanda Vanderbilt will get $2,500,000, and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, will receive a little less than $1,000,000.

Cornelius will get nothing, but he is not suffering in the least on money. Mother gave him $6,000,000 after the death of their father, and this amount, with the $1,500,000 bequest received by Cornelius, has been increased to $15,000,000.

There is in the hands of trustees $25,000,000, half of which is to be paid to Alfred when he reaches the age of 30 years and the other half at 35. He will be 30 years old in October, and they are preparing to give



GIRL'S SUMMER COLONY IN DISUSED HORSE CARS

DISCARDED street cars given by the New York City Railway company are being used to construct a summer hotel for working girls within ten miles of New York city. About 30 of them have been transported to the chosen spot and volunteer workmen from the ranks of the east side settlement workers are putting them in shape for occupancy.

Undertaken by two or three young women who have been for years identified with settlement work, the new plan is well under way, and within a few weeks it is expected there will be a fair-sized colony of the car dwellers. The young women have expressed much gratitude at the willing cooperation by the railway company. They merely submitted their plan to Mr. Vreeland, who he offered to give them as many of the old style horse-cars as they wished.

Only 20 will be used this season. They will be divided into suites of two cars each to an apartment—one for sleeping and one for use as a sitting room. There will be one devoted to kitchen uses for the entire colony, and it will be under the management of a woman well known in settlement work.

KEENE'S HORSE TRAINER AN INTERESTING FIGURE

THUS far this season James R. Keene may be accounted the most successful man on the American turf. The winnings of his racers already are well beyond the $100,000 mark, and Saratoga and the fall meetings, with the richest stakes, are yet to come. Keene has 42 horses in his string, all of his own breaking, and knows all of them as intimately as a shepherd knows his sheep. There is one man, however, who knows more about them than Keene does, and is more responsible for their performances. His name is James Rowe.

Rowe is one of the most interesting figures in racing circles. He has gone up tin ladder from stable boy and has been jockey, starter, trainer and owner, at one stage of his career he gained useful experience in theatricals.

Rown began riding when 11 years old, after leading the list of jockeys for two years, Rowe took to circus riding, because there was more money in it. Even those days jockeys were not spoiled by ridiculously high salaries. Later he began training, and in 1886 was in charge of the late August Belmont's then famous string. Soon after the death of Mr. Belmont and the sale of his stables, Rowe became a starter and won fame for his persistent fairness.

Since 1895 Rowe has been in charge of Keene's horses. Rowe is reported to be a rich man, and probably he is. He seldom bets and always has earned big money. He gets $15,000 from Mr. Keene, and this, with the regular 10 per cent. of the stable's winnings, makes a very neat income.

TWENTY-NINE DEAD IN WRECK IN MICHIGAN

Excursion Train Carrying 800 People Collides with Freight Near Salem.

AWFUL SCENES ENACTED

Men, Women and Children Crushed in the Splintered Coaches, Few Escaping Injury.

Terrible Ending to a Happy Day's Outing by the Employes of Pere Marquette Road.

Salem, Mich., July 22.—Twenty-nine excursionists were killed and 100 more injured, many of them fatally, Saturday morning when a Pere Marquette excursion train of 11 coaches from Ionia, carrying nearly 1,000 employes of the Pere Marquette shops there, and their families, was run into by a local freight train at Washburn Crossing, about two miles east of here.

Long List of Dead.

The dead, all of whom are from Ionia: Will Dot, Ionia; John Patterson, Charles Macaloni, Al Hebert, Martin Kilduff, Mrs. Abraham Eddy, Herman Naff, N. J. Cornell, John Rogers, Willie Orams, a boy; John Tafel, Mrs. August Richter, Ned Gallagher, Lee Alvord, Conductor E. E. Bixley, Fireman Knowles, Den Rogers, Frederick Latham, Frank Smith, Conductor E. E. Pixley, Charles Iless and his two sons, Charles McCauley, Sr.; L. K. Merrill, Albert Trautwine, James Vixord, Harry Reynolds, Homer Smith, Fred Fitzgerald, William Steiger, Kansas City, who was working in Ionia, Dred Vaughan, South Bend, Ind.

Coaches Telescoped.

Three of the coaches were telescoped by the terrific impact of the heavy freight train, and the fourth and fifth coaches were smashed into matchwood. Although there were probably 150 children among the excursionists it is a strange fact that few of them were severely hurt. Nearly all of the dead and the injured are men. Passengers on the wrecked train say that the passenger was running about 40 miles an hour when the trains met.

Wreck Occurs in Cut.

The banks alongside the track at the crossing where the collision occurred are ten feet high, and the space between them for several hundred feet is literally filled with wreckage. The railroad wreckers are making all the speed that is possible in clearing it, but even with the assistance of steam cranes at each end, it will be 12 hours before it can definitely be stated whether all the bodies are out. The passenger engine was completely wrecked and its crew killed, but in some miraculous manner the engineer and fireman of the freight engine escaped with their lives.

A majority of the killed were men, who were seated in the smoking car.

Farmer Saw Wreck.

The trains met in a cut which is in the arch of a four-mile long curve in the track, and the banks run up for ten feet above the rails at the point of collision. E. E. Smith, a farmer living near the crossing, was at work in his field, and saw the two trains bearing down upon each other. Both of them dashed into the cut and out of his range of vision. Just the tops of the smoke stacks were visible as they rushed along under the ten foot banks to destruction. He saw the stacks come together and then the two engines reared up above the banks and fell back as the roar of the collision came to his ears.

Shrieks Filled the Air.

Almost before he realized what had happened the air was pierced with screams of the wounded and dying people, staggering out from the wrecked cars. Mr. Smith with dozens of other farmers in the neighborhood, rushed to their assistance. Many of the farmers brought bedding and bandages for the injured and as the hours wore on, sent to their homes for food for the suffering people. The scene about the wreck as the wreckers delved among the shattered cars was pitiful. Men, women and children weeping and moaning wandered about searching for missing friends and relatives.

Scores Injured.

In addition to the 75 to 100 people who were severely injured, there are scores more who were cut and bruised by being thrown about in the uninjured cars when the trains collided. Nearly every person in the first half dozen coaches needed some medical attention. The most severely hurt were first looked after by the surgeons. Their wounds were hastily dressed, and hemorrhages stopped, after which they were carried to the wrecking train from Detroit and laid on cots to be brought to Detroit hospitals for further treatment.

"FLARE-BACK" THE CAUSE

HOW DISASTER ON BATTLESHIP GEORGIA OCCURRED.

Findings of Naval Court of Inquiry Midshipman Cruse Succumbs to Injuries.

Washington, July 19.—The naval court of inquiry in the case of the explosion on the Georgia will find that the accident resulted from a "flare-back," meaning that when the breech of the eight-inch gun was thrown open after it had been discharged, some shreds of burning cloth or unconsumed gas was driven into the turret and upon the powder about to be inserted for the next charge.

New York, July 19.—The funeral of Lieut. Casper Goodrich, son of Rear Admiral Casper F. Goodrich, commandant of the Brooklyn navy yard, who was killed in the powder explosion in the turret of the battleship Georgia, was held Thursday at Stone Church, N. J. Marines, bluejackets, a firing squad and the marine band went to Stone Church to assist in the last rites. The regular funeral party included, beside Admiral Goodrich and his family, officers of the warships Connecticut, Alabama, Ohio, Tacoma and Glacier, a contingent from the battleship Georgia and many civilians.

Boston, July 20.—Midshipman James F. Cruse, of the battleship Georgia, died Friday at the naval hospital in Chelsea. He is the tenth man to die, as a result of the powder explosion in the after turret of the Georgia during target practice in Cape Cod bay last Monday.

2,500 PROSTRATED BY HEAT.

Spectators of Elks' Parade in Philadelphia Collapse in Streets.

Philadelphia, July 19.—The parade of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks Thursday was marked by the prostration from heat of an army of persons, estimated by the police and hospital authorities at 2,500.

Never has there been such a wholesale prostrating of people in the city. For six hours the police, ambulance surgeons and Red Cross nurses were kept on the run looking after persons who collapsed under the scorching rays of the sun, and largely because of their excellent service only one case resulted fatally. James Rowley, aged 44 years, of this city, died in a hospital after being stricken in the street.

Those who succumbed were mostly among the spectators jammed along the street in a solid mass from one end of the line to the other. Among the few of the paraders who were overcome were J. Harrington Walker, of St. Paul, Minn., and Henry J. Walter, exalted ruler of the Philadelphia lodge of Elks.

FITZSIMMONS EASILY BEATEN.

Jack Johnson Ends Fight with Light Blow in Second Round.

Philadelphia, July 18.—Jack Johnson stopped "Bob" Fitzsimmons in the second round of a six-round boxing bout before the Washington Sporting club Wednesday night. Fitzsimmons did not show a trace of his former prowess and it is probable that Johnson could have stopped him in the opening round if he had cared to do so.

The blow that put "Fitz" out was a light right to the jaw. The old man fell to the floor and as he made no attempt to rise the referee stopped the bout. The hissing which usually follows knockouts of this character was absent, the spectators evidently taking compassion on the former pugilistic star.

TAKEN FOR AN OLD MURDER.

Respected Citizen of Hobart, Okla., Put Under Arrest.

Hobart, Okla., July 19.—Sheriff H. M. Gray, of Macon, Mo., arrived here Thursday to take back W. F. Davidson, arrested on a charge of having murdered a man in Macon 27 years ago. It is charged the man was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for life, but escaped.

Davidson denies that he is the man wanted. He has lived in Hobart since the settlement of the country, has a family and is highly respected. He is 68 years old.

Russ Peasants Slay 25 Jews.

Budapest, July 20.—The newspapers say that 37 Russian Jews started to cross the Austrian frontier at night without passports, their destination being America. They were waylaid by peasants in the village of Zwonitz for the purpose of robbery. Twenty-five, including women and children, were clubbed to death. The frontier guards reached the scene in time to prevent the robbery of the travelers and to arrest several of the murderers.

One Dead in Burning Hotel.

Yreka, Cal., July 20.—The depot and Depot hotel at Sisson were burned to the ground at an early hour this morning as the result of the explosion of a lamp. Miss Laura Faxey, a school teacher, who had just arrived there from New York, was burned to death. The water supply was defective and no effort could be made to control the flames.

Woman is Decapitated.

Shanghai, July 18.—On a charge of complicity in the revolutionary plot which resulted in the murder of the governor of Anhui July 6, a woman teacher in a girls' school has been decapitated.

MUST CHANGE THEIR PROGRAM.

OPERATORS' STRIKE AT OAKLAND ENDS

MEN ACCEPT COMPROMISE OFFERED BY THE TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

Go Back to Old Wages—Managers Promise No Advance But Will Receive Committee of Arbitration to Discuss Complaints.

Oakland, Cal., July 20.—At a meeting held in Oakland Friday the telegraphers' union voted unanimously to accept the terms of settlement proposed by the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

According to the terms of compromise, the telegraphers will return to work and then both telegraph companies will receive a committee of arbitration to discuss and settle matters affecting the telegraphers.

No Increase Promised.

San Francisco, July 20.—Superintendent Storor, of the Postal Telegraph company, and Manager O'Brien, of the Western Union, declared Friday that their companies had made no agreement with the operators in regard to an increase in wages. The men will be taken back on precisely the same terms that applied when the strike was called.

Statement by Clowry.

New York, July 20.—Col. Robert C. Clowry, president and general manager of the Western Union Telegraph company, Friday afternoon issued the following:

"The differences between the Western Union Telegraph company and its former employes at San Francisco and Oakland have been settled. On June 21 a portion of the Western Union operators at San Francisco and Oakland quit work without notice. About one-third of the force remained on duty and 11 of those who quit were reinstated on their individual applications at their former compensation. Additions were made to the force from other offices and except for a short period the traffic of the company has been moved promptly. The company will reemploy all reliable and efficient operators who left the service, on their individual applications, and at the salaries paid when they quit work."

For the Postal Company.

C. C. Adams, a vice president of the Postal Telegraph & Cable company, gave out the following:

"Edward J. Nally, vice president and general manager of the Postal Telegraph & Cable company, has just received word from L. W. Storer, general superintendent, San Francisco, that at a meeting held in San Francisco Friday afternoon, the striking operators voted 103 to 4, practically unanimously, to return to work, they having been notified that the terms upon which they returned would be that they should make individual application for reemployment, and all who were not objectionable to the local management would be reemployed, with the distinct understanding that the same salaries and same conditions existing prior to their walkout should govern their reemployment, and upon promise to give good and faithful service, and discontinue all agitation and interference with the company's business."

Billik Condemned to Hang.

Chicago, July 20.—Herman Billik, self-admitted faker and mixer of mysterious potions, was found guilty of murdering Mary Vrzal, 20 years old, by arsenical poisoning, and his punishment fixed at death by a jury in Judge Barnes' court Thursday night. Four other members of the Vrzal family met death by poisoning. They were Martin, the father; Tillie, 18 years old; Rosie, 14 years old, and Ella, 12 years old.

Slain by Girl He Jilted.

Cleveland, O., July 18.—Marietta Dennoro, 18 years of age, shot and instantly killed Raffaele Darhato, 19 years of age, upon the street, Wednesday. They were to have been married July 8, according to the story of the girl. She says he refused.

HAVOC CAUSED BY FLOOD

LIVES AND PROPERTY LOST IN VICINITY OF PITTSBURG.

Houses Wrecked, Railroad Tracks Swept Away and Trolley Systems Demoralized.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 19.—The loss of several lives and great monetary damage has resulted from heavy rains throughout western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia during the last 24 hours. The river and mountain streams are out of their banks, live stock has been drowned and bridges and buildings washed away, railroad tracks swept off or undermined, trolley systems demoralized, electric light plants put out of commission and hundreds of families compelled to abandon their homes and seek refuge on higher ground.

At McComb, W. Va., the home of Mrs. Mary Bollord was wrecked by the high water and three young children of Mrs. Ballard were drowned. The bodies were washed away.

Clarksburg, W. Va., July 19.—More than half a million dollars damage resulted from cloudbursts, storms, and floods Wednesday night at Nawburg and along the Cheat river valley in Preston county and this vicinity. Houses were washed away, the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad is out of commission and telegraph and telephone wires are all down.

St. Joseph, Mo., July 20.—A tornado and tremendous rain did heavy damage in St. Joseph and vicinity Thursday night. Houses were wrecked, street railway tracks torn out and cellars flooded. The family of Daniel Riordan, one mile east of the city, had a remarkable escape from death. The residence, two stories in height, was torn from the foundation and demolished. Riordan, his wife and three children had taken refuge in the basement. They were buried under debris, but the wind lifted the house bodily from the foundation and none of the heavy timbers fell on them.

WILLIAM JANUARY SET FREE.

Missouri Man Like Jean Valjean Released from Kansas Prison.

Fort Leavenworth, Kan., July 20.—William January, alias Charles W. Anderson, for whose pardon a petition containing the signatures of 50,000 persons was presented to President Roosevelt three months ago, was released from the federal prison here Friday. Anderson returned to Kansas City, Mo., where he will engage in business. The case of January resembles that of Victor Hugo's hero, Jean Valjean.

Anderson was convicted 11 years ago of robbing an Oklahoma post office and sentenced to the penitentiary for three years. He escaped two years later and went to Kansas City, assuming the name of Anderson, married and prospered. In April this year an ex-convict who had known January in the penitentiary notified the warden of the man's whereabouts, and he was arrested and taken back to Leavenworth.

Ralpe Turns State's Evidence.

Denver, Col., July 19.—W. W. Ralpe, a mining man of Milwaukee, who was arrested in a federal grand jury indictment charging him and five others in connection with the Federal Coal Mining company with alleged fraudulent acquisition of Routt county (Col.) coal lands, has turned state's evidence.

Editor on State Merit Board.

Springfield, Ill., July 19.—Gov. Deneen Thursday appointed John A. Cously, editor and publisher of the Alton Telegraph, a member of the Illinois civil service commission, to succeed former State Senator James A. Willoughby, who was recently appointed a member of the state rail road and warehouse commission.

Strike in Railway Car Shops.

Davenport, Ia., July 20.—Eighty car builders and painters struck at the Rock Island railway car shops Friday in response to strike orders from Chicago, issued, it is said, on account of trouble at the Silvis, Ill., shops.

JUDGE HAWLEY IN ELOQUENT SPEECH

SENIOR COUNSEL FOR STATE ADDRESSES JURY IN THE HAYWOOD CASE.

Heard By Large Crowd—Court Excludes Evidence Bearing on Alleged Counter Conspiracy Against Miners' Federation.

Boise, Idaho, July 20.—The field for argument both for the prosecution and defense of William D. Haywood has been limited by Judge Wood, who in a decision handed down Friday removed from consideration of the jury all evidence bearing on the alleged conspiracy of mine owners and others against the Western Federation of Miners.

Judge Wood decided that the defense of Haywood had made no legal connection of the Mine Owners' association, the Citizens' Alliance of Colorado and the Pinkerton Detective agency, as laying a foundation for the evidence introduced by the defense to show that the charge against Haywood and his codefendants is the outcome of a conspiracy to exterminate the federation.

Immediately following the announcement of this decision argument commenced. Judge Hawley, leading counsel for the state, spoke for two hours and 15 minutes of the afternoon session, the morning session having been adjourned to enable the judge to prepare his decision.

Big Crowd to Hear Hawley.

Every seat in the courtroom was occupied. Outside, in the enclosure reserved for attorneys and newspaper men, were many persons prominent in public and private life, and a sprinkling of women in summer costumes added color to the auditorium space. Gov. Frank Gooding, ex-Gov. Morrison, a number of the officers of the state administration, Capt. James McParland, Julian P. Steunenberg, a son of the murdered ex-governor, and a large gathering of members of the bar of Idaho and adjoining states were present. Haywood sat behind six of his counsel. His wife, in her invalid chair, was placed on his right and his eldest daughter sat beside her mother. Haywood's half sister and stepfather occupied seats close to the defense group.

Forceful, Eloquent Address.

His address after the opening statement, in which he explained that he had "none of the grace of words that constitute an orator," was at times eloquently impassioned but withal a plain analysis of the case. He characterized the case as the "most important ever given to a jury in the United States," and urged the jury to a serious consideration of the responsibility placed upon it. His denunciation of the defendant and his coconspirators as the "worst band of criminals that ever infested any section of this country," was forceful, and his eulogy of ex-Gov. Steunenberg eloquent in the extreme.

Counsel for the defense repeatedly interrupted Mr. Hawley with protests and objections, but these only seemed to stir him to greater effort. Once or twice he turned to Clarence Darrow and faced him with a roar of anger, and at another time he said: "It does not lie in the mouth of counsel to find excuse for these awful crimes."

Argue on Evidence.

Boise, Idaho, July 19.—A day of argument on the admissibility of points of evidence followed the announcement from the defense that they had no further witnesses to offer in behalf of William D. Haywood. The jury was not brought into court, Judge Wood having been informed by counsel of their decision to rest without offer of surrebuttal.

Clarence Darrow spoke for an hour and a half of the morning session. Senator Borah replied in the afternoon and was followed by E. F. Richardson. Judge Wood will probably announce his decision Friday morning.

Mr. Darrow Vituperative.

In the absence of the jury the argument gave counsel an opportunity to take a wide range in commenting on the methods employed on both sides. Mr. Darrow was impassioned and vituperative. He bitterly assailed Orchard and the Pinkertons.

Senator Borah confined himself largely to the legality of the question of admissibility. He spoke for an hour, forcefully reviewing the evidence and claims made by the defense.

Mr. Richardson argued that a conspiracy had been shown by the contributory effect of all the evidence introduced by the defense.

Raisuli Holds Captive.

Tangier, Morocco, July 20.—Reports brought by courier that Caid Sir Harry MacLean had escaped from the hands of the bandit Raisuli appear to be untrue. The latest letter received from the caid is dated July 13. It says, among other things, that a deep ditch has been dug around his tent to prevent his escape.

To Try Morgan's Alleged Friend.

London, July 20.—Mrs. Josephine Leslie, who was arrested at Newmarket July 4, charged with defrauding members of well-known families by false pretense, and who represented herself as a friend of J. Pierpont Morgan, has been committed for trial at the central criminal court.

MIRACLE IN THE VATICAN.

Apparition of Blessed Virgin Solves Pope's Hesitation About Decree.

Rome, July 20.—A member of the pope's household in the course of an interview published Friday night says that Pope Pius hesitated somewhat before he took the grave step of ordering the publication of the syllabus with regard to the so-called modernism in the faith, but that all his doubts were removed by a miraculous apparition of the Blessed Virgin, which extended its hand in a gesture of benediction and encouragement over his head as if in answer to his prayer for heavenly guidance, and that the pontiff thereupon rose from his knees and signed the decree.

McPherson Succeeds Swift.

Kansas City, Mo., July 20.—Thos. B. McPherson, of Omaha, was elected Friday president of the National Live-stock Exchange association to succeed James C. Swift, of Kansas City.

State Fair Races.

Hamline—Secretary C. N. Cosgrove, of the Minnesota State Fair, has completed the compilation of the entry list of horses nominated for eight of the great races to be held at the state fair track next September during fair week. The entries closed on July 1. Six more races will close on August 15, making the list of fourteen great races complete.

Some of the greatest horsemen in the country have made entries and will hold ribbons over the backs of some of the best trotters and pacers now on the American track. Ed. Goers, Charlie Dean, John Laabs, Dick McMahon and men of that caliber will be at the state fair this year.

The fastest class of the races announced is the 2:08 pace, which has fifteen entries, among them the great "Castlewood." The $5,000 2:13 pace for St. Paul day drew almost the same number of entries as last year, twenty-nine, and has a bunch of horses lined up which will make the greatest race ever seen at the state fair grounds. The 2:24 trot for $5,000 has fewer entries but they are very select. For the colt race, the 2:45 trot, the management is pleased with the largest list of entries ever made in the class. Some of the best stables in the country are represented on the list.

Tries New Breed of Fish.

St. Peter—E. E. Miller, secretary of the Nicollet and Le Sueur Counties Game League, received a consignment of 140 gallons of steel-head salmon fry from the United States fish hatchery at Duluth. This is the first shipment of this particular specimen of trout ever sent to this part of the state, and planting them in the waters of this region is largely on experiment. Several streams near St. Peter have been stocked with speckled trout, and as the best results have been obtained the officers of the league are confident that the steel-head variety will do as well.

Explosion Kills Two.

Soudan—Two men were blown to pieces and three others were badly injured by a premature explosion of dynamite in the Minnesota mine near here. The dead are John H. Hill and Otto Makula. The injured were Finnish laborers.

The men were blasting in one of the lower levels of the mine and a heavy charge had been placed in a hole and was being tamped. It suddenly exploded and the concussion set off a box of dynamite standing near by. The force of the explosion broke in all that end of the level.

State Tax League Meets.

St. Paul—Mayor J. G. Armson, of Stillwater, was elected president of the State Tax League at a meeting of the executive committee of the league, called to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of O. M. Hall, its former president. Mayor Armson was already a member of the executive committee of the tax league, and his election was practically conceded before the meeting. The election of Mayor Armson as president left a vacancy in the executive committee, and W. R. Jutmon, of Red Wing, was elected to fill it.

Buried in Ditch.

Lake Crystal—While workmen were employed in the Lake Emerson drainage ditch at a depth of 13 feet, the side walls caved in and two of the men, Hous Iverson and John Wilson, narrowly escaped death. The men noticing the walls caving, barely had time to crawl into the 51-inch tile, which is being laid, before the earth closed up the ditch behind them. They crawled through 500 feet of tile to the opening at the place of beginning of the drain.

Team Shies; Man Killed.

Rochester—Sever Hogonson died as a result of being run over by his own wagon. He was returning from Stewartville to his form at Rockdell, when the horses shied and threw him under the wagon wheels, which passed over his body, crushing the life out of him. Mr. Hogonson lived in Rochester for 15 years, leaving here to go on a farm at Rockdell, where he since has resided. A family survives him.

Flying Timber Kills.

Cloquet—Knute Johnson, 21 years old, was almost instantly killed at the Cloquet Lumber company's mill here by being hit by a piece of flying timber. He was setting the cants of a saw when one of the timbers flew up and struck him just above the heart. He was knocked senseless and expired before he could be taken to the hospital. Johnson came here from Hayward, Wis.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul—Philip Kemplen, former paying teller of the Capital National bank, St. Paul, pleaded guilty to the charge of taking $3,800 from the bank and was sentenced to four years at hard labor in the state prison by Judge Lewis in the Ramsey county court.

Ada—The county commissioners have established two additional county drainage ditches, making the total number of ditches completed and now under construction in this county 52. Another ditch has been petitioned for in the eastern part of the county which will drain a large area of valuable farm land.

Minneapolis—Blood poisoning, caused by being bitten in the thumb in a Fourth of July fight with a former friend, caused the death of John Kelley. Aune Berg, the man with whom Kelley fought, was arrested by the Minneapolis police, but may not be prosecuted, as both men were intoxicated at the time of the fight, and they parted friends again after the occurrence.

Geneva—Poultry raisers are becoming alarmed at the large number of birds being killed by the new fly. Great havoc among some flocks is being reported, some losing as many as 200 fowls.

Agent's Case Appealed.

Northfield—The case of the state vs. L. O. Olson, tried in the municipal court of this city before Judge C. P. Carpenter, was appealed to the district court of Rice county and will be on the calendar for trial at the November term. The defendant was found guilty by the local court of overcharging freight rates on a car of coal shipped from Duluth to the Manhart Coal company in this city, and was sentenced to one hour in the county jail.

The appeal was taken on the question of both law and fact, which will mean that the whole case will be tried over in the district court and all questions involved will be brought before the court.

Steamboat Reaches Minneapolis.

Minneapolis—The highest steamboat navigation on the Mississippi in years occurred when the St. Paul Boom company sent its steamer, the Admiral, through the new government lock and up to the Washington avenue bridge in Minneapolis. The sight reminded old-timers of the days when the biggest steamers landed at the foot of Washington avenue. No trouble was encountered by the Admiral in passing the lock or navigating the river above. The boat was sent up to loosen logs that had become lodged at different parts of the stream.

Trips Over Shoe Lace.

Princeton—D. Clogget, a well known citizen of this place, was seriously injured in a peculiar accident which happened at his home. He was standing at the top of the stairs and was about to descend when he tripped over his shoe lace, which had become unfastened. He was thrown headlong down the stairs. When picked up it was found that several of his ribs had been broken and that he had sustained other serious injuries.

Fell on Pitchfork.

Rushford—While at work in the haymow on his farm a short distance west of this city, Peter Colbjornson met with an accident that may cost him his life. He was standing on a beam from where he guides the hayfork by the use of a rope and could drop its load to any desirable place. While in the act of pulling the rope he lost his balance, falling backwards on a pitchfork which was standing in an upright position.

Few Accidents in June.

St. Paul—Accidents reported to the state labor bureau during June from the factories and shops of the state numbered 115. The largest number, 35, came from railroad repair shops, while 27 came from sawmills and lumber yards, 22 from slaughtering and meat-packing establishments, 10 from building operations, and 8 from machine shops, other employments furnishing but scattering instances.

Two Bodies Recovered.

St. Paul—Workmen employed at the Ames Boom company at Grey Cloud island, recovered the bodies of Darwin Truax and Fred Hill, of St. Paul Park, who drove into the open drawbridge at Inver Grove on the night of May 5 and were drowned in the river. The Rock Island road offered a reward of $1,000 for the recovery of the bodies and the relatives of the two men $200 additional.

To Value Corporations.

St. Paul—The state commission has decided to make a thorough investigation of the valuation of all corporations doing business in the state of Minnesota. With this object in view the commission has a corps of half a dozen men going over the records of all companies which have been incorporated and whose articles are recorded with the secretary of state at the capitol.

A Record Log.

Minneapolis—A log cut this winter at Swan River Landing was pronounced by lumbermen to be the largest ever cut in the state of Minnesota. It measured 50 inches at the smallest end and scaled 2,222 feet. Instead of being loaded on the cars, it will be floated down the Mississippi to Dubuque, Iowa.

NEWS NOTES.

Howley—While attempting to board a moving train, J. O. H. Nelson, fireman on a steam shovel at work on the big cut being made by the Northern Pacific near here, was thrown against a string of box cars and instantly killed. Little is known as to Nelson's antecedents, but it is said that he came here from South Dakota.

St. Paul—Contracts have been let for the redecoration and rearrangement of the interior of the Grand opera house to an amount of over $15,000. The architectural arrangements of the proscenium and side walls will be entirely new and when completed, this playhouse will be one of the handsomest in the Northwest.

Hibbing—Diving into the waters of a pond near the Morris mine, George Dicion, 13 years old, is believed to have struck his head against a rock or sunken log. His companions waited some time for him to come up, but when he did not appear on the surface they gave the alarm. The body was found a short time afterwards, but life was extinct.

Minneapolis—While endeavoring to light a joss stick at a bonfire started by playmates, seven-year-old Marie Bjorlug fell into the fire and was probably fatally burned. The little girl lost her balance when leaning over towards the fire and fell headlong among the glowing embers.

White Earth—A young son of William Sickner, superintendent of the government sawmill, was killed while playing underneath the mill. He was caught in the gearing of the sawdust conveyor.

Hallock—Alexander Olson, aged 75, was accidentally shot and killed by an old muzzle-loading shotgun.

Her Pointed Retort.

When the old lady put her head out of the window and inquired of the young railway porter what the train was stopping for the young man thought he would have a little fun at the old lady's expense.

"Engine was out late last night, ma'am," he remarked with a smile, "so she's got a thirst on her this morning; they're giving 'er a drop o' wine."

"Ah! It's water,' said the old lady. "If you'll wait a minutte, ma'am," he grinned, "I'll inquire whether they're givin' her port wine."

"Never mind,' came the answer, "don't you trouble, young man. I thought perhaps by the way we've been getting along she was run on sloe gin!"—London Tit-Bits.

LIFE INSURANCE ACTIVITY.

The New York Life's Business Nearly Up to the Legal Limit.

The New York Life Insurance Company announces that its new paid business during the half year just ended was over seventy million dollars. As the new law allows no life company to write over one hundred and fifty millions per year, it would appear that this company is working nearly up to the limit. The New York Life gained such headway before the law was passed and suffered so little, comparatively, from the Armstrong investigation, that the question with its management has been how to keep business down to the limit, rather than how to reach it. No other company is writing nearly as much as the law allows. The New York Life has evidently become a preferred company.

The company's payments to policy holders during the six months ending June 30 were $21,660,761. It is interesting to note that this amount was almost equally divided between payments under policies maturing by death and payments made to living policy holders. Thus, while death-claims were $11,180,626, the amount paid for matured endowments, annuities, trust fund installments, for purchased policies and for dividends was $10,480,135. Modern life insurance, as practiced by the best companies, embraces a wide field, and covers many contingencies. It is money saved for the aged, as well as money provided for the families of those who die prematurely.

Europe's Extinct Aurochs.

Professor A. Marteas of Megdoburg has reviewed all the early literature and documents relating to the famous wild ox of Europe, the aurochs, or urus, and shows that it was not identical, "$5,000 won't pay for the building. animal also lived in Europe in the time of the aurochs. It is on record that a herd of thirty aurochses were living in Poland in 1564. In 1627 a few half-domesticated aurochses were still in existence, but the race has since become extinct. The typical color of the aurochs was black, but there was a gray variety in Poland and a red one in Germany.

A Trouble Maker.

Towne—The other day I helped your friend Dubley to select a beautiful etching—

Browne—Don't mention Dubley to me; he's no friend of mine.

Towne—Why, he told me he was going to send the etching as a present to you—

Browne—So he did and my wife made us rearrange all the other pictures in the parlor to make room for it and I'm not done yet.

Not Comfortable.

"I'm going off into the mountains this summer and get close to the heart of nature," said the dreamy girl.

"I once went off into the mountains to get close to the heart of nature," said the matter-of-fact man. "I sought the woods and lay down close to her throbbing bosom. But I found she was full of red bugs and other penetrating fauna. In this way, the required food is presented to the system in a ..." So I arose and gloomily sought the artificial city."

MEAT OR CEREALS.

A Question of Interest to All Careful Persons.

Arguments on food are interesting. Many persons adopt a vegetarian diet on the ground that they do not like to feel that life has been taken to feed them, nor do they fancy the thought of eating dead meat.

On the other hand, too great consumption of partly cooked, starchy oats and wheat or white bread, pastry, etc., produces serious bowel troubles, because the bowel digestive organs (where starch is digested), are overtaxed and the food ferments, producing gas, and microbes generate in the decayed food, frequently bringing on peritonitis and appendicitis.

Starchy food is absolutely essential to the human body. Its best form is shown in the food "Grape-Nuts," where the starch is changed into a form of sugar during the process of its manufacture. In this way, the required food is presented to the system in a pre-digested form and is immediately made into blood and tissue, without taxing the digestive organs.

A remarkable result in nourishment is obtained; the person using Grape-Nuts gains quickly in physical and mental strength. Why in mental? Because the food contains delicate particles of Phosphate of Potash obtained from the grains, and this unites with the albumen of all food and the combination is what nature uses to rebuild worn out cells in the brain. This is a scientific fact that can be easily proven by ten day's use of Grape-Nuts. "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

INFORMATION.

Show me the road to Lazyville—
It can't be far away—
Where shadows linger cool and still
And idle sunbeams play;
Where rustling leaves are whispering soft,
And skies are mild and blue,
And placid cloud-banks drift aloft,
With nothing else to do.

Oh, Lazyville's a dear old place;
It's over Dreamland way;
The route's not difficult to trace
Upon a summer day.
The nodding rose that blooms in state,
The wild flowers on the hill,
All generously indicate
The way to Lazyville.

Dorothy was begging permission to go and buy some candy.

"You may go, dear,' said her aunt, "if you will go straight there and come straight back after you have got it. Do you think you can do that?"

"Sure!"

RAIL CHIEFS AT PLAY.

MASTERS OF GREAT SYSTEMS HAVE THEIR HOBBIES.

Diversions Include Walking Tours, Fishing and Farming—Harriman Fond of Horses and Interested in Boys' Club.

New York.—How does the president of a great railroad play? Are his pleasures as intense as their way as his responsibilities during business hours? The questions were suggested when James McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, sailed for Europa on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria recently. Mr. McCrea is on his way to England for a walking tour with his two sons. His ideas of recreation and a simple life contradict the popular notion of the masters of great railroads taking their vacations in luxurious travel in private cars, yachting, buying pictures or finding relaxation in the gayeties of Newport, Bar Harbor or the capitals of Europe.

Most men point to James J. Hill as the representative railroad president of the country. He is still the leader of the vast Great Northern enterprise, even though he has resigned the presidency to one of his sons. His vacations in the east consist of trips to Labrador on his ocean-going steam yacht to fish for salmon.

Friends of E. H. Harriman say that really to know him—if he can be fully known—one must see him at play. To Wall street Mr. Harriman, the president of the Union Pacific, engineer of vast enterprises and master of finance, seems to be a slight, taciturn man, with spectacles, a bushy mustache and a nervous manner, who has an infinite capacity for work and the ingenuity of a great general in planning surprises. His friends see quite a different man in private life.

His love of the open and fine horses is expressed in Arden, his great estate in the Ramapo mountains, where Mr. Harriman spends a greater part of the year. The property comprises about 30,000 acres. The residence, with its jutting wings and glass-inclosed verandas, forms a picture of home-like elegance.

The best expressions of the owner's tastes, however, are found in the stock farm and rural improvements. The horses in the stables are of the finest for a gentleman's driving teams. Another interest amounts to a fad with him—a boys' club on the East side. He has been interested in the project about 30 years. The creation of the club of its kind in the world and plans for the happiness of thousands of poor youngsters—executed in a most unobtrusive way—are a constant source of recreation.

George J. Gould is an extreme type of railroad president and sportsman combined. Always fond of sports, Mr. Gould has engaged in a continuous round of sports since he grew up. Polo playing became his fad in 1898, and in this branch of sport he has been chiefly interested of late years.

In striking contrast with these financiers is the austere, self-contained personality of George F. Baer, president of the Reading and New Jersey Central systems. Friends of this deliberate, incisive leader of capital in the Pennsylvania coal strikes say they see in him the stamp of his protesting German ancestors, not only in his business life, but in his recreations as well. Mr. Baer began life in Reading, Pa., in the heart of the "Pennsylvania Dutch" region. A student by nature, he is a lawyer by profession, a railroad president by evolution, and an agriculturist by taste. His country home, Hawthorne, near Reading, has a fine library, and Mr. Baer devotes much of his time to historical research. In his garden he is an authority on flowers, especially roses and chrysanthemums. He is also something of an authority on landscape gardening, and has planned a park system for Reading. Two miles from the city is a large farm, where Mr. Baer spends most of his summers with his Alderney cattle, his bungalow on the edge of the Schuylkill river, and a steam launch to carry him to town.

JAMES M'CREA.
(President of Pennsylvania Railroad Who Takes Recreation in Walking.)

E. V. Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe system, spends ten months of the year in Chicago, his suburban home being at Riverside. Two months find him at his country home in Santa Barbara, Cal. Mr. Ripley's fad is golf. He talks, even preaches it, and covers the links at Riverside or Santa Barbara with the enthusiasm of a schoolboy.

STATUE TO THOMAS F. BAYARD.

Bronze Memorial to Diplomat Unveiled in Wilmington, Del.

Wilmington, Del.—More than 5,000 persons witnessed the unveiling of a statue the other day in Rockford park of Thomas F. Bayard, former United States senator, secretary of state and ambassador to the Court of St. James. An address prepared by ex-President Cleveland, who was unable to be present on account of illness, was read by Prof. John Bassett Moore, of Columbia university. Judge George Gray delivered an oration.

Delaware's Memorial to Bayard.

The president was represented at the unveiling by Oscar S. Straus, secretary of commerce and labor. Mrs. Mary Clymer Bayard, widow of the Delaware statesman, came up from Washington with her daughter and was an interested spectator.

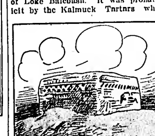
The Bayard statue is of bronze, more than life size and lifelike in appearance. It stands on a pedestal of Brandywine rock, two sides of which are to be ornamented with bronze tablets. One tablet bears the inscription:

"Thomas Francis Bayard, born October 29, 1828.

"Died September 28, 1898."

"Bayard is the purest and most patriotic man I know—Grover Cleveland."

The other tablet contains a brief record of Mr. Bayard's public services.



The statue, which was modeled by Miss Effie Stillman, now Mrs. William Ritchie, of London, and cast in Surrey, Eng., was given by an unknown friend of Mr. Bayard to the Bayard Memorial association, which insured its setting up and unveiling.

STRANGE TOMBS IN STEPPES.

Remarkable Burial Places of Kirghese in Central Siberia.

London.—The strangest looking graves in the world are the tombs of horsemen of the Kirghese steppes in central Siberia. The Kirghese are a curious people who interest all good sportsmen. They are essentially horsemen, and to this day hunt with eagles.

Their tombs, or "maghlia," are as interesting as their lives. The tombs are built of yellow sun-baked clay, and as every Kirghese is his own architect great variety of design is shown. The grave illustrated here is in the region of Lake Balchash. It was probably left by the Kalmuck Tartars when

Meanings of "Physics."

Sir Frederick Treves' vision of a good time coming when physic will startle the thrown to the dogs will startle the hosts of medicine lovers, which is still going strong. One of the most curious signs of the popularity of "physic" is the specialization of the word in popular speech to the sense of pills and doses. Literally it means only "natural," and the "physics" of ancient Greece were natural philosophers. Later, however, the name was taken by sorcerers, who pretended to special knowledge of the powers of nature, and finally came the modern world's "physicien" and "physic." This special sense has taken so strong a hold on the popular mind that the mistake of the valetudinarian who thought Bagehot's "Physics and Politics" was a work on the law of patent medicines, was intelligible enough.—London Chronicle.

It is not reasonings that are wanted now, for there are books stuffed full of stoical reasonings.—Epictetus.

Untold Metal Pellets.

Take eight dilitres of Spanish white, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in the quart of gasoline. Take up the whitling and gasoline and put them in a white bottle and shake thoroughly. You will notice that the white settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of alcohol—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whitling will settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of buttable surface with a piece of cotton flannel, remedy with a piece of flannel cloth—Jacksmith and Wheelwright.

WaterPROOFING Wood Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing brick materials on the lists of the old alchemists probably is that of the Arabs called in this case the Arabic method. It consists in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The rubbish to be boiled is passed through a tank of this solution and dried to drive off the petrol. Following this, the goods are heated by steaming with hot polished steel rollers. This last proceeds melts the small quantity of rosin which is sprinkled on the cloth and likewise binds the fibre with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

How The National Forests Serve The Public.

"The Use of the national Forests," a publication just printed by the Department of Agriculture, is a brief, clear manual for public information as to the forest policy of the National Government.

It is to true, as the short preface to the public says, that "many people do not know what National Forests are. Others may have heard much about them, but have no idea of their true purpose and use." It is the object of this publication to explain just what the National Forest mean, what they are for, and how to use them.

In the first place, it is explained how the forests are created and how their boundrys are drawn. Next, their direct use and value are shown from the point of view of the homeseeker, the prospecter and miner, the user of timber, the user of the range, the user of water, and other users of Forests resources. Third it is shown, how the Forests are intended for use, for the production of of usuable products, and for the establishment and maintenance of homes; how on all of them the timber is protected from fire, the water flow is kept steady, the forage on the range is increased and guarded from abuse; and how, in addition, they serve as great public playgrounds and as breeding places and refuges for game. Finally, the management of the National Forests is described.

Here it is that the great usefulness of the Forest is brought out most clearly and strikingly; for the Forests are managed by the people in their own interests, and every means is used to meet the desires and wants of all Further users that by dealing with them in the main directly on the ground and in all cases with the utmost practicable dispatch and freedom from red tape.

In a words the spec al interest of this manual lies in its showing that the Forest policy of the Government is both in principle and in practice in for the benefit of the ordinary man for the benefit of every citizen equally. There is still a tendency to think of the National Forests as "preserves" closed to use, and to leave the public lands exposed to unregulated individual exploitation. Where these misapprehensions still prevail "The use of the National Forests" will go far to correct them.

The book is written by Mr. Frederick E. Gunted, whose intimate knowledge of conditions in the west and the policy under which the National Forests are managed especially fits him to deal with the subject.

Books Etter's Heroine.

Romola is one of the most striking characters in George Eliot's great historical novel. Romola, the heroine of the story, is of Florence and the period that of Savonarola's career. The idea of writing the book occurred to the novelist while on a visit to Florence and on a second visit to the city, in 1861, she began to carry out her project. The subject and design were forcibly in the author's genius, but she delayed no pains in making a thorough study of the locality, the people and the literature of the Italian renaissance for the purposes of her story. In her own words, the work "plowed into her" more than any of her books. She began it, she confessed, as a pining woman and finished it as an old woman. Her picture of Florence and its social life is undeniably impressive, and some critics declare "Romola" to be George Eliot's greatest novel and the character of Savonarola one of the least dull sections.—Pearson's.

What a Letter Will Do.

A proofreader, assist the imperfection of trifles, read from his notebook these several sentences, each made by the omission of a single letter:

"The country was dreadful and the enemy was repulsed with great slaughter.

"When the president's wife entered the humble sitting room of the miner she was politely offered a seat.

"A man was yesterday arrested on the charge of having eaten a calendar for demanding more than the law.

"An employee in the service of the government was accused of having stolen a small ox from the mail. The stolen property was found in his room.

Have Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the burial place of the celebrated playwright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have originated with Jack Young (afterward knighted), who "walking there when the grave was covering, gave the red stone 18 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer, according to Chambers' "Book of Days," has copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on his covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Deception of Wile Birds.

Falcons—hawks, the largest species—can compass their features and look very like if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can hump into any position they think most suitable. It is useless to look for these self preserving traits in any of the birds kept in zoological collections; for the birds are so accustomed to see large numbers of people pointing at them or standing in front of them that they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought to them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. The pigeons in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage like the bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is not so often seen when in captivity.

A Train For Tyler.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency of the presidential office he attended to many an effected in some expedient and held his end high to attempt for a special train. It happened that the famous shredded wheat biscuit, a strong fulfiller shredded wheat biscuit, as much as said he had to resort to bestow on the president's wife therefore Bob that his friend did not run any special trains for the president. "Why, certainly," said Bob, "what you want to do, Mr. President, is to send for the funeral car of President Harrison." "Yes," said the astonished president, "and I will be the astonished!" "Well, I will tell you how your request in that condition you shall have the best train on the road."

A Costly Clock.

The famous timepiece of Watch clock of Calcutta is placed in a house on the city wall. It has big earthen jars of successive shelves and fourth and lowest one with a wooden lever connected with the clockwork. The water descends by slow drops from a jar to another, the last stand on a float in the last jar raising the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 4 o'clock when the last jar is filled and been emptied, the upper one filled and the clock time started up for the next day.

A Great Slam.

"Sir, I am a self Made Man!"
"That's all right. Don't apologize."—Philadelphia Press.

A Financial Coup.

"You don't mean to say that you caused stocks to jump materially?"

"Yes. And it was necessary to do it. It saved the time to enable a day be used for other purposes."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousan ds depend upon,

Radney Up To Date.

Haying time is here and we are all busy getting up hay for the long winter.

The steamboat is running at last, but it only stops at one place between Highlanding and Rhoda.

The people up here receive the same play every year, with the river jamed full of logs crowding the water out onto the meadows.

A good many million feet of logs are flooded down the river this spring and there are millions to follow, but we do wonder how many million they are allowed to put in the river at one time?

It is to bad the new boat was not named after Duchs up, "No, No Joe", white people are not Indians. G. L.

Our correspondeant writes some articles regarding the Red Lake River Transportation Coffpany, which we decline to publish, for the reason that we think he does not understand the situation, but will say for his information that the company is under the management of a board of 11 directors, who in turn have chosen three of their number to run the boats and they are doing the best they can to satisfy the share holders and the public, and the share holders have nothing to say until the annual meeting on the 2nd Monday in January.

A DOUBLE VICTORY

By M. J. PHILLIPS

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Vacation!" Bolton, managing editor of the Planet, looked up from his desk. "Why, yes, certainly, Miss Barclay. You've earned one, if a soul on the staff has. Your work has been fine this summer. Take two weeks—a month. Of course, the Planet pays your salary for a fortnight of it."

She flushed with pleasure at Bolton's off-hand, though sincere praise. He was not a man who was lavish with commendation. "Then I'll start tomorrow."

"All right; have a good time. Good-by," and he turned again to his desk.

Miss Barclay's loop was heartfelt, the next morning, as the train rumbled slowly out of the station. All day she traveled, and it was just sunset when she stepped out on the platform of Lake Leven—home!

Her father kissed her and her mother cried a bit and patted the weary girl. There was no clanging cars and rumbling trucks; no dancing heat waves from motor pavements; no hot-foil assignments—nothing but a long month of restfulness!

It was ten o'clock before Ruth dropped into the hammock in the shady front porch. A half-dozen tall boats were cutting merrily through the waters of the lake. Small boys fished lazily from the docks a few hundred feet away, and "last but not least," smiled Ruth to herself, "a young man with curly red hair and about a million freckles, is sprinkling Mrs. Carver's lawn. I wonder who he is?" Just then the young man looked up—became engrossed in his sprinkling. Ruth's eyes dropped.

"The best thing!" thought Miss Barclay, "but he's nice when he smiles." "She's a peacherino!" said the young man, enthusiastically to himself. Slowly and thoughtfully he went into the Carver house, next door.

Old friends came in during the day to see Ruth. She found great changes in them, in the three years she had been away.

All the men who had moustaches have shaved them off," she duly reported to her mother, "and those that hadn't any have grown them. And every girl I know is married! Here I'm only 23, Ruth and I feel like an old maid among them. Who's that red-headed boy that stays at Carvers'?"

It Was Ten O'clock Before Ruth Dropped into the Hammock.

"That's Johnny Carleton. He's night operator for the New York & Western, like a nice young man, too; so good to Mrs. Carver as most boys are to their mother. He splits the wood—"

"And splinters the kindling on Sun a m. Gracious! When does he sleep?"

Miss Barclay had occasion to ask herself that question many times thereafter. Their sons became quite quainted. In fact, the next day Carleton shamelessly came over to borrow some eggs at Barclays' after first telling the unsuspecting Mrs. Carver that none were to be had at the corner grocery. He sat on the porch morning with Ruth until Mrs. Barclay began to get dinner. In the afternoons they sailed or rowed on the lake, or read and talked in a pretty little nook on the beach, shut in by giant oaks. Always on Sunday evenings, when there was little doing at the office, he strolled up, hands in pockets, and at least a few minutes' converse over the front gate.

In the still watches of the night, when press dispatches and train orders had long been out of the way, and the clicking instrument was his only companion, he covered the sheets of yellow railroad paper with figures: Salary, $60 per month, house rent $12; wood, $4; groceries and meat, $16." Then he would break off with impatience at himself and murmur: "What's the use? There's probably a fellow in New York, anyway." Tearing the paper into a hundred pieces, he would call up some friend up the wire for a talk.

The fourth week of the golden vacation was slipping by when there was a call for Miss Barclay over the long-distance 'phone. It was from the managing editor of the Planet, and he lost little time in preliminaries.

"Hello, hello! That you, Miss Barclay?" began Bolton. "You know who I am? Yes. Enjoyed your vacation? Glad to hear it. Now there's something I want you to do down there before you come back to work. There's a strike threatening on the New York & Western. I got this tip straight, but I don't dare use it from here. What the telegraph operators. They want a raise all along the line, and 40 other things. The road isn't disposed to grant 'em half the demands, and it looks as if the whole system would be tied up by a walkout.

"How do you figure in it? Well, you see the chairman of the telegraphers' executive committee and got the whole story out of him; he's right at Lake Leven." Name's Carleton; do you know him? Oh, you do; good. Well, pump him, and don't put him next to your business. Both sides intend to fight this thing out on the quiet, unless the strike's actually declared. He'll probably lose his job for talking."

"But I can't make him talk!" interrupted Ruth.

"Can't—how do you know you can't? It'll take more diplomacy for her a sharp fellow; but I think you can manage it. If he wins his point without a strike, the road's going to give him an assistant superintendency; if he doesn't, out he goes. They figure, if he's good enough to work them, he's good enough to beat some other road for business."

"But, but—is it necessary to give his name in the story? Can't I get it and hold him safe?"

"Well, I'd be sorry to lose him a job; but that's not our lookout. Write it up as coming simply from one of the men; he'll have to run chances on being found out afterwards."

"I'm—I'm afraid I can't get it for you; could you send someone else down here?" Ruth was making a last despairing effort to avoid the dilemma before her.

"Miss Barclay"—and then was a note in his voice she had not heard before—"this is up to you. There are dozens of more difficult stories ahead of you. If you can't get them, there are others who can." Pausing a moment to give the threat of dismissal its full weight, he continued more lightly: "But I know it's all right. Put the ginger into it. Don't use the wire; there's no rush, as the crisis is some days off yet, I believe. Stick a special delivery stamp on the story, and mail it to me. You understand? Make good without letting out of it—and say, got Carleton's picture. Good-by."

Ruth walked homeward, sorely puzzled. Regard for Carleton and newspaper instinct, the "nose for news," were at war. What should she do—pump Carleton, use the story, and take the chances of his discovery and dismissal, or warn him to be careful, resign her place and hunt another among the rivals of the Planet? Both courses were distasteful—the first, because of her friendship for Johnny; the last, because of loyalty to the paper which she had served faithfully for three years.

The habit of obedience to others, and the newspaper instinct that sensed good "copy," drove her—even while she hated herself—to draw Carleton out that afternoon, while they were alone together at her home. Ruth and the impending strike shared all his waking thoughts. It was not hard to lead the conversation to strikes in general and railroad strikes in particular. Then Ruth saw him hesitate. It was only for a breath; confidence in her overcame natural scuttion, and he told of the twelve hundred operators waiting only on his word to walk out; of the railroad's crafty attempts to outwit him and his own anxious efforts to meet move with move on the chessboard of diplomacy. "We didn't ask much," he concluded, while her brain, seizing upon the facts and figures, stored them away for the dramatic story which was already taking form; "we only demand what the Central, the B. & O., the Lake Shore and other big systems are paying their men. We have been conceded everything else, but a straight raise of $15 a month rather sticks in their craw. Well, it'll soon be over; I expect a message with their decision any time."

Carleton suddenly realized that he had been talking very freely for half an hour. "Of course, you won't print all this I've been telling you. If you do, I'll lose my job."

"And if I don't," she burst out, miserably, "I lose mine!" Then she buried her face in her hands.

Johnny understood instantly; he had been trapped, tricked into an interview which might cost everything, even the interests of the hundreds who relied upon him. For a moment he was furiously angry. Then the girl's naive reply and her evident distress touched him, and he forgot her treachery in a wave of pity. He crossed the room and laid his hand on the bowed head.

"Ruth," he said, softly, "I've another job to offer you. It isn't as good, I know—to start with only $60 a month and act as housekeeper for me; but a whole lot of love goes with it."

She raised her face for a moment; the pink cams and went in her pretty cheeks. The silent silence was eloquent. With a little murmur of joy, Carleton stretched out his arms—

The front gate clicked, there were rapid footsteps on the walk, and the screen door of the parlor was unceremoniously thrown open. It was the day operator of the New York & Western, his face aglow.

"Hurray, Johnny, a message for you. She's won!", He thrust an inkhog slip of paper into Carleton's hand.

"I know it," said Carleton, happily. "I've just had a message—a wireless!"

Dresses for Girls

In this group are shown three pretty little dresses for washing materials. The first is for a girl from four to six years; it is a simple style for muslin, lawn, zephyr, or Jap silk; it has a pointed yoke of the material finely tucked and trimmed with straps of insertion, either Valenciennes or embroidery, according to the material used for the dress itself, then the skirt part is closely gathered to the yoke, and a bow of ribbon ornaments the center front. The foot is turned up with a wide hem, shown which is a row of insertion, then five or six tucks, headed by another band of insertion.

The child, at the top of this group, wears a dress of pale blue zephyr. The skirt is very full, being gathered into the waistband; it is trimmed at the foot shove the hem with wide and very narrow embroidery, the latter being cut away from the wider at the top, to allow the insertion to leave it quite transparent. The bodice has a yoke of piece embroidery, to which the zephyr is gathered under a pretty shaped berths of double zephyr, edged with a frill of embroidery and tiny insertion heading. The fullness of zephyr forms a box-pleat in center front, ornamented with small stud buttons. The bodice should be joined to the skirtband at waist, the fastening being down center-back. A sash of blue silk is worn round the waist, and ties in a large bow at the back.

The third costume is intended for a tiny child from three to five years; the dress is quite long, reaching to the ankles; it is in white "Jap" silk. The Empire bodice is of the silk, finely tucked in series, divided by lace insertion; they start toward the center front and back; the small V opening at front is filled in entirely with rows of insertion done together. The full frill of the skirt is closely gathered end joined to the bodice under wider insertion, through which soft ribbon is threaded and tied in a bow in front. The foot is edged with a lace-trimmed frill of silk, above which are narrow tucks in series of threes, each divided and headed with insertion.

Oriental Effects

Modes of the East Taken Up by English and French Leaders of Fashion.

An unusually pretty frock of fine organdie is daintily trimmed with applique of white Shantung. The flat of the bodice is darned with pale shades of brown, and there is a girdle of changeable brown and pink silk. Handsome enameled buttons also adorn the corsage. The present fashion of draping the figure in oriental manner is particularly loved by English women, and their French sisters have taken up the fashion with a fervor, since many of the models for the English dress have been made in Paris this year.

Green in very delicate cool shades is used for some of the prettiest frocks created by Worth. A particularly lovely model is of soft green satin, with a corselet skirt daintily embroidered in long lines of chine ribbon and silk. The bodice is cut square to accommodate a yoke of embroidered grass linen, and upon the front are several rows of narrow valenciennee lace and net. The sleeves are cut open, but held together by chains of the embroidery and two large green silk buttons.

Empire Scarf is Fascinating.

The revival of empire modes brings in its train the shoulder scarf the maid of long ago wore so fascinatingly with her short-waisted frock and quaint poke bonnet.

To-day we have short-waisted frocks and poke bonnets, too, but it remains to be seen whether or not the shoulder scarf will be generally adopted for street wear. It will undoubtedly find much use as a shoulder and head covering for evening, with dainty frocks of lace and embroideries, fine muslins and batistes.

The beauty of these scarfs is bewildering—the softest of silks, chiffons and crepes, some plain, some embroidered, others exquisite affairs of plaids, crepe, the plaid in self color and of satiny texture. The white and delicately tinted scarfs with deep lace borders in Persian design and colors are also very beautiful, and, las us add, very expensive.

Appropriate Trimming.

A beautiful trimming for a colored chambray or a colored linen is to use striped material, cutting the goods on the bias. Of course, the goods must be with one color exactly matching the gown. This is easily done, while the bands can be made for the skirt and waist, trimming all the edges. Use buttons which match the odd stripe in the striped goods.

La Vallière Chains.

Coral la Vallière chains, cut in cameo form, are set with baroque pearls. Scarf pins in cameo and rose designs are popular. Coral cameo brooches and fourstrand coral dog collars are very smart.

Russian Blouse

Natty Garment in Light Blue Linen for the Small Pet of the Household.

Light blue linen is used for this useful blouse. It is suitable for wearing over knickers or petticoats, as preferred; both hook and front are arranged in four box pleats, the top of each being strapped with dark blue; the ends are pointed, and a small fancy button pieced in the center.

The blouse fastens quite up to the throat in front, and has a small turned-down collar strapped with the dark blue; a belt of the dark linen is worn just below the waistline, it is passed through two small straps that are fixed each side of the tunic. The sleeves have the fulness box pleated to fit them to the wrists.

The Short Skirt.

In spite of the fact that skirts were predicted longer, there are very many fashionable skirts built in a very short walking length. Many of the skirts are very near the ankles, and there are a few daring ones that boldly display the legs. The English walking dresses are particularly noticeable in this respect. There are dresses made for fashionable walking during the London season that are short and so full that they swing clear of the ankles, frankly displaying a very handsome pair of shoe tops.

Ear Ornaments.

To have a golf ball perched on the lobe of your ear is no longer the last cry in ear-rings. Long pendants—preferably of diamonds—now sway rhythmically from nilady's ear, and unhappy is she who can not be decked out like a candelabra. It is an English fashion, and particularly becoming to long aristocratic features.

More and More Embroidery.

The craze for embroidery is on the increase, and it is likely to make the best frocks extremely expensive. Everything good in the way of dress is a perfect harmony in shades, and the successful dressmakers and milliners are artists of no mean order.

QUICK REMEDIES FOR CRAMP.

Not Hard to Get Relief From This Painful Affliction.

Do your little growing folks wake up in the night with cramp in their toes or legs? If so, tell them to slide down to the foot of the bed and press their toes hard against the footboard. This seldom fails to bring relief. Even the tiniest tot can do this for herself when she wakes up in alarm at the big pain in her leg.

Should this fail, and sometimes when the cramp is up by the knee, it is not efficient, tell the sufferer to press the sole of her cramped foot against the instep of the other. Press good and hard, and the pressure, together with the warmth and electricity drawn from the well foot, will certainly bring relief unless the case is very stubborn. To treat the "knotty" stubborn kind of cramp, which sometimes seizes the little folks when they are nervous, or if they have eaten something which does not agree with them, tie a broad band (father's handkerchief, folded, will answer,) tightly above the cramped part. Rubbing, unless one knows just how to manipulate the muscle, often does more harm than good. The doctors tell us that cramp of this kind is as much a nervous as a muscular trouble.

If your children suffer frequently with it, a good warm bath with an alcohol rub at night is a good preventive. B. N.

Courtesy at Home.

We are all creatures of habit, men and women alike, and the habits and surroundings of deily life have a powerful influence on the character of both. The root of all bad manners is selfishness; when self ever is first, foremost consideration for others always lags much in the rear, and drops so far behind in time that it disappears altogether. "One cannot keep up the ceremony and etiquette of society when at home." True, for between friends these can be laid aside. They merely are the rivets that keep society together, but not courtesy and consideration. The latter ought to be so much the habit with each of us that it will become our second nature, and therefore can be no more laid aside than can an arm or a leg.

Generous Mr. Kraft.

"Mr. Kraft, the soap manufacturer," said the college president, "has offered to donate $5,000 for a new building to be known as 'Kraft hall.'"

"But," said the dean of the faculty, "$5,000 won't pay for the building we want."

"Oh! no. You see, Mr. Kraft's generous offer is contingent upon our securing donations of $10,000 each from ten other public-spirited citizens."—Philadelphia Press.

Tests of Bravery.

"Do you think men have more courage than women?"

"Certainly not," answered the professor. "Everybody knows there is more peril in the first ice cream soda than in the first straw hat."

TRADITION OF THE ROSE.

Pretty Legend Current Among North American Indians.

The North American Indians of the western coast have a tradition that roses were created without thorns. So toll and fair they grew that all creatures were attracted by their beauty and grace. Animals that browse upon grass and green herbage soon discover the tender sweetness of the roses' abundant foliage, and then every rose tree holding its flowers aloft but attracted attention and drew destruction to itself.

Every part of the earth had been given its glory of roses, but in every place there were animals which sought the bushes to devour them, and and tribes of roses were in danger of becoming extinct. In their extremity they held a council, for in that faraway morning of the world plents es well es animals had power to speak. To the council all the roses came, and each had a plea to tell of suffering and disaster. At length it was decided to send for help to the godess of the tribes—the Hiawatha of the west. Delegates were chosen from among those who were maimed and torn and had suffered most. Others also were sent who were toll sad fair and graceful. Wisely, this council discerned that should justice be denied the tribes, beauty might prevail in their cause.

The conference was long and grevo. At its close an armory of thorne was given to every rose, and thus were the tribes of roses delivered from the enemies.—Circlo Magazine.

GRADES OF NURSERY STOCK.

Every Nurseryman Has His Own Methods of Classification.

There are no established grades of nursery stock, every nurseryman having his own way of grading. Some put out extra heavy trees while correspond to the No. 1 grade of others and in this way are able to quote prices which are seemingly low. As a rule, eastern nurserymen make more grades than do those of the west. All the grades that some make are one, two and three years old, says Farm and Home. Most nurserymen grade according to height, while some take both height and diameter. The age grade is misleading because if the trees make a light growth the first year they are cut back strongly and, then making a good growth, are put out according to the age of the top.

The different grades of apple trees made by some nurserymen are shown in the cut. They are 2 to 3 feet, 3-4 feet, 4-5 feet, 5-6 feet, 6-7 feet and 7-8 feet. All trees are headed at the same height, but some make a much stronger growth than others. There are fewer grades of other varieties of trees, but at least three are made of each. Which is the best to plant is a mooted question. Some successful planters prefer the heaviest trees, while others equally as successful take medium or lighter grades. Really more depends on the way the trees have been grown than upon their size.

HAND PICKED.

Keep the enlitvator teeth and the hoes bright and sharp.

This month make several successional plantings of sugar corn.

Keep tomato vines off the ground; use stakes, trellis, or a trellis.

A properly-branched fruit tree is likely to produce more fruit than a poorly-shaped one.

Pear trees that are too well fed grow too quickly, make a loose wood and are easily attacked by blight.

Stir your soil as soon as possible after every rain. This will check evaporation and conserve moisture.

Never plant bush lima beans closer than two feet apart in the rows. See that the climbing limas have poles to run on.

Planting plum trees in blocks of one variety is a poor way to insure fruitage, as plums require cross fertilization.

Keep asparagus beds clean. Use the shoots freely until peas are plentiful, then stop cutting and allow the tops to grow.

The apple tree that has its head close to the ground is partly protected from the high winds that shake the fruit from high-headed trees.

The early lettuce bed is an excellent place to sow turnips for early fall table use. Remove the tough lettuce stubs, spade the ground so that the surface layer is turned under about two inches and sow the seed.

Spraying for Scale.

Summer spraying for San Jose scale is unsatisfactory, but if trees or plants are so badly infested that it seems probable they will die before winter a mild treatment needs to be given. One pound whale oil soap to five gallons of water may be safely used. While it will kill the young, crawling insects it will not hurt the old scales and will need to be repeated several times to kill the young constantly hatching.

Bordeaux Mixture.

The Bordeaux mixture is the proper remedy to use for all fungous troubles; viz., mildew and rust of beans; potato and tomato rot and seat blight; melon and cucumber diseases; asparagus rust; celery leaf blight and rust, etc. The half-strength mixture (two pounds copper sulphate, two pounds quicklime, 50 gallons water) is strong enough to use in the vegetable garden, except for potatoes.

Raising Melons.

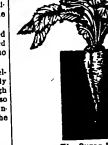
Raising melons and squashes is a sort of lottery, but we have been aided by eternal vigilance to raise enough for the family by using land plaster. It has to be sprinkled on the plants after every rain and a very heavy dew. A neighbor has been using moth balls with success, sticking three in the surface of each hill.

SUCCESSFUL HORTICULTURE.

Fruit Growing Requires Intelligence and Care.

The following article from an exchange contains some thoughts which cannot fail to interest anyone who is engaged in fruit growing or who contemplates engaging in this work:

Some writer figured a year or two since that peach trees had been planted so numerously in the southwest that it would be a physical impossibility, when these trees reached the bearing age, to transport the fruit to the market. In expressing that opinion the writer forgot the old adage: "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The writer has in mind an orchard not a thousand miles from here and of a size that would be called large even in this day of big things, in which 75 per cent. of the peach trees died the first year, and this was not the fault of the trees, but of the men who planted without experience and cared for them as if they were a hey field. Perhaps this is an exceptional case, but it is nevertheless surprising the number of trees that are lost the first year entirely on account of lack of care. Here is the first "slip."



Just assuming that the trees grow off all right there are other "slips" awaiting the unwary and the inexperienced. Diseases and insects are ever ready to get all that they need out of an orchard. At first, indeed, them in comparative freedom from these troubles, but they multiply in time and then "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and the price of success. The "brown rot," for instance, is one of the diseases that you scarcely notice at first, but which increases with the age of the orchard and with favorable seasons. Then there is the ever present borers and the San Jose scale which has not troubled the southwest much yet, but which has played the everlasting mischief in some sections of the country. And then come, occasionally, unfavorable seasons, like the present one. Then the new orchardist fails to plan properly for picking, packing and shipping and naturally gets "skinned" by some commission merchant. This caps the climax of other troubles and many who start out heavily get disgusted with the whole business and go back to the old crops and the old ways.

This is not written in discouragement of fruit growing, but rather to emphasize the need of experience and accurate knowledge all along the line. We read, occasionally, of the immense amount of money made out of fruit on a small area. Some one has in mind a man who, in one year, sold $40,000 worth of peaches from 40 acres. Such instances are always heralded far and wide, but the numerous failures are not recorded. The fact is that the trees planted have great possibilities in it for tremendous gains and lamentable failures. There are chances in it for 1,000 per cent. profit, likewise chances for losing everything. The only way to succeed is to learn the business from the ground up and keep the brain as busy or busier than the hands. Of the millions of trees that are planted only a small per cent. produce salable fruit; the rest go by the board. The fruit business is a good business, but it requires intelligence to run it.

SUGAR BEETS.

The Best Soil for Their Production is Heavy Clay Loam.

There is a distinction between the two sorts of beets. For sugar production the best crops are obtained from rather heavy, well-drained and fertile clay loam soils. On lighter sandier soils the beets will mature earlier, but the yield will be less per acre. On such soils the beets will grow large but the percentage of sugar is likely to be low. Sugar beets are not more exhaustive on the soil than other crops if the tops are left on the land and the pulp is brought back from the factory to be fed on the farm. Planting is done early in the spring and the best cultivation is secured with a well distributed rainfall during May, June, July and August with fairly dry weather in September and October.

The Sugar Beet.

Insect Pests Increasing.

Year by year the damage done to the crops of the farm, orchard and garden by insects and fungous pests seems to be increasing. Some of these pests may be a blessing in disguise, in that the remedies used for their eradication have been beneficial in other respects; viz., in order that they may be successfully combatted, it is essential that the farmer know how to fight them to the best advantage, and that he have a clear idea of the nature of the remedies employed and the precautions that must be observed in their use.—Prof. R. Harcourt.

Most men know better than they do.

CROP CONDITIONS IN WESTERN CANADA

Lateness of Spring Overcome by Excellent Growing Summer Season.

Once more the farmers of Western Canada rest at ease and grow rich while they slumber. Their season of anxiety is over. For a time it looked as though a backward season was for once going to prevent the western country from maintaining its preeminent position as leader of the grain growing countries of the world. The unusual lateness of the spring coupled with the rapid advance in the price of food-stuffs gave the pessimists some reason for their gloomy forebodings, and among even the optimistic Westerners inhaled as they usually are with a spirit of buoyancy and hope, there commenced to glimmer a fear that perhaps this year their sanguine expectations were not to be realized. On May day when a large proportion of wheat had usually been sown there was this year very little seeding done. Finally, however, winter which had tarried so late in the lap of spring in all parts of the Continent vanished before the vertical rays of the sun, and the hurry and bustle of spring work commenced on the western prairies.

By the 20th of May 85% of the spring wheat was sown and the fall wheat in the districts devoted to its cultivation was covering the fields with a mantle of green. Wheat sowing finished on May 30 and by June 10 the corner grains were also in the ground. The heavy snowfall during the winter left the ground in excellent shape when once seeding operations commenced and from the time weather conditions permitted the commencement of work until planting was completed, the farmers were a busy class. The area in wheat is not much larger than last year, but oats, barley and flax are much in excess of past records, the farmers deeming it wiser on account of the lateness of the season to put in a heavier proportion of the coarser grains. Reports appears that the acreage as compared with 1906 will show an increase of 12% in oats, 19% in barley and 13% in flax.

Around Akotoks, High River, Nanton, Claresholm and other winter wheat centers, if the present weather conditions continue, the winter wheat will be in head by the end of July.

The backward weather in the early part of May allowed the newly sown grain to get a firm root in the ground, and now with an abundance of moisture and warm weather the growth is remarkable. As a result, injury from droughts is practically over as the green crop covers the surface retaining the moisture required for its growth and preventing the too rapid evaporation which might otherwise take place.

Crops in Western Canada mature in one hundred days at the outside, and as the weather conditions have been ideal since seeding, and with spring wheat now from 14 to 18 inches above the ground, a full average crop is confidently expected.

In addition to the cheering prospects of this year's yield the farmers are to be congratulated on the fact that they still have in their granaries five million bushels of wheat from last year's crop which they are now disposing of at high prices.

The splendid yield of 90,000,000 bushels of wheat raised in 1906 in the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, together with the almost certain assurance that this year will see a considerable increase, is, as in the past, calling the attention of the world of the "Last Best West," and thousands from the United States and the agricultural districts of Europe are each month securing free grant lands or purchasing farms in the land which has proved itself peerless among the grain growing countries of the world.

"Sensible to the Last."

An old Scotch lady used to be attended by a doctor to whom she invariably gave a guinea when he went to see her. He had told the friends with whom she lived that her death would probably be sudden, and one day he was hurriedly sent for, as she appeared to have become unconscious. On his arrival he saw at once that the old lady was dead, and, taking hold of her right hand, which was closed, but not rigid, he calmly extracted from it the fee which she had provided for him, and as he did so he murmured: "Sensible to the last."

Very Handy.

"PROUD IN HER POVERTY."

Young Woman's Brave Answer to Insulting Landlord.

Frank P. Sargent, the United States commissioner of immigration, said one day in Washington:

"There is fine stuff in some of these poor people who come to our shores. I heard recently of a young Swedish woman. Brave, witty and honorable, she could bring splendid young Americans into the world. A short time after she arrived among us, her husband got out of work. Naturally, then, the rent fell behind. The landlord called for it one day in her husband's absence. He listened to the young woman's tale of misfortune, regarding the while her yellow hair, her clear blue eyes, her red mouth and white teeth. Suddenly, bending toward her, he said:

"Give us a kiss!'

"She drew back, and her blue eyes, as cold as ice, dwelt on him disdainfully.

"'No,' she said, 'my husband and I may be too poor to pay our rent, but we are not so poor that we can't do our own kissing.'"

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Parents Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We took her to three doctors but by this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Doctor No. 2 said that we had better take her to some eye specialist, as it was an ulcer. So we went to Oswego to doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone. We were nearly discouraged, but I thought we would try the Cuticura Treatment, so I purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had used Cuticura in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. Mrs. Frank Jones, R. F. D. No. 8, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y., Aug. 17, 1906.

Courage.

Three tired citizens—a lawyer, a doctor and a newspaper man—sat in a back room recently in the gray light of the early dawn. On the table were many empty bottles and a couple of packs of cards. At last all is silence a rat scurried across the hearth into the darkness beyond. The three men blinked their feet and looked et each other uneasily. After a long pause the lawyer spoke:

"I don't see what you fellows are thinking," he said; "you think I thought I saw a rat, but I didn't."

WOMEN WHO CHARM

Health Is the First Essential Toward Making a Woman Attractive.

MISS HULDA KUGHLER

MISS ELIZABETH WYNN

There is a beauty and attractiveness in health which is far greater than mere regularity of features.

A listless, irritable, and complaining woman always carries a cloud of depression with her; she is not only unhappy herself but is a damper to all joy and happiness when with her family and friends.

It is the bright, healthy, vivacious woman who always charms and carries sunshine wherever she goes.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging and that everything tires her; if her feminine system fails to perform its allotted duties, there is nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, and irregularities, causing constant misery and melancholia, she should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from native roots and herbs will dispel all these troubles. By correcting the cause of the trouble it cures where other treatment may have failed.

Miss Elizabeth Wynn, of No. 205 8th Avenue, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For months I suffered with dreadful headaches, pain in the back and severe hemorrhages. I was weak and out of sorts all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me when all other medicine had failed. I am proud to be just what I needed and quickly restored my health."

Miss Hulda Kughler, of No. 25, West 15th Street, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For months I was ill with an internal trouble. I suffered terrible agony, was nervous, irritable, and sick all the time. I took different medicines without benefit. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and within six months I was completely restored to health and I want to recommend it to every suffering woman."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions, backache, bloating (or flatulence), displacements, inflammation or ulceration; that bearing-down feeling, dizziness, indigestion, or nervous prostration may be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble is found and the quickest and surest method of cure established. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

MISSIONARIES CREATING A NEW KOREA

Taiku, Korea.—Picturesque, placid and pitiable, whitrobed but not angelic, Korea stands at the cross roads of the orient, a personification of the far eastern question. Religiously considered, the situation here is doubtless the most interesting in the world. Certainly this is the most promising and successful missionary field now before the eye of Christendom.

The contrast between Korea and Japan is this latter respect is marked. Across the strait, the missionaries are all concerned over the independence movement in the native church, real, fearful lest they should do or say something to offend the sensitive Japanese pride. Here, the missionary has nous of these problems; his one concern is how to visit all the localities that are calling for him, and how to find clmu to instruct all the catechumens awaiting him, and to receive into the church the men and women ready for membership since some churches can be visited only every three months or half yearly. In a word, here are missionary conditions more acutely ideal, and more nearly what the Christian in America think foreign missions to be, than in the more famous country of Japan.

Wiping a Nation Off the Earth.

If ever a country needed the consolations of religion, it is poor Korea. As a consequence, chiefly, of her own incapacity and official corruption, she has fallen into the hands of a powerful neighbor, who, apparantly, is systematically effacing all the manifestations of Korean national life and identity Her king is a prisoner, unable so much as to issue a pass to his own old unused palace, except as he obtains permission to do so from a Japanese functionary. Her laws are now made and administered by Japanese. Her government institutions are all managed by the latter. Even the semblance of self-government is being wrested from her feeble hand; while robbery, abuse, oppression, infanticide and even murder are the lot of her common people.

Into these intensely interesting and significant questions it is not the purpose of this article to enter. To indicate them, however, is essential, if conditions here are to be understood. For to their helplessness and misery, the people are turning to the American missionaries as their only friends and advisers. The king himself leans more heavily upon the protection and counsel of certain of the older American missionaries than upon the most trusted of Korean patriots. On one occasion, when a great plot was in process of execution, including an attack upon the palace, the king sought for the presence and help of three American missionaries, and while a mob of thousands bowled outside the palace walls and soldiers surrounded the imperial quarters, he madly clung—literally and physically clung—for protection to these three Americans.

The Missionary and Politics.

Like ruler, like people. I was inspecting this city—or mud village of 40,000 people, as you may choose to call it—with a young American missionary, when an old man came to him for counsel and help, his aged wife having been brutally attacked by Japanese. The poor missionary is at his wits' end. He will not meddle in politics. Whatever his sympathies, he dare not take sides on such questions, and so he is forever fending off the distressed and the persecuted, and bidding them endure their wrongs with Christian fortitude.

Already I have found illustrations of self-restraint and forbearance on the part of missionaries in the pursuit of their difficult role, that fill me with admiration. After hearing of the arrogance and excesses committed by the Japanese immigrants upon white foreigners, as well as upon Koreans, I asked a muscular big missionary, who looks as if he could administer the law, as well as the gospel, how he managed to get along. "For the sake of my work, I just give in. When a Japanese coolie bumps into me on the street and tries to knock me down, I simply say, 'Excuse me,' and step aside. A gentleman and his wife came to my house a few weeks ago in jinrickshas from the station. The fee should have been 80 sen each. He offered 25. The Japanese 'rickshaw men, knowing that he was a foreigner, asked a dollar apiece. When, at my advice, he refused to give it, those two coolies came into my parlor, took off their pipes and began to smoke. There they stayed until I paid them a dollar apiece."

The Doctor's Opportunity.

One phase of missions about which there are no two opinions is the medical work. Immediately upon landing in Korea from Japan I came in touch with this for the first time, because the Japanese have their own medical science, and there is practically no medical mission work, in the usual, sense, in that country. On the hillside as the traveler enters Fusan harbor, he sees flying a Red Cross flag, and this, he learns, floats over the hospital of the American Presbyterian mission. This is the only hospital in Fusan and it was the first fully equipped modern hospital ever established in Korea. It was started 13 years ago by Dr. Charles H. Irvin, of Ohio, who has ever since been the only physician in the hospital, and the only European doctor in Fusan.

The building would be counted small as hospitals go in the West, but it has half a dozen wards, with two, three or four beds each, an operating room, a convalescents' room and a dispensary, with waiting rooms for men and women, the sexes being separated in Korea. The only assistants are Korean whom Dr. Irvin himself has trained. When I visited the hospital I found each of the waiting rooms occupied by a group of patients. To the men, a venerable Korean evangelist, in wide born spectacles, the curious borne hair sweeping out of his ears, and a long flowing white robe, was talking religion. A Bible woman does a like service for the sick and women who visit the dispensary. In the convalescents' room I saw a young man who, afflicted with cataract of both eyes, had literally crawled over the mountainous part of a 300-mile journey, without having room for way, and spending more than two months on the trip. Dr. Irvin had cured him. In little more than 24 hours Dr. Irvin has treated 100,000 patients, and has performed more than 5,000 major operations.

The Orient As It is.

Coming to this city of Taiku, in cars made in Wilmington, Del., and drawn by a Philadelphia-made locomotive, I found the Orient in all its ancient picturesqueness. Port cities always show the touch of the West upon them, but Taiku has not so much as a dirtickaha, or hand cart for it to travel on. The streets are narrow lanes, lined with mud fences and houses. Each Korean house has its own compound, or enclosure. The houses themselves are very low and very small. The usual room is eight feet square and in this a whole family will live. As for furniture, there practically is no such thing. A chest of drawers will hold the family possessions, while others dangle from the rafters. A block of wood serves for a pillow—the Oriental sees nothing strange in Jacob's stony pillow at Bethel. The houses are thatched with straw, tied on with ropes. A village presents a dull gray appearance seen from any distance. Large, ugly dogs, noisy but cowardly, scamper in the streets waiting for the inevitable day when they will find their way onto their master's tables. Taiku is surrounded by a wall, in the fashion of all Korean cities; but the day I arrived the Japanese had begun to tear this down, after standing for centuries.

The American Colony Abroad.

On a commanding site outside the city of Taiku I found a settlement of American missionaries living in houses of mixed Korean and Western architecture. Formerly some of them lived in native houses right down in the heart of the city, where, I do not hesitate to say, no white man, missionary or otherwise should ever live. I quite agree with the contention that a missionary should get as much of possible to his people; but not at the price of discomfort, darkness, depression, dirt and disease which are inseparable from residence in a real native house in a crowded Korean community.

These missionaries at Taiku are all Presbyterian, except the French priest, who has an imposing European church on the edge of the city. The Presbyterians, North, South and Canadian, and the Methodists, North and South, and the Roman Catholics, have a monopoly of the mission work in Korea, except a modest enterprise by the Australian Presbyterians and the Anglicans. All the missionaries in Taiku are young people; yet some are called "old missionaries," which reminds one of the fact that all mission work in Korea is of comparatively recent development. It is only 20 years since Korea was "the hermit nation," and 20 years since the arrival of the first missionary. Each year sees the beginning, the number of converts has been doubling, and the additions to the Protestant churches of this present year are given at 20,000. Korea, with 12,000,000 population, and 200 missionaries, has nearly, if not quite, as many Protestant converts as Japan, with 45,000,000 population and more than 600 missionaries.

The little colony of nine Americans here—including one unmarried woman, Miss Cameron, who lives alone in a little house overrun with rats and mice, of which she is afraid!—consists of Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Adams, Dr. and Mrs. W. O. Johnson, Rev. and Mrs H. M. Brunn, Rev. E. F. Macfarland and Rev. Walter J. Erdman. They have imparted somewhat of an American air to their compound (every mission residence is surrounded by a fence or wall, and is called a compound) by setting out fruit trees and flowers from the homeland, so that they have apples, and peaches, strawberries, etc. They exchange plants and cuttings with their neighbor, the French priest. From him they obtained their strawberries, which proved to be bread upon the waters, for last year every one of the priest's plants perished and he was obliged to get a fresh start from which he had given to the Americans.

Re-Making a Nation.

A buster lot of missionaries than these I have not yet seen; most of them are engaged chiefly in country work, itinerating for weeks at a time among the villages. Down in Taiku I visited the mission's primary school, where a hiv of gaily dressed youngsters were crowded in a native house, studying their lessons at the top of their lungs, and swaying to and fro as they studied. In another little native house I found Mr. Adams teaching the beginnings of a higher education to 25 Korean young men, one of them, by the way, with their hair up, in token that they are married. There is practically no modern education in Korea except that given by the missionaries. The latter are spreading with this desire and the opportunity for an education throughout the country, and many say that this will be the means of preserving the national identity.

So general is the belief that the influence of Christian schools, churches and literature may help Korea to free herself after centuries of ignorance, corruption and oppression, that I have been told by other than missionaries that the Japanese government is backing a Buddhist propaganda and organizing a new native religion, largely to counteract the widespread acceptance of Christianity. The missionaries are alert to keep the churches from being used for political purposes. The Koreans, for example, not long ago established more than 1,000 patriotic societies, which they called "Y. M. C. A.s" and the officials of the association had to secure an imperial edict correcting the abuse.

The missionaries have a thousand Protestant and a thousand Roman Catholic adherents in Taiku. The church of the former is simply a primitive native house, enlarged again and again, until more than 500 persons can crowd into it for the weekly service. It looks scarcely large enough to hold 100, American fashion, but the Koreans sit cross-legged on the floor and crowd closely together. The women are separated from the men by a curtain, and in church they remove the cloak which ordinarily conceals their faces. This particular church, like all others in Korea, is entirely self-supporting. Mission funds are here not used for the churches, but entirely for medical, educational and evangelistic work.

HOW COOPERATION OF THE PEOPLE OF A COMMUNITY WINS.

STICKING TOGETHER COUNTS

Illustration of Some of the Good Things in Cleanliness as Found in Some Agricultural Districts.

Often is heard protest against what is called clannishness among foreigners who become citizens of the United States. It is complained that they carry old-country ideas with them to the new land, and refuse to mingle with other than their own nationality. In defense of these foreigners who are thus charged, it is but fair to say that many of them labor under the disadvantage of not understanding the language which their own class demands as associates. It will be observed that in one or two generations conditions change and the children of these foreigners become thoroughly Americanized.

It would be well if some of the traits of clannishness that are manifest in foreign colonies be generally practiced throughout the United States. In fact an effort was made to colonize land in Missouri with a progressive class of German citizens. The events immediately following the effort, the loss of one shipload of immigrants and the subsequent sufferings of the survivors, is a matter of history. But undaunted hundreds of those who at that time sought homes in the new country gained for themselves enviable places in the annals of American history, and they founded communities that may well be held up as models worthy to be copied. In Gasconade county, Missouri, a large colony of these people sought homes. There they tilled the soil and cultivated vineyards. Following the example of one of our religious belief, a highly moral, hard-working people, and their aim was to make homes for themselves and their progeny. To-day in Gasconade county there is more uvidecus wealth, of nature and harmony among the people than can be found in any like area of the United States.

The thought behind the colony it was recognized that if progress be made that the wealth produced by members should be retained. Mills were gradually built for the convenience of the grain into flour, wine presses were found on almost every homestead, and towns were built. Among the first institutions established were schools and churches, and these to-day are prominent factors in the molding of the character of the people.

It was one of the rules of the colony to assist one another. Each one in the building of himself and his family, realized that it was to his advantage to patronize his neighbor. Thus when the town was founded and stores opened, it was made a rule that these stores be patronized by the storekeeper he allowed a fair profit for the goods he sold. Tailor shops, boot and shoe makers, soap makers, and even the brawers of beer found their customers solely among the members of the colony. Although St. Louis was within a few hours' ride, the members of the colony considered that the dollars kept in each little town instead of being spent in St. Louis meant much for the advancement of the place. As years passed by members of the colony became prosperous. Families were added to families, children married, additional homesteads were secured and there was a thorough cooperation among all towards making life agreeable and giving each member of the community a means of acquiring a competency. One of the early undertakings was the building of macadamized roads. These roads to-day are kept in the best of condition and have proved a matter of economy to the county. Schools and churches, which at first were roughly built, have been replaced with magnificent edifices which are sources of pride to the residents of the community. Some of the small business places of 40 or 50 years ago have grown to be important marts of commerce. In fact all residents of the community are independent, and a few of them are wealthy, as wealth is counted. How successful they have been is shown by the absence of paupers in this county and the sum total of public charges, neither is there any great expense as to maintaining a county jail.

The community is but one of many in the Mississippi valley and throughout the west. Such communities have been built up solely by the simple adherence to cooperation among members of the colony and to the golden rule trade principle. Members realized that every dollar earned in the community and then spent in some place robbed the community of so much wealth, and that this dollar ceased to be a factor in increasing the importance and progress of the place. In these communities are generally located flouring mills. The output of these mills finds local sale and the surplus is sent to the markets to bring back money for such commodities. It appears that if the simple economical methods of many classes of citizens of foreign birth were to be practiced more generally by people residing in various agricultural communities of the United States, it would be wholesome and that those communities would make greater progress. The practice that has grown up of patronizing other than home institutions has elements of evil that are well worthy of careful study. In these years of progress the inclination to economize in small things and to save a penny by deciding against the large cities often results in heavy losses to the people. Yet there is an undercurrent at work, an awakening to the importance of the people of every community more closely cooperating for the advancement of the interests of all.

OPPORTUNITIES NEAR HOME.

Progressive Towns Offer Excellent Advantages for Young Men.

Students in sociology have recently expressed pessimistic views as to chances for the success of young men of country districts. There has been no denying of the fact that the farm affords a splendid opportunity for those inclined towards a pastoral life, but it is maintained that of recent years conditions preclude any great chances for the average young man to succeed in the average business vocation. That is that the channels for the development are being made more narrow year after year through the formation of corporations and trusts for the control of various industries. In other words, the centralization of business is considered detrimental to the pursuing of business in mercantile lines on a small scale.

This subject is open to wide discussion. Cities and towns of the United States are rapidly building up. The population of the country is increasing wonderfully. With this increase in population new opportunities present themselves for the exercise of intelligent endeavor. The towns, particularly of the west, are embryo cities, and the little village of to-day will be the large city a quarter century hence. Almost every town affords the progressive young man a chance for business success. Opportunities are plentiful for those who have the foresight to discover them. Towns are built up where are certain natural advantages and their growth largely dependent upon the territory that they can draw support from, or upon some particular advantage that they may possess favorable to manufacturing along certain lines. The opportunities for young men are to some extent ranged by the life and progress of the towns. Heads of families look forward to the time when their sons may enter into business or professional life. Thus of kinship are strong and few parents care to drive their sons and daughters far away from them. In this is discovered a reason why residents of a rural district would take more than ordinary interest in the home town. The more important of the towns offer to-day excellent opportunities for the young men of the neighborhood engaging in business in it. In thousands of cities and towns of the United States the leading business men to-day are the boys who were farmers' sons a quarter or a half century ago. In modest ways they started in business in the home town, and with the progress of the town developed as business men. The opportunities that were opened to these youths are still open to the youths of to-day, but remember that many of these men would not have been the great business men they are to-day only for the fact the towns where they located were progressive places which gave the opportunity to succeed.

COMMON SENSE ECONOMICS.

Simple Principles for Application in Everyday Affairs.

He who aims to be fair toward his neighbor will not deny him the opportunity to make an honest living. The day laborer should be as well rewarded, according to his work, as is the merchant or the banker.

Merchants are shortsighted when they will order poisons or other vegetables by the carload from another town when right in their neighborhood farmers have just as good potatoes to sell, and perhaps at a lower price. No use in paying the commission man a percentage in a case like this.

From fruit-growing sections year after year reports come as to the rotting of the crops on account of the poor transportation facilities, or rather because of the high rates to pay prices sufficient to pay for gathering. Here is an opportunity for the manufacturer of local enterprise. Why not start small drying and canning establishments to use up the surplus fruit? Such establishments could be profitably conducted, and operated with benefit to all the people of the community.

There is little economy for the storekeepers to keep on their shelves goods that are likely to grow out of date. Of course it is unwise to attempt to sell all such goods at actual cost, and give the people of the neighborhood the benefit of lowest prices.

People are interested in prices of goods. The wise merchants fully appreciate the value of the home paper as a medium of intercourse with their customers. Well-written advertisements and the naming of prices attract attention, for the average person reads the paper closely and carefully always wants to know the cost.

One dollar circulated in a community is worth to it $60 circulated in some other place. A district is made wealthy only by retaining in it the dollars that are earned within it, or which may be brought to it through commerce.

Sporting Gossip.

They usually beat us playing golf, as the fate of Byers revealed at the amateur championship, but the British lahers are taking up one by one the methods of America in conducting tournaments. Only the 60-hole qualified in a preceding 36-hole round could start in the recent open championship at Holyoke, the innovation being based on American idea, and now the five clubs that rule the game end the amateur championship abroad have taken to the "bowl" out the starters in that competition. The delegates were instructed at St. Andrew's to get the opinion of their clubs on two suggestions. One is to limit the amateur championship to match players; the other to have a qualifying medal play, round. The delegates will come to the next annual meeting, which will be held at Sandwich during the amateur championship, prepared to vote on the two propositions. The action they take will influence the amateur championship of 1909, for they do not rush things over there. There were 200 entries at St. Andrew's, and there will be as many at Sandwich next May, so that the necessity of a weeding out is apparent. To permit only the scratch players of clubs to enter will hardly be feasible, for the base of championship is the puffed-up scratch players from small and easy links, who would get six or eight strokes at a good course. The qualifying round disposes of these misguided candidates and leaves it a question of golfers competent to wagu u good fight for the title. To adopt a qualifying round will take the wind from the sails of certain leaders in American golf legislation who have fought the preliminary scoring idea for all they were worth in 1908 they prevailed, and our amateur championship of that year was at match play game, and a dreary tournament it was for the first two days. The many changes in our method of handling the championship for nearly a year has passed without some different plan being tried—have been due to the efforts of them in match play enthusiasts to kill off the qualifying play round. S. Y. Hoobary, of Philadelphia, has done more than any other committeeman to have the qualifying round retained. He has supported it through thick and thin for ten years as the most practical way of weeding out a cumbersome number of entries. The argument that "they arrange matters better abroad" will be lost to the American malcontents outside the Britishers take up a qualifying round.

attracted attention with the Williamsport, Pa., independent club in 1902. In 1903 Pittsburg signed him as a substitute and farmed him out part of the season. His rapid development made him a regular member of the Buffalo team for 1904 from which club he was purchased by the Pittsburg club in the fall of 1904. Manager Stallings' opinion young Clymer was the best outfielder developed in the season of 1904. He made him an extra on the Pittsburg club for which club he played good ball throughout the 1905 season. In 1906 he broke in with the spring uud was out of the game for most of the season. This season he has been with the former Pittsburg club and bes to date played good ball.

"Kid" Elberfeld has had so many fights on the ball field that he cannot remember just which was the most exciting. But he can recall the smallest experience, for which he was canned—at least, it was fnuny for the "Kid."

It was while the "Kid" was in the American association with the Milwaukee team.

Then the umpire was named Brennan, and hu was giving the "Kid's" team all the worst of the decisions in close game. In the ninth inning, with two out and Elberfeld's team one run ahead, Brennan called a runner safe at second after the "Kid" had slid through the mnd and tagged him.

Elberfeld set up with his hands in the mud, and when Brennan yelled "safe" the "Kid" grabbed a handful of mud and threw it right into Brennan's mouth. He did not wait to be put out of the game, but went right to the clubhouse, where he watched the game for ten days.

Washington Gossip

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—The Russian embassy closed the season here when Ambassador and Baroness Rosen, with their household staff, left for Magnolia, Mass., the other day where they will pass the summer. The departure of Baron and Baroness Rosen has a particular significance at this time, as they do not expect to return to Washington for perhaps a year.

They purpose passing the winter in St. Petersburg that their only daughter, Baroness Elisabeth Rosen, may make her debut in that capital. This young woman, who is just 17 years of age, will be presented at court early in the winter under particularly brilliant auspices.

The young baroness is a petite blonde. She is perhaps the most carefully reared girl of her age in America, as her education has been conducted along exactly the same lines as though she had never left her native land. Five hours each day have been devoted to hard study, exclusive of the time devoted to music and art. The various modern languages being considered the necessary equipment of a young girl of her rank, are not regarded as accomplishments, although the literature of three or four languages is a part of Baroness Elisabeth's recreation.

She has taken no part in juvenile society, wherein she would be warmly welcomed by Miss Ethel Roosevelt, Miss Helen Taft, Miss Bacon and other young people of the administration families, and has made no friends of her own age in the two years' residence in America. Her constant companions are her mother, her governess and an American friend some ten years her senior, who was originally retained as a social secretary.

At Magnolia, where the schoolroom regime is slightly relaxed, Baroness Elisabeth joins her parents and members of the staff at the midday breakfast, always a feature of the embassy life, but never joins her parents' dinner.

Her English is particularly pure and pleasing, with what no doubt will be described in Europe as an American accent. French is the language of the home, and in that tongue her accent is distinctly Parisian. She also speaks Italian and German fluently.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

AUTHOR OF DRAGO DOCTRINE

Dr. Luis Maria Drago, the author of the Drago doctrine, for which the United States is contending before the peace conference at The Hague, a doctrine which is intended to protect the nations of South and Central America from being dragooned by European powers into paying debts that may be often of a bogus nature, was totally unknown to fame a few years ago. He was minister of foreign affairs in the Argentine cabinet when the demobstration was made against Venezuela by Germany, Britain and Italy. Stirred up by the high-handed methods employed Dr. Drago drew up this proposition with a view to having the Argentine minister at Washington submit it to the American policy government:

"The only principle which the Argentine Republic maintains, and which it would with great satisfaction see adopted in view of the events in Venezuela, is the principle that there can be no more territorial expansion in America on the part of Europe, nor any oppression of the peoples of this continent because an unfortunate financial situation may compel some one of them to postpone the fulfillment of its promises. In other word, the principle which she would like to see recognized is that the public debt cannot occasion armed intervention nor even the actual occupation of the territory of American nations by any European power.

"Practically all of the Central American republics are debtor nations, and leniency is needed with these smaller countries, as their resources are limited. This is known by the creditors of foreign countries when they permit these nations to run into debt to them; therefore if creditors would recover let them bring the erring nation itself to trial before the supreme court."

WINS WITH "UNWRITTEN LAW"

Sydney Emanuel Mudd is the little horse by the congressman from the Fifth district of Maryland; a Republican who has contrived to represent in the national congress six countries of his state and four wards of the city of Baltimore for the past ten years. He also has been reelected for two years more, beginning next December. This is something of more than ordinary achievement, considering that Mr. Mudd lives in a rock-ribbed Democratic state; a state that was more intensely southern in sentiment in the early portion of the civil war even than some of the states that seceded; a state that has remained loyal to the Democratic party and that even in the presidential charity of Roosevelt failed to move into the Republican column, while such a state as Missouri was going over for the first time in half a century.

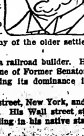
But Congressman Mudd does not owe to his membership in congress alone his claims to fame.

For three days recently Representative Mudd defended Mrs. Bowie end her son Hubert, his old neighbors in his home town of LaPlata, on the charge of killing Hubert Posey. His defense was absolutely unique. It was the "unwritten law" pure and simple.

"This murder was justified by the 'unwritten law,' he told the jury. Here was a man who ruined the daughter of this woman at the bar; the slayer of the young man defendant at this bar. Destroy the morality, the sanctity of our womanhood, the honor of the mother, the wife, the daughter, and what have you left? I claim that the unwritten law, which meets out swift and terrible vengeance to the lustful destroyer, is an adequate defense for these defendants."

With the words of the fiery, chivalric southern statesman ringing in their ears the jury walked out, tarried five minutes only and walked in again with a verdict of acquittal. The townspeople acclaimed the verdict. As for Mudd he can go to congress as often as he likes.

YOUNG STAGE GENIUS



Granville Barker of London, who has been offered a salary of $50,000 a year to act as stage director of the so-called Millionaires' theater in New York, is unquestionably one of the most brilliant young men connected with the theater in England. He was born in London in 1877, and made his first stage appearance at Harrogate in 1891. He is an admirable actor, a playwright of whom large things are expected, and one of the most capable stage managers in England. A large part of his fame is in Elizabeth Robins' play, "Votes for Women," recently given at the Court, was adjudged one of the best effects ever seen on the English stage.

In partnership with J. R. Vedrenne, Barker has made the Court theater the artistic center of London's theatrical world. Bernard Shaw's plays are the stock fare at this playhouse and will be at the Savoy when Vedrenne and Barker take over that famous London playhouse in September—but pieces by Ibsen, Hauptmann, the Greek dramatists, and modern playwrights also have been given.

One of Granville Barker's own plays, "The Voysey Inheritance," made something of a sensation when given at the Sloane Square house, and his other plays, "The Weather Hen," and "The Marrying of Anne Leete," are more than commonly workmanlike.

FIRST OKLAHOMA GOVERNOR

Charles N. Haskell, who has been nominated for the governorship of Oklahoma by the Democrats, is an Ohio man. As the Democrats are largely in the majority in Oklahoma, the nomination is considered equivalent to election. Eight years ago he was a candidate for governor of Ohio in the Democratic convention that nominated John R. McLean. As McLean won the nomination by a majority of one on the first ballot, the shoeing of Haskell was considered exceptionally good.

After the convention Mr. Haskell did not view the Ohio field as an inviting one for a man who wanted to be governor of a state and he went west.

A man of tremendous energy he set at once to become powerful in the new state and his victory in the recent primary was a surprise to many of the older settlers who did not think that Haskell could win.

Haskell is about 46 years old, a lawyer and a railroad builder. He grew up in the northwestern part of Ohio near the home of Former Senator Brice, and belonged to the Brice political family during its dominance in state politics.

For a time Mr. Haskell had an office in Wall street, New York, and taught the eastern financiers a few tricks of the trade. His Wall street stay was short, however, as was a period of railroad building in his native state.

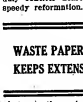
What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner



NO INFALLIBLE SYSTEM TO STOP BANK THIEFS

NEW YORK.—Chester Runyan, the absconding paying teller of the Cedar street branch of the Windsor Trust company, makes it plain once more than in spite of every effort on the part of bankers there is no really effectual safeguard against the occurrence of such thefts. No matter how intricate may be a bank's system, there is no getting around the fact that in the long run employes have to be trusted. If they choose to abscond with the funds in their charge or secure any part of the bank's money for their own uses by juggling of accounts there is no infallible system to prevent them from doing so.

In so far as it is possible, however, bankers take every precaution to guard themselves against thieving employes. Foremost among the methods employed is the surety or bonding system for employes. Not meny years ago an employer who desired a security from an employe simply required the latter to bring a personal bond from some friend. Banks or other business houses adhering to the old personal surety system are considered far behind the times. One of the most useful phases of the activity of a surety company is the watchfulness it exercises over young men whom it has bonded who show tendencies to stray from the straight road of attention to business. After such an erring youth has been seen by some detective or investigator frequenting race tracks or gambling dens he receives a summons to call at the office of the surety company. There one of the officers gives him a serious "talking to," and it often happens that the young man's escapades have been of an innocent nature, and he leaves the office with duly contrite heart, resolved upon speedy reformation.

WASTE PAPER OF GOTHAM KEEPS EXTENSIVE CHARITY

GREAT fortunes, it is said, have been founded on a slender basis as a common pin; but it hes remained for the Salvation Army to finance a great charity with waste paper. Experments in running its industrial home without cash contributions were so successful in several scattered buildings on West Thirtieth street that the army felt justified in erecting, at a cost of $100,000, its new five-story building on West Forty-eighth street, which was opened recently. Here the army handles old newspapers, megazines, letters and books.

Wagons are sent all over the city to collect waste paper of all kinds from private houses and offices, handle it into bags and convey it to the home. Men out of employment separate the paper according to grade. The sorting is done on the second floor, and the paper is thrown down chutes to the main floor, where it is baled and shipped to mills, in which most of it is reduced to pulp and rolled out again into coerse wrapping paper. Old books are retained for ewhile to give dealers and antiquarians a chance to bid on them before they are sent to the macerating vats, and occasionally the collectors get discarded furniture, which also is sold.

In addition to the paper-sorting equipment there is ample room in the building for housing the workers. There are a large dormitory, a commodious dining-room and a reading, clothes and exchange room, all fitted up according to the most approved methods. Shower baths and separate basins, with open plumbing fixtureb, are provided by the score. In addition to feeding and lodging the 250 inmates, it is expected to pay them a moderate wage.

BIG BUILDINGS WEIGHED BEFORE THEY ARE BUILT

IF one goes through the offices of any of the big skyscraper construction companies these days he may see a roomful of young men all figuring away in interminable sheets of paper. The layman is astonished to learn that they are weighing skyscrapers, and that the tallest and most extensive buildings, up to the thousands of tons, are carefully weighed before they are built. The evolution of the tall building has brought forth remarkable engineering specialization along many lines, but none more noteworthy than in the case of the skyscraper weighers, for this weighing of the skyscrapers is no easy job. One cannot dump the material, like a pound of sugar, into a pair of scales and declare there is so much weight, because, in the first place, the scale has never been invented that will weigh 100,000 tons, and, in the second place, the material is not on hand. A skyscraper must be weighed before it is built—before the first caisson is sunk for the foundation or the first stone column is set up. The scales are pencil and paper, balanced by specially trained brains. And, finally, the operation of weighing a modern tall building may cover, when completed, as many as 20 or 40 typewritten pages. The weight of New York's largest skyscraper, now building in Cortlandt street, is estimated at 86,000 tons.

SCANT BATHING SUITS PROPER STREET GARB

IT is not a penal offense for a pretty young woman, with shapely limbs, to walk the streets of Rockaway Beach clad in a bathing suit, cut low at the top and high at the bottom unless "the act be done with criminal intent." This, after an exhaustive research into all the authorities, is the official finding of Corporation Counsel Ellison.

Mr. Ellison, in addition to being a great legal authority, has considerable knowledge for feminine beauty.

First Deputy Police Commissioner O'Keefe of Brooklyn and then Commissioner Bingham himself gave up the problem of the fair bathers.

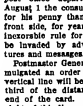
In the complaint of the taxpayers, which was sent to Mr. Ellison, this statement was made:

"The custom of our summer people parading through our streets in their bathing suits, is a thing that must be stopped at once, is the sentiment of all classes of citizens, for it is something awful to see between 5,000 and 10,000 at one time going through our streets without any concern."

"The only question," Mr. Ellison says, "is whether a bathing suit is, under the circumstances, a crime. If not, the police should not interfere. They are not the censors of public morals, and ordinarily a person can dress as he or she pleases, so long as the attire worn is not a disguise or a breach of public decency. To constitute a crime in such a case there must be criminal intent upon the part of the wearer. Wearing a suitable bathing attire in a seaside resort, where bathing is almost universal, is not essentially a crime."

TO BUILD SUMMER HOME FOR ARISTOCRATIC CATS

A LARGE number of prominent society women here have banded together to provide a suitable and attractive home for cats.



It is intended to purchase a tract of land and build a handsome home if possible—if not, a house fitted for the purpose will be bought—to be fitted up as a boarding house for handsome and expensive cats belonging to persons who regularly leave the city and must take their pets along.

Among those interested in promoting the scheme are Mme. Elcanore de Remusat Guyx, Miss Mary A. Peet, Miss Nathlie Townsend, Mrs. Laura Anderson, Mrs. A. L. Barber, Miss Mary Robinson, Mrs. Austin, Mrs. Krouse, Mrs. Solberg, Mrs. Henry L. West, the last named being president of the Cat club. The wife of Justice Harlas, who owns three handsome Maltese cats worth $1,000 each, is also greatly interested.

Miss Robinson says she was compelled to stay at home all last summer because she had no place at which to board her six cats, all short haired, for which she is greatly attached. The previous summer she put them out to board while she passed six months in California, but the one place available at that time has since been closed.

Many of the other women interested have carried their pets on long trips rather than leave them behind to be neglected.

MESSAGES ON EACH SIDE OF NEW POSTAL CARDS

A NEW departure in postal cards has been decided upon by the post office department. Beginning August 1 the consumer will get more for his penny than heretofore. The front side, that each correspondent has incorrorible rule for the address, will be invaded by advertisements, pictures and messages.

Postmaster General Meyer has promulgated an order to this effect. A vertical line will be placed about one-third of the distance from the left end of the card. The space to the right of this line will be reserved for the address, and the remaining portion of the front side may be devoted to details of how all the children are, or any other of the things that heretofore have been confined to the back side.

For years people have been sending in the United States from foreign countries postal cards and post cards with messages written on the front as well as on the back of the cards, although in this country this advantage has been denied the users of government postal cards. Some months ago the United States postal laws and regulations were amended so as to give that privilege to buyers of post cards, but such concession was not made applicable to postal cards. Today's ruling will remedy this inconsistency and so prevent further confusion. A very thin sheet of paper may be attached, if it completely adheres to the card and such a paster may bear both writing and printing. Heretofore two cents in postage was required if this was done. Advertisements, illustrations or writing may appear on the back of the card and on the left third of the front.

Postal cards bearing particles of glass, metal, mica, sand, dust, or other such substances are declared to be unmailable, except when inclosed in envelopes or when treated in such a manner as will prevent the objectionable materials from being rubbed off or injuring the hands of persons handling the mails.

NEW BUREAU TO HANDLE MATTER OF FAR EAST

WITH the view of placing all diplomatic and consular matters relating to Japan and China in the hands of officials familiar with conditions in the orient, the state department has perfected the organization of the "Far Eastern Bureau," which will have charge of all correspondence and preliminary treaty negotiations with the oriental governments.

This new departure is more or less in the nature of an experiment, which, if it proves satisfactory, may lead to the organization of similar bureaus to conduct diplomatic and consular correspondence and negotiations with the Central and South American republics, European and Asiatic countries.

Huntington Wilson, third assistant secretary of state, who, for a number of years served as secretary to the American legation and embassy at Tokio, is in charge of the new bureau. His two assistants are Percival Reinstaman of Pennsylvania, formerly student interpreter attached to the American legation at Peking and Beaman Dexter, deputy consul general at Canton and Dalny, and William Phillips of Massachusetts, formerly private secretary to Ambassador Choate at London and for the last two years second secretary of the American legation at Peking.

Another important duty which will devolve upon the newly-organized bureau will be to consider the numerous petitions and diplomatic "notes" which are annually presented to the state department suggesting changes in the existing treaty between the United States and China.

HAYWOOD IS IS A FREE MAN

THE JURY AT BOISE AFTER DELIBERATING TWENTY-ONE HOURS ACQUITS.

The First Ballot Stood 8 to 4 in Favor of Defendant—Wild Scenes in the Court—Cases against Others are to be Pushed.

Boise, Idaho, July 29.—Into the bright sunlight of a beautiful Sabbath morning, into the stillness of a city drowsy with the lazy slumbers of a Sunday, William D. Heywood, defendant in one of the most noted trials involving conspiracy and murder that the country has ever known, walked a free man, acquitted of the murder of Former Governor Frank Steunenberg.

The probability of a verdict of acquittal in the case of the secretary-treasurer and acknowledged leader of the Western Federation of Miners had been freely predicted since yesterday when Judge Fremont Wood read his charge, while was regarded as strongly favoring the defense in its interpretation of the law of conspiracy, circumstantial evidence and the corroboration of an accomplice who confessed.

It was freely predicted that in the event of Haywood's acquittal the state would abandon the prosecution of his associates, Chas. H. Moyer, the president of the federation, and Geo. A. Pettibone, of Denver. Statements from counsel and from Governor Gooding lend this view of the situation. Gov. Gooding said:

"The verdict is a great surprise to me, and I believe to all citizens of Idaho who have heard or read the evidence in the case.

"I have done my duty. I have no regret as to any action I have taken and my conscience is clear. As long as God gives me strength I shall continue my efforts for government by law and for organized society."

"The state will continue a vigorous prosecution of Moyer and Pettibone and Adams and Simpkins when apprehended. There will be no relenting, hesitation or retreat."

Application will be made to Judge Wood to admit Moyer and Pettibone to bail, and it was said tonight that in the case of Moyer, against whom the state is admitted to have a small contingent of the evidence in the case, a favorable consideration would not be unexpected.

EXCURSION RATES TO CONTINUE.

Railways to Grant Them in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

New York, July 25.—The policy of granting railroad excursion rates for special occasions in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois will be continued. This was decided at a meeting of representatives of the trunk lines concerned Wednesday. Recent legislation in the states mentioned fixed the maximum passenger rate at two cents per mile and it had been thought possible that the railroads would retaliate by making the maximum also the minimum rate, and so abandoning the frequent fall excursions for which a mileage of less than two cents has been charged in past years.

SURVIVORS ACCUSE HAWSE

THIRD OFFICER OF COLUMBIA IS ACCUSED OF CRUELTY.

Rescued Passengers Also Say His Attack on Captain of San Pedro is Entirely Unjust.

San Francisco, July 26.—The Bulletin says that Third Officer Hawse, of the wrecked steamer Colombia, whose sworn report of the disaster, filed with the federal inspectors, charged Capt. Hansee, of the San Pedro, with failing to aid in the rescue of the stricken passengers, is now charged by survivors who occupied the same boat with him with conduct quite cruel thae that specified by him in his formal report.

The charges made against Hawse are:

1. Refusing to give his coat to an unconscious woman rescued from the water in a freezing condition, his remark being, "My coat is my own."

2. Ordering a passenger struck a crippled man who he believed occupied too much space in the lifeboat.

3. Striking a lady in the face when shouts of the boat and refusing to assist in dragging men and women from the water.

Miss Lulu Hansee, of Minneapolis, was the most emphatic in her statements. The passengers are said to be further declare that the attack made upon Capt. Hansen by Hawse was entirely unjust.

Capt. Barmingham, United States supervising inspector of hulls and boilers for this district, Thursday began an investigation of the sinking of the Columbia.

Latest figures give the number lost in the disaster as 93.

HELD IN SLAVERY 22 MONTHS.

Italians Tell Story of Peonage on a Mississippi Plantation.

St. Louis, July 25.—The story told by Arseza Amedeo and Guiborel Olindo, tiotless, who said they had been held in slavery for 22 months on a Mississippi plantation and had just escaped, caused United States District Attorney Blodgett Wednesday to initiate an investigation into the alleged peonage.

According to the story told by the Italians through an interpreter, there is a peonage colony of 12 Italian families, consisting of 60 persons, on a cotton plantation at Robleonville, Miss. They declared armed guards prevented any communication with persons outside the plantation, and any letters written were destroyed. Those who attempted to escape were fired upon and after being returned to the plantation were beaten with cowhide whips.

CHIEF FLATMOUTH DIES.

Chippewas Carry Out Tribal Death Ceremonies in Full Form.

Walker, Minn., July 26.—Flatmouth, head chief of the Leech lake band of Pillagers, a branch of the Chippewa tribe of Indians, died at the old agency near here Wednesday afternoon. The last ceremonies of the Chippewa were carried out in full form. As soon as it was known that the head chief was about to leave for the happy hunting grounds the medicine dance was started and continued for several days up to the time of Flatmouth's death. Boatloads of citizens of Walker and summer tourists flocked to the reservation to witness the ceremonies. While the droweleg of the dogs, the dog feast and other ceremonies were go'ng on in the extreme, the white visitors were much impressed with their solemnity.

RIOTING IN GHETTO OF PHILADELPHIA

YIDDISH WOMEN ATTACK SHOPS OF THE KOSHER BUTCHERS AND SACK THEM.

High Prices the Cause—Coal Oil and Acid Poured on the Meat and Windows Demolished—Many Are Clubbed and Arrested.

Philadelphia, July 26.—The Jewish quarter in the southern section of this city was the scene of many disturbances and incipient riots Thursday, following the efforts of Yiddish women to boycott kosher butchers who have increased the price of meats.

All through the Ghetto there were fierce outbreaks in which persons who attempted to patronize the stores were roughly handled. In several instances the stores were sacked and the meat destroyed. The women gathered in front of the stores and seized every person who entered.

Oil Poured on Meat.

The meat the customers had purchased was taken away from them and tossed in the streets after coal oil or acid had been poured over it. In three shops oil was poured over every piece of meat, the chippers blocks and counters were overturned and the windows in the stores were demolished.

The police of three districts were kept on the run answering riot calls and reserve squads had to be sent to their assistance.

As a result of the outbreaks 28 men and women were either sent to prison or held in bail to answer charges of assault and inciting to riot, and as many more were locked up for hearings on minor charges.

Police Forced to Use Violence.

Because most of the disturbers were women the police at first hesitated to use force in trying to disperse the mobs in front of the stores, but as the situation became more serious they were finally compelled to use severe measures and a number of men and women were sent to the hospital suffering from injuries received in resisting the officers. One was seriously hurt, however, and the authorities have the situation well in hand.

Late in the day a meeting was held in the center of the troublous district in which the disturbers were advised to use less strenuous methods, and to fight the butchers by refusing to buy meat or anything else in their stores. The butchers plan to retaliate by having the "shockets" cease killing chickens and poultry, as that those participating in the boycott cannot secure a supply of flesh from this source. After the meeting it was reported that a committee of women would go through the district and endeavor to destroy all meat, but the police took measures to prevent any such attempt, and it is believed there will be no further disturbances.

SIBLEY LAS IS UPHELD.

Missouri Statute Reducing Express Charges Declared Constitutional.

Omaha, Neb., July 27.—Judge W. H. Munger, in the federal court Friday handed down a decision holding that the Sibley law, passed by the last legislature, providing for a reduction of 25 per cent in express rates, is constitutional and denying the application of the express companies for a temporary injunction restraining the Nebraska railway commission from enforcing the law.

Burton, of Missouri; Chester Barrows, of New Jersey; Gen. W. T. Wilder, of Tennessee, and Patrick Coney, of Kansas.

MIRACLES AT KANKAKEE.

Several Persons Announce Themselves Healed at St. Anne's Shrine.

Kankakee, Ill., July 27.—Thousands of persons attending the ninth day session of the novena of the shrine of St. Anne Friday saw several persons arise in St. Joseph's church and announce that they had been healed of infirmities.

Miss Mary Pierce, 18 years old, of Delphi, Ind., said that she had been afflicted with paralysis for four years, during which time she had been unable to walk. She left the church without support. Miss Daisy Lamond, of Kankakee, almost blind for 12 years, said she was able to read without glasses at the close of the nine days of prayer.

George Neary, of Lost Nation, Ia., and Michael McCormick, of Kinsman, Ill., both said they had been cripples from childhood. They walked from the church and said it was the first time they had walked since infancy.

Thieves in Post Office Haul.

English, Ind., July 28.—The post office at Marengo, Ind., near here, was robbed early Wednesday of $1,000 in money and stamps. There is no clew to the thieves.

LAYS TROUBLE ALL TO TURKISH SPIES

ARMENIAN PRIEST GIVES NEW TWIST TO HUNCHAKIST BLACKMAIL PLOT.

To Discredit Patriots—Shows New York District Attorney Anonymous Letter in Which His Own Life is Threatened.

New York, July 27.—Rev. Levoet Martogassian, docs treasurer of the Hunchakist, the Armenian society which outsiders say has fallen from its high estate of patriotism to the practice of blackmail, gave Friday a new twist to the district attorney's investigation of the organization.

The priest had been subpoenaed to tell what he knew. This was to the effect that the present agitation, ostensibly directed by reputable Armenians against a band of assassins, was in fact inspired by the Turkish government whose hired spies systematically sought to discredit the patriotic Armenians in this country. The pastor of the Armenian Apostolic church had, he admitted, formerly been a member and the treasurer of the Hunchakist, but some time ago withdrew. He knew nothing of the murder of the rug merchant, Tavshanjian, who had refused to pay $10,000 for his life, and if extortion had been practiced he knew nothing of it. On the contrary, he told the district attorney that he, himself, was the object of persecution on the part of the Turkish government. Pressed to throw, if possible, light upon the workings of the secret society, the priest replied:

"You are a rich and powerful nation, and you can find out more than I can."

His Own Life Treated.

The priest brought with him a letter, not signed, in which a threat to his life was made. He turned it over to the district attorney.

After leaving Mr. Smyth's office Father Martogassian said:

"I am entirely innocent of these insinuations which have been made against me. All my troubles have been brought on by Turkish spies. There are 60 of them in this city and they are constantly hounding me.

"I never demanded money from anybody and have never gone to any wealthy Armenian for aid.

"The Turkish government is behind it all," he added. "It was in the interest of my own life I have been threatened many times and I intend to go to Police Commissioner Bingham and ask him for a permit to carry a revolver."

Authorities Are Active.

New York, July 25.—Actieg District Attorney Smyth eed en essistent ere doleg their best to probe deeply into the terroristic methods employed against wealthy Armenians to force them to contribute to the anti-Turkish movement now worked up by certain of their fellow countrymee.

That these revolutionist Armenians now, it appears, control the society called Hunchakist, do not stop at murder was proved by the shooting to death on Monday of T. S. Tavshanjian, the rich rug importer, in Union square.

Messrs. Smyth and Moeley have had several Armeelens before them and expect to examiee others Friday. Every witness so fer questioned has besought the district attorney's office to keep his name end the fect of his presence in the district attorney's office secret, so great is the fear among Armenians of the Hunchakist. The inquiry is, therefore, not a public one.

Plan Defensive Death Society.

The rich Armenians here are in great fear of their lives. Several have fled from the country. Coeversant with eastern methods of justice, they do not understand why the district attorney does not throw into prison a number of Armenians whose names they have given the authorities.

Some of the threatened men are even said to be considering a project to form a defense fund, form a rival society and exterminate all the blackmeilers and murderers. Others are much less aggressive and counsel yieldieg to the bleckmailers for the time being, and trusting to the district attorney's office to break up the system.

QUIET IN IRON RANGE COUNTRY.

Gov. Johnson Sees No Necessity for State Interference.

St. Paul, Minn., July 27.—Gov. Johnson returned Friday from the iron range country and Duluth where he went to look into the strike situation. When asked what he thought of the affair he said:

"Everything is quiet up there and so far as I could learn there is no immediate prospect that the state will have to interfere to keep things quiet. I did not see any necessity of state interference and hope there will not be any. What the future may bring forth I am unable to predict."

Three Woman Inherit Vast Fortuns.

Helena, Mont., July 25.—Three young women of this city, the Misses Bertha and Pauline Volker and Miss Kenton Kepner, have been apprised that after three years' litigation in German courts they have been recognised as the heiresses to the estate of their grandfather, valued at $40,000,000. The young women will go to Germany shortly to claim their fortune.

Is Pe-ru-na Useful for Catarrh?

Should a list of the ingredients of Peruna be submitted to any medical expert, of whatever school or nationality, he would be obliged to admit without reserve that each one of them was of undoubted value in chronic catarrhal diseases, and had stood the test of many years' experience in the treatment of such diseases. THERE CAN BE NO DISPUTE ABOUT THIS WHATEVER. Peruna is composed of the most efficacious and universally used herbal remedies for catarrh. Every ingredient of Peruna has a reputation of its own in the cure of some phase of catarrh.

Peruna brings to the home the COMBINED KNOWLEDGE OF SEVERAL SCHOOLS OF MEDICINE in the treatment of catarrhal diseases; brings to the home the scientific skill and knowledge of the modern pharmacist; and last but not least, brings to the home the vast and varied experience of Dr. Hartman, in the use of catarrh remedies, and in the treatment of catarrhal diseases.

The fact is, chronic catarrh is a disease which is very prevalent. Many thousand people know they have chronic catarrh. They have visited doctors over and over again, and been told that their case is one of chronic catarrh. It may be of the nose, throat, lungs, stomach or some other internal organ. There is no doubt as to the nature of the disease. The only trouble is the remedy. This doctor has tried to cure them. That doctor has tried to prescribe for them.

BUT THEY ALL FAILED TO BRING ANY RELIEF.

Dr. Hartman's idea is that a catarrh remedy can be made on a large scale, as he is making it; that it can be made honestly, of the purest drugs and of the strictest uniformity. His idea is that this remedy can be supplied directly to the people, and no more be charged for it than is necessary for the handling of it.

No other household remedy so universally adapted to the needs of the home has the principal active constituents, showing that Peruna invites the full inspection of the critics.

WHEN THE FISH HURDLE.

Man Wanted to Be Far Away From the Danger Spot.

Of course at this season the usual run of "fish stories" are going the rounds. But one relating to the hurdling prowess of bass and trout which was told in all seriousness the other night, takes first prize.

"Fish always go up stream in the springtime," said the fisherman, "and scorcely anything will keep the bass and trout from getting near the headwaters of a big creek. These two species to jump over a dam eight to ten feet high and continue their upstream journey.

"What was that you said?" remarked a friend, who also claims to be somewhat of an angler. The men repeated his assertion that he had seen fish jump over dams ten feet high, as well as there was no one present to deny the hurdling abilities of the fish, the only challenge coming from a skeptical wee e laugh by all hands.

"Well, I trust I will never be on the top of Niagara falls when one of those hurdling fish you speak of comes flying through the air and hits me in the small of the back," remarked the friend. That broke up the fish stories for that evening, but the man still insists that a fish can and does be hurdled by either a bass or trout.

WAITING FOR THE FUN.

Youngster Had Reason to Expect "Something Would Happen."

An old gentleman, rather portly and clad in a somewhat youthful suit of light gray flannel, sat on a bench in the park enjoying the sun, relates the Woman's Home Companion.

"What's the matter, sonny?" he asked a small urchin who lay on the grass just across the walk and stared intently. "Why don't you go and play?"

"Don't wanter," the boy replied.

"But it is not natural," the old gentleman insisted. "It is time for you to be out. Why don't you run about?"

"Oh, I'm just waitin'," the little fellow explained. "I just wanter see if I'll you get up. A men pateted that bench about fifteen minutes ago."

Another Variety.

The farmer met his son at the station.

"Back from college, eh, boy?" he drawled.

"Yes, dad," replied the youth, as he lit another cigarette, "and I tell you I am glad to get back. Been digging up Greek roots all the season."

The old farmer went over to the hardware store and bought a grubbing hoe.

"All right, my boy," he announced as he handed over the hoe; "you can change your exercise during the summer by digging up dogwood and sassafras roots."

Go Out to Welcome Bells.

Carlton was converted at the village of St. Keverne, Cornwall, on the arrival of a new peal of bells for the parish church. A large procession of villagers, headed by the local band, marched out to meet the bells, which were drawn by horses on four wagons. Men, women, and children carried flags and wreaths and wild flowers were laid on the bells.—London Graphic.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Pure Bred Cattle.

The auction sales of purs bred cattle are always very attractive features of the Minnesota State Fair. Town and country people alike throng the great amphitheatre when the beautiful cattle are brought into the arena to be knocked down (not literally) under the auctioneer's hammer. Whether a judge or animals or not everyone likes to see them. This year's sale of Hereford cattle will be in charge of Thomas Smith, better known to the breeders as "Tom Smith," of Crete, Ill. In a letter to the fair management he received yesterday Mr. Smith says that there will be about 45 head of registered Hereford cattle consigned for the Minnesota State Fair.

"We will have," says Mr. Smith, "sons and daughters and grandsons and grand-daughters of such sires as Perfixus Wilton 19th, who has stred more international champions than any other bull living, and also progeny of the 34,000 champion "Perfection" and his full brother.

"There will also be grandsons of "Pride of Evergreen," who stred the international champion "Woods Principal" G. W. Way & Son of New Sharon, Iowa, will send three yearling show bulls of Beau Brummel breeding, and J. C. Robinson & Son of Evansville, Wis., will have cattle on exhibition and will enter in the sale four animals. These breeders have "Pride of Levergreen" and Beau Lad' blood strong in their herd, and always make a good showing as well as topping the overnge in any sale they enter."

The Hereford sale is to take place on the afternoon of Wednesday, Sept. 4, of fair week.

Nearly Lynched.

St. Paul—Caged in a small barness room in a livery barn at Rice and Fuller streets Henry Holland, 117 Fuller street, and a young man known as Johnson were threatened with lynching at the hands of an infuriated mob who made desperate efforts to reach them and were only prevented by the work on the part of the police. Holland, assisted by Johnson, attempted to kidnap Holland's three-year-old daughter Helen from her mother, and succeeded in carrying her as far as the livery stable when the mob overtook them.

Holland was bodly bonten in spite of the efforts of the police before he was taken to the Ramsey county police station. Both he and Johnson were released on bail later in the evening.

Holland and his wife have not been living together for some time, Holland residing at 117 Fuller street while his wife with the child has been living at the home of Charles McGuire, a fraternal trarace. Holland made several attempts to secure the child and bnd threatened to carry her away.

Gold Watch Found.

Mankato—The gleam of gold attracted the attention of Mrs. William Koks when she examined the round in the stomach bush that she had pulled up on a lot adjoining her home in the eastern part of the city, which she had recently purchased. Close examination showed a gold watch, about which the fibrous roots of the shrub had interlwined. Save this piece was in good condition, nithough it had evidently lain where found for years. The initials "A. A. K." on the case have not yet led to thn clearing up of the mystery of how the watch happened to be there or its ownarship.

Body Found.

Brainerd—The body of John Collins, a helper at Cuyuna Range's foundry, was found in the Mississippi near the Laurel street bridge. The discovery was made by some boys who hauled the body ashore and notified the chief of police and the coroner. Collins was a man of irregular habits. Whether he fell into the river while under the influence of liquor or committed suicide is not known.

St. Paul—Lloyd E. Mowbirtz was yesterday discharged from bankruptcy by order of Judge Lochren in the United States district court.

Minneapolis—Sale of the entire police force of South Minneapolis is required to keep young men without proper wearing apparel from gambling in the Mississippi river.

Mankato—The badger in the city's zoo at Sibley Park has fallen a victim of the grants. He fought them hard, with the assistance of the park superintendent, who gave him sand to roll in and rubbed his fur in the nuisance, but all to no purpose. The gnats made great raw places on him and he finally died.

Mankato—Dr. W. K. Jacoby of Vernon Center passed through Mankato on his way to Chicago to enter the Pasteur institute. The other day he struck up acquaintance with a tramp and a dog that it was fighting with, and it bit him on the base of his thumb. Since then the dog is said to have developed rabies.

Mandota—The body of James Albert Strane, who had drowned on July 16, was recovered yesterday and identified by a brother. The body was found in the upper end of Pig's Eye lake, just above Highwood, by John and Albert Nroolnak, who were fishing.

Delia Plaine—At an exciting school election last evening at which 331 votes were cast, F. C. Irwin and Theodore Johnson were elected members of the board of education for three years, and Dr. F. J. Bohland was elected a member for one year.

Washington—O. B. Tona is appointed postmaster at Spring Grove, Houston county, vice T. I. Dealy, deceased.

A Big German Day.

St. Paul—Oct. 6 will be a red letter day for the St. Paul Germans, as Baron Harman Speck von Sternberg, the German imperial ambassador at Washington, will be in St. Paul, the guest of the Germans of the city. Consul Hans Grunew received a letter Monday from Baron von Sternberg in which the baron accepted the invitation of the German Central Bund of Minnesota to visit St. Paul Oct. 6, German day.

The idea of inviting the imperial ambassador was adopted at a recent meeting of the bund. An invitation to the baron accompanied by a letter from the council recommending that he accept it was sent to Washington.

The Carp Get Away.

Mankato—Game and Fish Warden Jordan has given up his seeming expedition at Lake Washington to rid the lake of carp. On the first haul of the net about a hundred huge carp were entangled, together with a number of big turtles. The turtles ripped the net to such an extent that only twenty-nine of the carp were landed, and it was impossible to use the net again until repairs could be made. The fish that were taken out weighed 200 pounds. Mr. Jordan will go after the carp again when conditions are favorable.

Elevator Scorched.

Lake Crystal—Fire was broke out in the Marston & Larson elevator here, and but for the immediate discovery of the blaze the building would have been consumed. The flames started from the exhaust pipe of the gasoline engine and scorched the end of the building before they were subdued. The Peavy elevator and the Standard Lumber company's and the Strunk Lumber company's yards were the nearest exposures, and had the fire got beyond control the conflagration would have been a serious one.

NEWS NOTES.

Northfield—The first fatal accident of the year near here occurred Wednesday morning when Frank Gilligan, was drowned while bathing in the Cannon river north of the city.

Canon Falls—The Congregational church and society has begun the erection of a new $15,000 church. The full amount has been raised, the son of the first pastor of the church giving $5,000.

Minneapolis—Residents of Linden Hills, near Lake Harriet, have waxed fiery and cleaned up that section of the city. The children were the first to begin work and turned out by the score.

St. Paul—The state officers of the grand lodge of Masons entertained Joseph E. Cryer, Paris, high priest of the Royal Arch Masons of the United States, at a dinner at the Commercial club.

Minneapolis—Four of the six sawmills have suspended sawing indefinitely owing to lack of logs. The river has been falling steadily for three weeks and the logs have stopped coming down.

Crookston—The meeting of the old settlers' and pioneers' picnic gathering, as all such gatherings are, and the interchange of ideas and the stories of early experience in this great Northwest were as pleasing to the members as ever.

Hanning—Lightning which struck the residence of George Markuson destroyed the bed in which Mrs. Markuson and her children were asleep, letting the occupants fall to the floor. Strange as it may seem, none of them was killed, and beyond a slight burn to Mrs. Markuson's arm none was injured.

Renville—Renville has made some headway this year, in regard to improvements, in having just accepted a gas plant which was erected by the Practical Gas and Construction Company of North Chicago, at a cost of $7,000. An $,000-foot gasholder was also erected and the new gas plant is giving entire satisfaction.

St. Paul—John Thoorsell was held up by two youths at Rondo and Avon streets, but the holdup was a failure. Mr. Thoorsell had the presence of mind to run to a nearby house and knock at the door. The youthful highwaymen got frightened and ran away without the shot or getting the money or other valuable from their victim.

Stillwater—Unable to bear up under the prospect of eight years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary, Thomas B. Clement, former president of the First National bank of Fairfault, committed suicide at eight months for misuse of funds, collapsed at the very doors of the prison and was taken to the prison hospital in a state of nervous breakdown. His condition is regarded as critical.

St. Paul—Thero will be a hearing before the railroad and warehouse commission Aug. 1 on the application of several railroads for an increase in the minimum weight for cars of flour and wheat. The present carload minimum is 24,000 pounds and the railroads want this increased to 30,000 pounds. The commission has received a long number of letters protesting against an advance in the minimum weight, and the commission has sent out notices of a hearing on the matter.

Minneapolis—Every cigar store, every billiard hall and poolroom, every theater, every amusement park and every pavilion in this city and even in the state may be closed, and every street car may running on Sundays if the present plans of the Liquor Dealers' Association worm out.

St. Paul—The third annual convention of the Afro-American Women's clubs of Minnesota convened for a four-days' convention, closing Saturday evening.

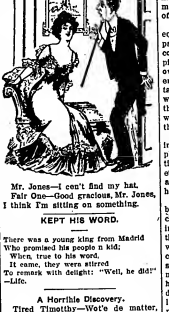
ADORNED THE ROMAINE.

The silvery moon looked down upon them, as they stood upon the pier, ravenously devouring the lovelight in each other's eyes. The wild intensity of the passion caused the blood to surge through his veins like the Adriatic in a storm, and the palpitation of his heart shook the ponderous timbers of the pier to their foundations.

As he gazed upon her ethereal form he wondered how such an angelic creature could survive in such a vulgar and unsympathetic world.



She looked so bewitchingly fair that it seemed like desecration to touch her, and he longed to speak to her with a golden harp instead of the commonplace everyday language.

Surely such a sweet month was never intended to drink anything but the nectar of the gods? Ha——'

HOUSE HAS A HISTORY.

WAS PLANNED TO BE THE HOME OF NAPOLEON.

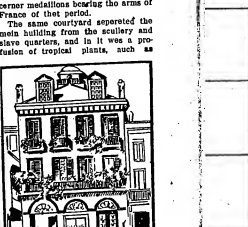
Structure Still Standing in New Orleans—Plot to Rescue Exiled Emperor from St. Helens Only Foiled by His Death.

New Orleans.—Of all the romance in history there is no episode more startling than the Creole plot to rescue Napoleon from his prison on St. Helena—and hence, little is known about it.

The seeds of the plot were sown when Joseph Bonaparte left France and bought an estate on the northern edge of the Adirondacks. Thither flocked the Bonspertists. But it was in New Orleans that the plot came to a head. To the Creoles there was a great appeal in the pathetic spectacle of the "prisoner of Longwood," a broken old man, mentally dismembered, they said, on the blank rocks of St. Helena.

Of all the influential and rich Creoles who were interested in the plot, the most ardent was Nicholas Girod, millionaire, philanthropist, patriot, mayor for several terms and veteran of Chalmette.

The plan, in a few words, was to equip a fast vessel, which was to slip past the petrol ships and into the cove some dark night; and a party picked men were to scale the cliffs, overpower the guard and lower the emperor by means of a block and tackle. Then the speed of the vessel was to show a clean pair of heels to the lumbering old English frigates, which couldn't make any better time then so many hnthubs.



No hitch-hind scheme was this, impossible of accomplishment. The plotters were not visionaries, but practical men of affairs, who knew the obstacles and knew how to meet them, and whose hearts and souls were bound up in the enterprise.

Three days before the Scrophine, built for the purpose, was to weigh anchor, the plotters gave a banquet in his splendid mansion to celebrate the event. It was a dramatic moment, the master's canvas. The conspirators were flushed with assured success. But at this dramatic moment, the gentleman was at its height, and no toests were being drunk, appeared the fatal benefit-ing on the wall. News came of Napoleon's death.

As a mute reminder of the plot, there stands to-day the old Napoleon house, much sought by visitors.

The Napoleon house was made at the finest in the Vieux Carre. It was an imposing mansion of three stories, standing in a deep park with the street, as do all the other old houses in the French quarter, and crowned with a belvedere that afforded a fine view of the city and river. The walls and ceilings of the spacious apartments were frescoed in the empire style, the corner medallions bearing the arms of France of ther period.

The same motif appeared the mein building from the scullery and slave quarters, and in it was a profusion of tropical plants, such as bananas, cactus, Spenish dagger and a magnolia tree, at the foot of which its epitaphs said, was buried a lady, victim of a husband's jealousy.

But this is not the Napoleon house of to-day. The frescoes became discolored, peeled and were palnted over. The rez-de-chausees bulges with showcases. The wrought iron ballustrades have rusted. The plants have been destroyed. The magnolia tree has disappeared and no sentiment of the lady found; hence, that deer tradition has been knocked in the head. The splendid ornaments and furniture have vanished, and the tinlien marble mantels of the empire period have lost their splendor. Even the old knocker has disappeared—gone to satisfy the lust of some curio collector. From one of the most magnificent residences of the Vieux Carre the Napoleon mansion bee dogenerated to a liquor shop, dangling a "to let" sign.

IN OFFICE FOR 47 YEARS.

Pennsylvania Postmaster Longest in Continuous Service.

Wellsboro, Pa.—It is said of Danforth K. Marsh, of Gelnes township, his chirography, and that is pardonable. Even at the advenced age of 81 years he writes a bold, clear, elegant, legible hand. He recalls with pleasure, when a mere lad at school in the primitive days when the "master" wrote the copy for the class in writing, how, on the second day of the term of a new teacher, no copy was set for him, and asking the reason, was told that he could write so much better than the "master" that no copy would be furnished them.

Prior to attaining his majority, Mr. Marsh moved to Tioga county, where he lumbered in summer and taught in winter till on his birthday in 1851 he married Sarah C. Watrous.

He was a delegate to the first Republcnn convention ever held in Tioga county, and has always affiliated with that party. He has run the gamut of township offices, and, with Capt. Phillips and Israel Stone, who was the father of ex-Gov. William A. Stone, served en county auditor in 1869.

DANFORTH K. MARSH.
(Pennsylvania Postmaster Who Has Been in Office 47 Years.)

Tioga county, that in point of continuous service he is the oldest postmaster in the United States. The village of Marshfield, named after him, was made a post office in 1850, and Mr. Marsh was appointed by President Buchanan to take charge of the office. He has held the position continuously since, and is still discharging the duties with all of his old-time force and vigor.

Administrations have come and gone, presidents and policies feded, the great civil war waged, and the nate engendered by the strife, forgotten and three presidents assassinated during Mr. Marsh's peaceful administration. The country has been enlarged and developed, the telephone, arc and incandescent light, phonograph and electricity, railway systems and the Monroe mail and delivering the same to the patrons of the office and has been chief merchent of the village since 1851, when he established the first store there.

In addition to being a man of the highest integrity, he is of keenest intelligence and has not allowed the times to get away from him or from the son of his namesake, who has established the first store there.

In addition to being a man with one of the keenest brains by actual weight that medical science records.

The Western Federation of Miners that have come from the west to stir up a labor war in this state, should be run out or here on double quick time by the state militia as the laboring men of this state can attend to the labor situation them selves without any assistance from foreigners and Anarchists.

The Pike has become a regular feature of the Minnesota State Fair and this year the "side show" department will be greatly improved. All the showa will be in a section by themselves but they will be more than ever under the supervision of the fair management and will be of better quality. No special admission will be charged to the Pike, but each show will have its own admission price as heretofore. The fair opens this year on Monday Sept 2, and continues six days. Dan Patch will again at te mpt to lower his record on opening day.

With the low steam boat running on regular trips there is no trouble to get freight up the river in a hurry, and yet our country merchants have the fashion of saying, (which their customers ask them for goods they have not got in stock), "we have got plenty of it in Thief River Falls, but can't get it up the river on the steamer from here on." The next time you hear one of them say that, just tell him, that you also have plenty of goods in Th ef River Fall, and when you get them home, but and paid for, the farmers to it will bring them up the river for you in short order.

The Undertaker's Shop.

"The one thing in New York that I can't get used to," said the country visitor, "is the manifold uses to which undertakers put their shops. I used to be of the opinion that the only possible errand a person could have at an undertaker's was to purchase funeral supplies, but in this town I find that people go there for all sorts of purposes. They go to vote, to get married and to transact all the legal business that a notary public is capable of transacting. Yesterday I even saw a party called luncheon in an undertaker's establishment. They had come into town necessarily to attend a funeral and instead of patronizing a restaurant they calmly munched their midday meal in the midst of these ingubrious surroundings."—New York Globe.

Irascible Carlyle.

A lady who lived near Thomas Carlyle kept Cochin chinas fowls, and their crowing was such a nuisance that the philosopher sent a complaint to her. The owner was indignant upon hearing the appeal.

"Why," she said, "other crow only four times a day, and how can Mr. Carlyle be seriously angered at that?"

Upon hearing of her attitude upon the subject Carlyle replied: "The lady forgets the pain I suffer in waiting for those four crows."

Once Too Often.

"What's all this excitement about?" "Nothing worth mentioning. Man got knocked down."

"Accident?"

"Not exactly. One of these men who always catch hold of you and push you out of their way when you happen to meet them at a crowded corner grabbed the wrong man just now. That's all."—Chicago Tribune.

BIG EXCURSION.

The New Boat Will Run One To County Fair All Aboard.

The board of managers of the Red Lake River Transportation Company and the management of the Fair at Thief River Falls, have made arrangements to have an excursion run by the new steam boat down to the Fair.

The boat will leave Little Oak at 12 o'clock M. August 6th, Will leave Highlanding at 0 o' clock A.M. August 7th,

The boat will stop at all the regular landing places going down the river and will arrive at Thief River Falls, about 1 o' Clock P.M.

The regular passenger rates will be charged from all points along the river, except Anten, which will include a free ticket for one day at the Fair.

Tickets from Anten will be 35 cents, including ticket to the Fair, but passengers will be carried at the regular rate, who do not want the fair ticket.

This will be a grand opportunity for the people living up this way to go down to the County fair, and there will undoubtly be a large number of them go.

A Kind Examiner.

Sir John Stainer was dourly loved by his students who knew he was professor of music at Oxford. "As an examiner he was most considerate," said one who smiled under him, "and would always do his best to get you through. I remember his asking me a poser in a viva voce examination. He waited patiently for the answer; but, partly through my nervousness no doubt, I could not think of it. At length he exclaimed testily, 'Dear me, how stuffy this room is, to be sure;' and he went and threw open a casement at the ventilator. It was quite two minutes before he got back to the thing upon, and by the time he had set down again and rearranged his gown I had the answer ready. Comparing notes later in the day with a man who was examined quite soon after me, I told him how the examiner had served me. 'How remarkable!' he replied. 'Why, when I was stuck he said, "How extraordinarily stuffy this place is!" and spent quite two minutes in shutting the ventilator."—Manchester Guardian.

The Razor in Disrepute.

"And he told her all his heart, and said unto her, there hath not come a razor upon mine head, for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb." If I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak and be like other men."—Judges xvi. 17.

Hair on man or brute is a sign of strength. He who declines to keep a safe distance from danger, let him keep also at a great distance from the knife of the barber. To shave is a defiance of nature. Provoke nature, and in return nature will provoke you.

Field Marshal Wellington—"The more I see of the men the more I admire them. They are the most determined fellows to face death I ever saw. You won't live long, Parson pointed out. If you have not, one hair, a fine skin, small growth, large head; early corpulence, short neck, small mouth, brittle and apparently teeth and fat ears. Jordan Water.

There is a general impression that the Jordan water which is used at certain baptisms is taken from the sacred stream and put into a bottle, hermetically sealed and left untouched until the time for its use. This is an error.

As a matter of fact, the water which flows out of the lake of Galilee and occupies a rocky course to a level far below that of the Mediterranean is full of organic substances. If a bottle be filled with the water and kept tightly corked for a few days it turns perfectly black and offensive to the nostrils and the odors of the bottle. The precaution is therefore taken of boiling the water and straining it before it is sealed up, and this is why the baptismal water always possesses the crystal clearness which one notices on these ceremonial occasions.—Modern Society.

A Rippered Paster.

A French Protestant pastor was the guest of a Scottish preacher at a banse. One morning kippered herrings were served at breakfast. The Presbyterian asked the meaning of "kipper." His host replied that it meant "to preserve." On taking his leave next day the French pastor, wringing his host's hand, said, "May the Lord kipper you, my good friend."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Roots or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

Of course we will all meet at the County Fair.

Mrs. A. W. Shosten and Miss Augusta Kuehnel were business callers here on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs Kongell, of Kratka were up here yesterday attending to some Notary Public business.

James Colman came down from his Pessoup Island farm Tuesday for a weeks visit with friends and relatives

Hans S. Quam came up on the boat Wednesday evening to see to shipping some more of his personal affects down river to Thief River Falls He was over night visitor here.

E. B Lanager, of Plummer was a passenger up the river on the Highlanding Sunbeam, steamer Wednesday evening on his way to Highlanding on a business trip.

Henry Arndt will take a bundle of barley down to the Thief River Falls fair, and if there is any barley that beats it we want to be sure to see it, for it must be pretty big barley.

Do not forget the date of the new steamboat excursion down the Red Lake River to the County fair on August 7th. Will leave Highlanding at 6 o' clock A. M. Sunbeam at 6 30 A. M. Aboard.

The Dan Patch boat took a bad sick "spell" at Sunbeam Landing Tuesday and would not turn a wheel until 4 o'clock, then he recovered and made a quick trip down the river.

The County Commissioners did not meet, on the order of the County Auditor, to act on the county seat removal petition. We did not learn the cause of their not meeting, but suppose they were "making hay" while the sun shines.

Messers Singer Bros., of Rhoda have made arrangements for the operation of the Kratka store. We are informed that they intend to place in a large and up to date stock of general merchandise, they will also continue their store at Rhoda and their many patrons wish them much success in their new establishment.

Load the new steam boat and barge to the fair.

Clearwater Specials.

Haying is in full blast now.

Mrs. Con Short and Miss Nellie Short, west to Plummer on Sunday.

Mr. R. N. Fore lost a valuable horse last week.

There is a big crop of June berries and we have had a big crop of straw berries, and to come right down to business this is a pretty good fruit country.

Mr. John Radusicht and Mike Kolaki went to Plummer on last Saturday with 26 tubs of butter on Saturday last.

Miss Anniebelle Rolandson visited with Abbie Florentine on Sunday last.

Mr. Rustad from Plummer has been buying cattle in this vicinity.

Mrs. H. V. Carlson has gone down to Hill River for a few days visit.

Mr. A. Roandseb and family visited with M. H. Eyland and family on Sunday last.

Those receiving the highest cream checks for June, at the Clearwater Creamery, were Mr. George Singh $74; 55 tubs. Julious Olson, $56 70 tubs; and K. Eitvedt $58. 92 cents.

When you go to the fair next week take a bundle of your best grain with you.

The Highlanding Sunbeam steam boat had quite a large number of passengers down the river yesterday, which shows that the people up this way are beginning to take this handy way to get to town.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Directors of The Red Lake River Transportation Co., at the Highlanding school house tomorrow night at 6 o'clock P.M. All members of the board are requested to be present.

Haying is progressing nicely

Crops look splendid, and there is all assurance of an unproper crop, if the hail storms keep away.

Rain's are getting to be a common occourance with us as we have a light shower every other day.

The whistle of the new steam boat makes us think we are a part of the civilized world again being lost in the swamps and wilderness so long.

Rev. E. A. Mostue and Rev. J. O. Brensdal will both hold religious service at the school house No. 34 on August 11th, at 1 o' clock A.M. Don't forget the date August 11th. W.S.

Killed By Tornado.

Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Mostue returned from Williston N. D. on Tuesday evening, where they were called last week by the sudden death of John Arnstad, a brother of Mrs. Mostue, who was killed in the tornado which swept over that part of the state on Saturday evening July 20th. Mr. Arnstad was a single man and was the only one killed by the storm although 19 others were severely injured.

He lived 28 hour but Mrs Mostue did not reach there until after his death and burial. He was a man possessed of considerable means and was highly respected by all who knew him. Mrs. Mostues friends in this locality will extend their sympathy to her in her bereavement.

A Stirring Story.

"There she was in the highest window of the burning building shouting for help!"

"And you actually saved her—how did you manage it?"

"Well, we just stood and stared—and she came down on the stairs."

His Got the Trout.

A story dealing with a large trout that was rising rapidly and frequently is told in "How to Fish: A Treatise on Trout and Trout Fishers." This is the story:

"He was going up and down, up and down; for as the insects offered themselves, bit at it suited his composure that he should take a midge from the abundance. One youth was casting at the trout; another was looking on. Said the angler, 'I'll have that fish whether he takes it or not.' 'How?' his friend asked. 'I'll throw the fly into his mouth.' The trout went on rising; the angler went on casting. I perceived the angler's notion. It was that if he kept casting accurately and the trout continued to rise in the regular manner indicated, the fly would be long past at the very moment when a midge was being taken. This reckoning was justified. The large trout rose hooked and landed by a fly that had been cast into his mouth."

Tough Pork.

In a New Zealand town one of the municipal candidates, a Presbyterian Scotsman, had received a present of a huge Scotch thistle, which at the moment happened to be lying on the table of his committee room. A friend, entering, withdrew suddenly, with the remark: "I beg your pardon, I didn't know you were at luncheon."

A Mystery of Indochina.

The great mystery about Indochina and one which must ever be insoluble is the story of the lost race and the vanished civilization of that strange country. The middle walls of Angkor-Wat, rising in the midst of waving jungles, remain as the memorial of a great empire which has utterly disappeared and is altogether lost to history. No one will ever know who planned this gigantic temple or what breath breathed on his bidding of people to build up those immense blocks of stone and cover them with the most elaborate of sculptures. Angkor-Wat was one of the most notable ancient monuments in the world; and this forgotten temple was built so as to endure as long as the earth itself were it not for the irresistible destructive effect of plant life on the strongest walls that man can raise. Only a highly civilized and very wealthy people could have erected Angkor-Wat, a very different race from the Annamite or modern Cambodia. The whole nation has disappeared as utterly as the busy myriads who once populated the wastes and solitudes of Memphis.—Singapore Free Press.

THEIR MANAGER

By Elizabeth Robbins

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

It was a warm day in April, and the windows in the sitting-room of the old two-story, hip-roof farmhouse were opened wide.

Inside the three Bartlett sisters were talking so earnestly that they did not see the young man who walked across the yard to one of the windows, and, resting his arms on the sill, smiled as he waited for his presence to be discovered.

Lucretia, the oldest sister, was speaking in a dejected tone. "It does seem as if three able-bodied women—"

"Who work like galley slaves," Marinda, the youngest sister, interposed.

"Ought to get a living," Rosella, the other sister, ended for them. "Of course they ought, and it makes me wrathy to think—"

"Oh, now, I wouldn't lose my temper over it," a soothing voice interrupted.

"Why, Chauncey Purcell!" Lucetta exclaimed, severely. "You scared me almost out of my senses!"

The young man only laughed in answer, and going around to the door came in where they were.

"Now, what were you girls quarreling about?" he asked, when he had satisfied Marinda as to when he had become, how it had happened that he could come, how long his vacation was to be this time, and if he had been home before he came there.

"Nothing of importance," Rosella answered quickly, coloring a little.

"Can't you make the farm pay?" he persisted.

"No," Lucetta admitted unwillingly. "That is, not really. Of course we contrive to get along and pay our bills, but things are running down a little right along."

Chauncey Purcell regarded them thoughtfully. "It's because you are women," he said. The trouble with you is that you lack originality. You've got the idea that you must follow the antiquated methods of your great-grandfather. Why don't you find just the kind of work you like, and then make a business of it? Follow the lead of your natural inclinations? Do the thing you're fitted for? Piano a trait?"

"Doesn't it sound easy—when neighbor Purcell says it?" said Marinda.

"What you girls need is a manager," Chauncey concluded with an air of conviction. "Especially Rosella," he added, with a meaning glace toward her.

"Perhaps you'd like to take the contract to manage us," Marinda mocked.

"I would like to," he answered promptly.

"The idea of our being managed by a little thing like you!" said Lucetta. "Why, I used to wheel you around in your baby-carriage."

"Must have been quite a tug for you, being only four years my senior," he retorted.

"Then you positively refuse to let me manage you, singly or collectively?" he asked, glancing again at Rosella.

"Certainly we do!"

"Well, then, suppose I do it without your knowledge or consent?"

"I dare you to," said Rosella quickly. "I rather think you'd find it the most difficult undertaking you ever undertook. Selling goods to unwilling customers wouldn't be a circumstance to it."

The young man looked at her quizzically for several seconds, then gave a short laugh and changed the subject; but he was somewhat absentminded on the rest of his stay, and seemed to be studying on something that interested and amused, while it baffled him. He came over again the next morning, while the Bartlett's were at breakfast. "I suppose you've made all your plans for the season's campaign?" he asked quite respectfully.

"Yes; we're going to try very hard this year and see if we can't make out to accomplish something," Lucetta answered, choosing to overlook the badinage of the day before.

"We're going to raise onions, potatoes and peas," Marinda informed him.

"How about your flower garden?"

"We've decided that we cannot afford to have one," Lucetta answered firmly.

"Not have a flower garden, when you are all so crazy over flowers and your luck with them in the despair of all the women for miles around? Pshaw!"

"If we could exist without eating, we'd do that, too," said Rosella bitterly.

"If we can only get the farm on a paying basis, we can make up next year for not having flowers this year," said Lucetta hopefully.

"Oh, have a flower garden," urged Chauncey. "Let me make it for you. I'm to have a good long vacation this time, and I'm aching for some useful thing to do. Really, I shall feel hurt if you refuse."

They looked at each other. "It doesn't seem as though you ought to," said Lucetta at last, deprecatingly.

So the old garden was cleaned up and enlarged to eventually contain moss pinks, larkspur, four-o'clocks, columbine, foxglove, love-in-a-mist, salpiris, coreopsis and marigolds, in addition to what was already there.

This renovating, and the setting out of a wistaria, honeysuckle and clematis particulars, in the few places about the house not already occupied by vines, took the rest of the week.

"And now," said Chauncey, "I want to do your farm planting for you."

"Would you let us pay you for it?" Rosella demanded.

"Oh, yes, I suppose so," he answered, with a wry face, "if you must be so everlastingly independent."

After some hesitation the girls agreed to let him do the planting.

"Oh, there's one thing I'm kind of fussy about. I forgot to mention it. I want to do the work alone. If there's anything I dislike, it's to have people bothering around when I'm doing any farming job. It makes me nervous.

The three girls did not understand Chauncey's object in this remark. They might have wondered had they seen him planting the potatoes, "onions," "peas" and other "vegetables."

They watched with anxious eyes, and at length, in some of the rows, the tiny green sprouts began to show. But they were not young onions. In fact, they did not understand the rows had come up, not an onion was there among them. Instead, there were pinkoll, asters, marguerites, Drummond's phlox, china pinks, balsams, ageratums, verbenas, candytuft, bachelor's buttons, mignonette, cosmos, sweet alyssum, lafnat's breath,

Tiny Green Sprouts Began to Show.

nad nasturtiums. To cap the climax, the peas turned out to be sweet peas.

"Oh, oh, oh!" Rosella suddenly exclaimed one evening in early summer, as she was scanning the pages of the Riverboro Weekly Gazette. "If this isn't the crowning presumption! Listen, girls:

"'FLOWERS! FLOWERS! FLOWERS! Come and See them! Come and Buy them! At the Bartlett Sisters' Farm, on the State Road.'

"O-h! If I could see that boy for only five minutes! Wouldn't I give him a piece of my mind!"

Chauncey Purcell came home, after an extended trip, the first of October. He was driven past the Bartlett farm up to the house.

The sisters were at dinner. There was some stiffness in their manner as they arose to shake hands with him.

"Well, girls," he said, "I must say that the practice I did for you seems to have turned out remarkably well."

There was no resisting the twinkle in his eyes. Rosella held out the locust, het even she at last joined in the laugh.

"Seriously, how have you made it?" Chauncey asked, when the laugh had subsided.

"It's been perfectly wonderful," Lucetta answered enthusiastically. "I never even dreamed there could be so many people who would buy flowers. They come miles to get them."

"We've made more money in the last three months than we have before in three years," Marieda said.

"We have taken over 80 money orders for dahlias and gladiolus bulbs, to be delivered in the spring," said Lucetta.

"And you have enjoyed it?" he asked, looking around at them.

"We never had so much fun in our lives," Marinda answered.

Then you will concede that all you needed was a manager, and that I am a success?"

"We concede everything," said Rosella, "and must admit that managers don't manage for nothing. How much do we owe you, Mr. Purcell?"

"I didn't go into it for pay—I could know but I did, though," he interrupted himself. "You see, it was this way: A certain young person told me, a year or two ago, that she would never marry me or even be engaged to me, until the time came when her sisters no longer needed her on the farm. That time did not seem to be approaching as rapidly as I could wish, so I thought I'd take a hand in hastening it—and incidentally show at the same time that I was fiot one to take a dare.

"This, sisters"—drawing to him the blushing Rosella—"is the young woman who has promised to let me be, in the near future, her own exclusive manager."

ASTRONOMY AND A GIRL.

They were enjoying a quiet stroll out under the star-strewn roll of evening, and he, bashful youth, eagerly grasped a stray opportunity to keep alive the languishing conversation.

"Yes, Miss Georgiana; that star over there is the planet Jupiter, which, they say, is about 400,000,000 miles from the earth; and that bright-red planet overhead is Mars, which just now is only a little over 40,000,000 miles away. It's a great question among scientists whether or not there are inhabitants on either of them."

"Well, George," said the fair listener, in her thirst for astronomical knowledge drawing a trifle closer to her informant, "if there really are, it doesn't seem to us they're near enough so that they could see us on a dark evening like this, even though they were looking this way."—Judge.

A Last Resort.

Plainly, Mrs. Lackwit was troubled as she sought out her husband in his study.

"George, I'm actually worried about Johnny's future. He has absolutely no head for mathematics, and even the principal of the school told me that, much as he disliked to say it, our boy was scarcely able to compose a lies of correct English."

Mr. Lackwit was less disturbed at the news.

"Let's not get discouraged, Maria," said he. "Johnny may never make much of a hafk president or a magazine editor, but his case might be less hopeful. At the worst, he can still become a writer of popular songs."—Judge.

Entitled to It.

'I should say they were. Mrs. Rockingham and her oldest daughter once occupied a compartment with a duke and a duchess all the way from Liverpool to Edinburgh.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Cest of It.

They were celebrating their engogement by dialng et a swell cafe.

"Do you heilere," she queried, as the conversation lagged, "that mae is really made of dust?"

"Well," he rejoiced, glacing at the thing dimly, "he wouldn't be able to travel far in your company if he wese't."—Chicago Daily News.

Amendment Not Accepted.

Mrs. Jagwy—I wish I keew where my husband was.

Mrs. Kewis—You mees, I presume, that you wish you knew where your husband is?

Mrs. Jagway—No, I don't. I know where he is. He's up in his room sleeping off a headache.—Chicago Tribune.

Fatalism Exemplified.

She—I hope, dear, that you are not going to worry about my exceeding my allowance this time.

He (frightening up)—You don't mean to tell me, dearest, that there isn't any necessity for it.

"Certainly not. What's the use of worrying about something you can't help?"—Life.

POULTRY and BEES

HIVING A SWARM.

Methods Followed by a Successful Bee Keeper.

When bees get to hanging out on the hive, I raise it from the bottom board one inch, and then it they do not stop rites down higher, explains a bee keeper in Farm and Home. I think that raising them is a very good preventative of swarming. A certain percentage of colonies will swarm in spite of anything that may be done. It takes but little to reduce swarming during a good honey harvest. Bees left to themselves will generally send out one swarm in a season, often a second swarm, sometimes a third.

In hiving swarms it frequently happens that the bees take to and when dumped in front of their new hive instead of crawling into it. We have had a few swarms go to bear and cluster on the same limb after they had been carried to the hive two or three times. We recently got the thought that a little spraying would overcome this difficulty. We have tried it on a few swarms with good results.

While the cluster is yet hanging on the tree take a small spray pump, or syringe, and wet the cluster of bees with one or two quarts of cold water, then take your swarm catcher (shown in the cut and turn it up under the cluster and get them into it. They will cling together while you carry them to the hive, and when dumped in front of it they will not readily take wing again, but will run into it. Swarms that have been hived a few hours and seem restless, or cluster mostly on the outside of their hive, can also be made more tractable by a little spraying. Bees need a great quantity of water during summer, and the beskeeper can supply their needs in a few minutes where it would require hours for the bees to gather it themselves.

Put the new hive containing the swarm on the old stand, exactly where the old hive stood and place the old hive close beside the new one. The next morning as the bees go forth from this hive to work, they will nearly all return to the old place and enter the other hive, making that colony very strong, and in condition to store a great crop. The other colony will be reduced in numbers that the bees will not be moved to swarm again and will fall in with the first one that hatches and thereby give much surplus. It will make a good, strong colony by the close of the season.

CARE FOR THE NEST.

Ways in Which You Can Encourage the Hens to Lay.

Do you know that you can train a hen to be a poor layer?

Do you know that she can and will keep her eggs when ready to lay for a whole day?

If this condition is allowed to continue she may set probably will lay fewer and fewer eggs, finally becoming an indifferent layer, hence the necessity of having plenty of clean, comfortable nests.

Did you ever notice how shyly the young pullet will go about looking for a secret place where she may stealthily deposit her precious eggs?

How very particular she is about it!

If there is an insufficient number of nests, or if they are unclean, or too much exposed she is likely, after some delay, to lay the egg on the floor and among the other hens, which may lead to egg eating.

Comfort is one of the essentials of egg productions, and what is more necessary than handy, clean and comfortable nests?

Keeping Colony Record.

The size of colony in a beekeeper's apiary is the one that gives the most surplus honey and keeps it up the longest. By this test every one of us must test our colonies and try to bring all the rest up to its standard, or at least as nearly so as possible. A record should be kept of all colonies, each hive having a number, says Bee Culture. In offering an apiary of over 70 colonies of bees recently, a prominent bee keeper "I have every queen clipped, and every queen and colony numbered, and keep a record of them, and know of what stock each queen is, and what is the record of each colony." Set how many beekeepers think this worth while and do it?

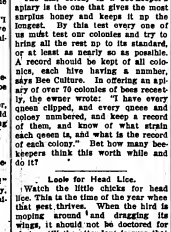
Look for Head Lice.

Watch the little chicks for head lice. This is the time of the year when that pest thrives. When the bird is moping around and dragging its wings, it should not be doctored for cholera till the attendant is sure that there are no large lice on it. Three lice can suck more vitality from the little chick than all its food can supply.

CARE IN EQUIPMENT.

Smoker, Veil and Gloves Should Be Ready for Handling of Bees.

While one might sometimes tear a hive to pieces without angering bees, nevertheless it would be unwise to undertake to do so without being prepared for other results. Not only should the smoker be lit and ready, but the apiarist himself should be equipped with some kind of an effective veil, so that in case they should become vengeful he will be able to give them his undivided attention. As to whether or not gloves should be worn depends upon the inclination of the man and upon his ability to endure the pain from the stings. Some men find it necessary to wear them always, while others mange hetter without them. If good fitting and of soft material they should not be burdgesome nor clumsy to work in. But a stiff, thick glove with open top would invariably hs worse than none. For women, gloves are, of course, a necessity since their hedds are naturally softer and more tender than are those of men.



When a colony is to be examined let the apiarist, suitably prepered, and armed with a smoker, approach the hive directly yet quietly, and administer a few puffs of smoke at the entrance. This will frighten the bees and cause them to fill themselves with honey, after which they will he less inclined to sting. In about a minute the cover should be gently raised and a few more puffs hlowe in over the combs. After this the intended work may be proceeded with at once, using from time to time just what smoke is necessary to coetrol the bees. In many instances, there will be no further occasion to use it at all, but in case they show signs of anger it is better to administer enough to cause them to rush heck into the hive again, and when it must be done the quicker or better. But the object should be to control, not punish, therefore no more should ever be used than the occasion demands. In this, as in all other things, one should he guided by humane principles, eed forbeer to pereute.

For loocseing and raising the frames there is no better tool than a common, hread, flat, blade, or some such bave, a sharp tapering point designed to he thrust into a haadle of some kind. It is well to have a set of use is this way, and prefer it to any speciel designed instrument we have ever seen.—Exchenge.

POULTRY POINTS.

System simplifies the work: therefore, have a system.

Be careful and do not overfeed your old hens and get them so fat they will not lay. Feed corn sparingly.

Buckwheat is a good egg food, but is often refused by the fowls until they become familiar with it.

Is it your luck or your negligence when a civit one of the hens gets a family coop and kills a half-dozen fries?

A combination of poultry, bees, small fruit, vegetables and garden plants will bring large returns from a very small plot of ground.

A reputation for honest goods and honest dealing is bound to bring success. This should not be more easily done with the pure-food law to help us.

Pen for Ducklings.

The very best kind of a pen for ducklings is one that can be easily moved from one part of the yard to another. That stationary pen soon becomes infested with disease germs and the easiest way to overcome these is to move to other quarters.

Poor Paint is Expensive

If one is rich enough to repaint his building every year for the pleasure of having a change of color scheme, the quality of the paint used may cut little figure. But if it is desirable to cut the painting bills down to the least amount possible per year, it is of the utmost importance that the paint be made of Pure White Lead and the best of Linseed Oil. There are limitations in the form of alleged White Lead, and there are substitutes in the form of ready-prepared paints.

FIVE FALL INTO GRAVE.

Remarkable Incident That Disturbed Solemnity of Funeral.

Instead of the accustomed quiet which prevails at the burial of the dead, great excitement and fear attended the burial the other day of Michael Screeco, a prominent merchant of Westport, when by the collapsing of a grave the coffin and several persons attending the services were hurled into a small pit.

The floor prayer had been said by the preacher, and the assistant to the undertaker stepped to the foot of the coffin to arrange the rope for letting the coffin into the grave. At that moment one of the pallbearers accidentally kicked out the crosspiece that supported the coffin. The coffin quickly descended into the grave, the body going feet first. The assistant hastened its descent by tumbling on it. Several persons rushed to the edge of the grave, causing the soil to yield, and in a few seconds five men were lying in the pit half covered with dirt.

They were pulled out, the coffin was dug out and laid flat, and after the grave had been redug the burial was completed.—N. Y. Press.

Chinese Jews.

American interest in China since the Boxer rebellion has extended to the Chinese Jews, who settled at Kaifungfu during the Hin dynasty, that ruled China from 200 B. C. to 200 A. D. The Kaifungfu colony is mentioned occasionally by European travelers, among them Marco Polo in the fourteenth century, while in 1600 and 1704 they were visited by Jesuit missionaries. To-day, according to Alfred K. Glover, writing in the Open mind Monthly for May, the Chinese Jews are almost extinct, but their records and historical tablets are carefully preserved.

Have Trouble with Your Food?

Grape-Nuts

Perfectly Cooked,

Ready to Serve,

Delicious and Healthful

"The ordinary breakfast cereal cooked a few minutes in a hurried sort of way will in time weaken the stomach of anything short of an ox.

"Any preparation of wheat or oats put into water that is below the boiling point and cooked as mush is usually served, remains a pasty, indigestible mass. The cells are tough and unopened. In addition, the stomach of a person sensitively constituted refuses to do anything with the pasty mass. It is sent into the second stomach, the Duodenum, where in consequence of the long time of the first process of digestion, is fermented and soured. As an eminent medical man pertinently states, the stomachs of half the people going about the streets are about in the condition of an old vinegar barrel.

"Intestinal dyspepsia is the direct consequence of such feeding."

Knowledge of these facts and a wide experience in the preparation and use of cereals brought out the product known as Grape-Nuts, manufactured with special reference to having the nitrogenous and starchy parts of the grains, of which the food is composed, perfectly and scientifically cooked at the factory, ready for immediate use and therefore not subject to the manipulations of any cook, good or bad.

The starch of the grains, changed to grape-sugar, can be seen glistening on the little granules, and gives forth a delicate sweetish taste, very palatable.

Children and adults obtain fine results from the use of Grape-Nuts food. It is so perfectly adapted to the wants of the human body and so easily digested that many cases are on record of nursing babes being fed very successfully on it. "There's a Reason."

Made at the pure food factories of the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Summer Blouses

Three pretty yet easily-made blouses are shown here; they are suitable for almost all blouse material. The first is in pale blue chiffon taffetas; the yoke of piece lace has a shaped strap of taffetas laid on it. The front is laid in seven box-plaits stitched at the edges for 2 inches, each being trimmed by a fancy button. The joining to the yoke is covered by a strap. The sleeves are box-pleated at lower edge, and are finished by a lace cuff and narrow frill.

The second is in white lawn finely tucked in front; the small yoke and the strap down front are of white lace, with collar and sleeve band of the same; both are edged with bands of lawn.

The third blouse pictured is in white washing silk. The yoke is composed of lace insertion of two widths, mitred in form a deep point in centre front and on each shoulder. The silk is finely tucked where it joins the yoke, the tucks being 2 inches in length. The collar and sleeve bands are of lace insertion strapped each edge with silk. The fullness at top of sleeves is pleated into the armhole.

Laces Popular

Abundance of This Trimming Seen on Frock at Fashionable Resorts.

There is no doubt that this is a season for laces, for all of the frocks for the fashionable summer resorts show abundant quantities of this trimming. One of these is a dream in palest silver gray chiffon cloth trimmed with transparent insertions of very fine Irish crochet lace. These are attached to the material with a fine network of embroidery silk and narrow vandyked insertions formed with tiny rondeaux of the cloth, forming an open design through which the lining of the palest iris taffeta is visible.

The bodice is en suite and about the waist there is a fitted girdle of iris-colored satin, boned front and back, and trimmed with little rosettes of embroidery in the center of which are small jeweled buttons. Elaborate trimmings of fine needlework and straplings trim the bodice, which has a vest of plaited chiffon over which fold inside revers of lace, joined by narrow bands of ribbon velvet. The sleeves are in doubles of chiffon cloth, with undercuffs of chiffon, gauged into elbow cuffs of embroidery and Irish crochet.

Big Brooches.

Big brooches are all the go—really big ones, such as were worn two generations ago; only, with the exception of the cameo pins, they are more gorgeous affairs. The modern big brooch glorms and sparkles or is a sheet of vivid color. There is nothing demure about it—it is a striking, effective ornament.

Most of the big pins hold a single semi-precious stone. The stone makes the brooch, for the setting is simply a narrow rim about the stone. Transparent stones are hot, as a rule, backed with setting, as this detracts from their appearance.

Amethyst and topaz seem to outnumber other transparent stones used for these big brooches, such as garnet, peridot, aquamarine, etc. Well-cut topas pins gleam like living fire; the amethyst pins glow with a more subdued light.

Ruffles Must Be Coaxed.

The majority of laundries have not yet learned how to iron satisfactorily the pinnings so popular this season on the front of shirtwaists. The best way is to fasten down the pinning with two rows of basting before it is washed. The piece should then be ironed on the wrong side to press the pinks in shape. When this is done, draw out the bastings and iron on the right side. Some laundries finte them, but they do not look so well. If the plaiting is edged with lace it will need careful picking out with the fingers. Some girls have found it less trouble and more satisfactory to buy the plaiting by the yard, and, after it is edged, throw it away.

Gathering It Correctly.

Use two run threads, about one-third inch apart, and pull one from each end of gathers. Draw tight and stretch or pull the goods down from the threads. Then push gathers out on the threads to the length desired and one can baste them in position without the threads twisting up in front of the needle, as they do otherwise.

Hanging Skirts

Simple Process That Will Insure a Correct Drop to Finished Garment.

Finish your skirt all but the bottom, then give it a thorough pressing. Take a large pail or a small tub, or any thing round that measures about 19 inches in depth and about 75 inches around the top and has a good edge. Be sure your depth measures even all around. Put your piano stool in center of tub. If the top is hollow put a board over to make it level. Now you can raise and lower your stool, according to the length you desire your skirt. For a full length the stool must be even with edge of tub; if shorter, lower your stool as much below the edge as you want the skirt to measure from the floor. Stand up on stool perfectly still, allowing your skirt to fall over tub. Have some one mark on the edge, on the right side of skirt, with a piece of tailor chalk, being careful not to slide the skirt away from its natural place. Turn up according to chalk line, and you will have a perfect length.

Pretty Frock

The skirt and bretelles of this pretty frock are of pink linen trimmed with bands of the same. The blouse is of white batiste with a little embroidered figure in pink.

The yoke is of lace trimmed with bands of insertion and bordered with a ruffle of lace or embroidery which forms the epaulettes. The sleeves are finished with cuffs of the pink linen trimmed with bands of the same, and the girdle and buttons are also of the pink linen.

Length of Skirt.

Remember that the length of the skirt is decided by the purpose for which it is to be used. Walking skirts, both cloth and linen, are from three to four inches from the ground. All formal gowns, however, for afternoon and evening wear, train slightly.

THEY GOT WARMED UP.

Showing the Effect of Imagination on the Human Mind.

Mark Twain is responsible for many a practical joke, and he also is known to hold decided views in regard to mental suggestion. One of the latest stories told of him in the newspapers of the day has direct bearing upon the matter of relationship of body and mind.

Mr. Clemens, in company with two friends, went on a hunting expedition, and intending to remain for some days in the woods, they carried with them provisions and a small, round, sheet iron wood stove, for it was in November, and the nights were chilly.

The first day Mark remained about in the camp, putting things in order, while his two friends went in search of game.

Toward evening, having put things in apple-pie order, Mark sat down on a box, drew a book from several which he had brought along, and was soon lost between the covers. He had grown rather dark meanwhile, so he lighted a candle and placed it beside him on the box. Suddenly he heard a sound as of some one coming through the underbrush. This reminded him that he should have had a fire built in the little stove, because the night was frosty, and his companions would feel the need of a warm fire on their arrival. Hastily grasping the candle, he stood it on its end inside the stove and closed the door, which was fitted with small windows of mica.

Just then his two friends rushed in, shivering, and, remarking that it was beastly cold, theyench in turn held their hands over the little stove, from which the light as of a brisk fire brightly streamed. "How kind of Mark to build a fire for us!" said one.

"Well, he knew we would be cold," said the second.

After a few moments Mark ventured to inquire if they were getting warm, and upon being assured that they were now quite comfortable, he opened the door of the stove and brought forth the diminutive candle, placed it upon the soap box at his side, and resumed his reading.—Youth's Companion.

Why Blue Monday.

"Monday is the busiest day of the week for me," said the physician to the mnn who had been waiting half an hour to see him. "I would try to put up a bluff and tell you that my office is so crowded every day in the week, for it isn't; but I get a great many patients nearly every Monday. Every physician of any reputation has the same experience. Why? All on account of Sunday. People do all sorts of foolish things on that day, because they have time to, and they pay for it. In the first place, people eat indigestible, rich food on Sunday that they would not think of eating on any other day. They eat too much also; in fact, some people stuhle away all day, and in consequence they have indigestion—for no one has indigestion so quickly or so acutely as the person who is used to regular, wholesome food, and once in a long while tries the unwholesome food—and a trip to the doctor's office is the order Monday. Then, again, Sunday gives a person more time to think of his ills. A man who will seriously hear a pain in his arm working days and drive it away by his very snashing of it will get frightened at the slightest ache on Sunday. He gets to thinking about it and comes to the conclusion that it is a serious symptom. So he goes to see a physician Monday.—N. Y. Press.

Why Age Improves Wines.

"Why do wines improve with age?"

"Because they marry," answered the expert.

"Marry!"

"Yes; that is the term used in the trade," said a dealer to a New York press writer.

"This sherry," we say, 'has married well,' or 'that '96 hock has married badly.' We mean by a wine marriage that its different component parts, such as alcohol, the sugar, the acidic acid, and so on—have blended together smoothly. In a new wine this blending, this marriage, has not yet taken place, and hence the harshness of new wines. Old wines are delicious because the alcohol and sugar and acids and ethers have all married into one fragrant compound."

On Second Thought.

"Don't you remember, you said you would drown yourself if I didn't marry you?"

"Yes, I remember; how foolish I was!"

"Do you consider that it was foolish?"

"Yes; I should have threatened to drown myself if you did marry me."—Houston Post.

Patrick, recently arrived and unused to the ways of this country, was accosted one day by a member of the sporting fraternity, who offered to impart to him, for a modest consideration, a marvelous way to make money without toiling for it. All one needed, he said, was a small amount to bet on a certain horse that couldn't possibly lose. "And yez say Oi can get that mooey without working for it?" asked the bewildered Irishman, when the other was through explaining. "Sure thing," said the work you got to do is to count the mazuma." "Ill they," said Pat. So they hied them to a raceccurse, where the sporty-looking gentleman placed Pat's money at odds of five to one. And the horse won! Pat's joy was unbounded when he was handed a large roll of yellow-backed silly bills. Calling his new-found friend to one side, he asked in a voice that trembled with excitement: "Oi say, how long has this thing been goin' on?"

THE IDEAL MISSION FIELD IS IN NORTHERN KOREA.

Seoul, Korea.—To get close to the actual facts of missionary work in any country, as well as of the true political and social conditions, it is necessary to move out from the capital or port cities and to sojourn for a time in rural parts. So I have been out seeing the real Korea, liberating among country villages where there are churches, and in the meantime seeing at first hand what is said to be the most interesting people in the orient. The "how" of missionary work in this country may be set forth by a recital of this concrete experience.

Sometimes the missionary on tour puts his outfit on a little Korean pony and then, mounting on top of it, rides. At other times he walks. Two mere missionaries can be crammed in chairs, borne by coolies. In the present instance we walked, and two coolies carried our packs containing folding cots, bedding, food and cooking utensils. It is impossible for most white persons to subsist in health upon the Korean diet of rice and pickled vegetables. As to the matter of sleeping—more of that later.

The Orient Which Changes Not.

A pedestrian tour through rural Korea is better worth while than the same amount of time spent in Seoul. The first afternoon we traveled for five hours over the narrow paths between rice fields which serve for roads in Korea; they are the "wayside" of the familiar parable of the sower. Wheeled vehicles are unknown outside of the cities, though the Koreans have a pondcrous two-wheeled ox-cart which they claim was the original wheeled vehicle. Unlike Japan, where only a head plow is used, the Koreans cultivate their fields with oxen. That last of the rice crop had been gathered and the threshing floors of the farm bounds in the villages were busy places. There are no solitary farm houses in this country; the farmers live in villages and go out to their fields each day in the morning.

A Korean Village.

The Missionary with a Gun.

In each many of the villages through which we passed, churches are established; and occasionally we stopped to speak to some native Christian. The "Mokss," or missionary, is a person of distinction, and his passage is a procession. Of course, all speech is in Korean; there is no such widespread knowledge of English as in Japan.

As we traversed the country-side the absence of the shrines and idols that mark every Japanese highway was noticeable. Now and then we saw a neglected booth, erected for the propitiation of some evil spirit, but I pass in the mountains we came to a tree with stones heaped around it; it supposedly embodied an evil spirit, and every traveler casts a stone at it. The hillsides are covered with grave mounds, regarded as sacred, and before some of these are tablets, now and then sculptured crudely into human form. Broadly speaking, however, Korea may be regarded as a country without a religion.

The country itself is beautiful, largely mountainous, but with fertile valleys. There are many wild fowl, geese, ducks and pheasants, and it is quite usual for the itinerant missionary to carry a gun to provide the meat for his meals. In the interior the missionary occasionally bags a deer or a wild boar; and there is always the possibility of meeting a tiger. Some missionaries, who are a hundred miles from a beefsteak, eat pheasant three times a day because they cannot afford bacon or ham.

From Fifth Avenue to Korea.

After a 15-mile tramp, we reached at dusk the village which was our destination. The welcome that was given to the missionary was really beautiful to behold. Old men and young, with little children in their train, came forward with beaming faces, and with the ancient salutation of "Peace!" they clasped the missionary's hands, squeezed his arm or affectionately patted his shoulders. Yet they had never seen this particular "Mokss," or "shepherd," before. The field is that of Rev. Mr. H. G. Underwood, one of the ministerial secretaries of Korea, but he is absent on furlough, and his duties have fallen to Rev. Earnest E. Hall, a young man who was for several years assistant pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York city. Mr. Hall is still supported by the Fifth Avenue church as its representative in Korea. Many times during the days we were together, I wondered how often he thinks of the contrast between Fifth Avenue congregations and these Korean villagers, who, in truth, personify the simple life.

The best room in one of the largest houses in the village was made ready for us by the easy process of the family's tumbling out, since the room was absolutely devoid of all furnishings except a chest for best clothes and treasures. From the ceiling, which was a lofty one for Korea, being seven or eight feet high, hung various articles, such as a cheese-shaped box. The entrance to the room was through a paper-covered doorway four feet high by two wide. There was a small window, likewise of paper, on either side of the room. The dimensions of the latter were 6 feet by 12, so that the missionary congratulated himself on our roomy quarters. Eight by eight is the normal room.

Christianity's Remarkable Growth.

While we were at supper a Korean Christian entered with the news that in a small village two hours farther on where no missionary had visited, a group of believers (that word is commonly used in Korea) had recently sprung up, numbering ten families. They had been visited each Sunday by the Christians from the village and given instruction, but they wanted a missionary to visit them and establish a catechumen class. Mr. Hall's program was too full on the present tour to admit of this, but our stopping place the elder further reported, there were 40 candidates for baptism to be examined. This particular community illustrates the phenomenal Christianization of this country, which is not less than a generation removed from the rank heathenism and a seclusion which earned for it the title of "The Hermit Nation." The settlement comprises 18 houses and of these 25 are Christian.

Practically the entire village turned out for the evening service, most of them carrying Bibles and hymn books. The singing was led by the missionary, the latter being no doubt the congregation is dependent upon his visits for new tunes, though they retain with surprising correctness the ones formerly learned. Mr. Hall also taught the people, by having them repeat the words after him, the first confession and answer of the Westminster Shorter Catechism, which has lately been rendered into Korean. The long-honored figure, "drank in every word," best expresses the attitude of the congregation toward the exercises.

While the missionary preached, I watched the people. All except the children were in white. Many of the women, who were curtained off from the men, had babies on their backs or at their breasts. Some of the men were the wide, horn spectacles of the Chinese scholar. All except the few unmarried ones had their hair done up in top-knots, with a brain squeezing black net band around their heads. Most wore the horse-hair inner cap.

The children were clothes of many colors—pink, yellow and green predominating. Candidly, all would have looked better for an application of soap and water; the Korean has not yet fully learned the godliness of dirt. None of the people showed the foreign influence in their clothes, as is the case in Seoul, where even the topknot is beginning to disappear. In the latter place I saw a boy in church whose dress consisted of Japanese imitation of American shoes; stockings with black, yellow and green stripes fastened with a purple garter; white, baggy Korean trousers; a red coat, tied under the arms with lavender ribbon; a pale green sweater peeping above it at the neck, and a brown plush scarf about his throat somewhat like the hangings of an old fashioned pullman car. His headgear was a Japanese military cap. Korean children, like their elders, sit on the floor during service with the foot of one leg crossed over the thigh of the other; and, like their elders, they are quiet and attentive.

Putting Converts Through the Mill.

After the service was over, the elders gathered around the missionary and proffered formal request that he come as soon as possible and spend a few days in teaching them the Bible. Mr. Hall had to put them off with a vague promise, as his field is too large for him to do more than look over it. I was interested to note that, while a number of missionaries have felt adopt various devices to attract hearers, such as English classes, cooking classes, etc., in Korea the people seem to want simply the Bible; and the missionaries are unable to meet the demand for the teaching of it.

Early the next morning, after a slight which in the interest of delicacy would better be passed over with out comment, the missionary began the work of examining the 40 applicants for baptism. The three "Heads ers" of the local church, and a visitelog elder from Seoul, sat on the floor of our sleeping room, and the candidates were brought in one by one. The first was a man of 40 who had learned to read in order to read the Bible, a common experience among the Korean converts. The next was a boy of 12, son of Christian parents. Then came a young man of 28, then an old man. A bright boy of 12, with his hair up in a top-knot, in token of being "a man," had been married a year to a girl of 15, also a believer. Although married, these children reside with their own parents; the missionary instructed them to do so until they have reached the marriageable age fixed by the church, which is 16 years for a girl and 18 for a man. Many such practical problems as these arise among a people fresh from rank heathenism.

After watching the examinations for several hours, and having the questions translated to me, I must say that the fitness of the candidates for church membership is very rigidly guarded. The examination is much more rigid than a person has to undergo in order to become a member of a church in America. I told the missionary that I would not risk it in the set; he requires almost a theological education on the part of converts. This strictness is necessary, however, to keep the people from joining the church from us-Christian motives; it would be easy otherwise to turn Christianity to political uses in Korea. I was pleased to note that the strictness of the examination was abated in the case of some ignorant peasant women. One had been a believer nine years, and the leaders testified to her piety; so, although she could not read nor answer many of the questions, she was taken into the church.

All day long the missionary worked over these examinations, and at five o'clock he had only got through 26 persons; the others were told to wait until his next visit. Fourteen of the candidates were passed for baptism and retained in the same business class for a while longer. Just before dusk a leader went out and blew a whistle, to summon the people to church, and the people laid aside their labors and assembled for the baptismal service. This was a most brief and impressive. I think I shall remember this sight of the procession of white-clad villagers with Bibles and hymn books under their arms, filing down the hill from the church at sunset.

When we hastened away from the village, the people gathered with many good wishes. The simplicity, open-heartedness and affection of these child-like Christians is really affecting. Because I was with Mr. Hall they considered me a missionary-in-law, I suppose, and they greet me of with such demonstrations of interest and such repeated benedictions as to not often fall to the lot of a journalist. It was a new sensation. I rather like it so that when on the day following, a boy carrying on his back two 12-foot timbers of telegraph-pole thickness (a Korean coolie will carry four times his weight and six times his bulk) stopped me with a friendly nod and squeezed my arm, I took it for granted that he had seen me at church and I responded with the salutation of "Peace," which I had learned.

As we went on our way from each village some of the elders would accompany us, as the Ephesian elders accompanied the Apostle Paul. The custom is an oriental one, as is also the constantly repeated salutation of "Peace! Peace!"

Summing up the whole trip, three facts especially impressed me. 1. The receptivity of the Koreans toward Christianity, in eagerness and comprehension. 2. The thoroughness of the work of the missionary, and the vigilance with which church membership is guarded. 3. The remarkable fact that the missionary has no time to go after people he do any pioneer evangelistic work; the church is propagating itself. Here, in two decades, has been created a native church that is wholly self-supporting and self-extending. I have no doubt that if the present missionary force in Korea were quadrupled or sextupled at once, practically the whole nation would become Christian in less than a score of years.

WIDENING THE FIELD

MAKING GREATER OPPORTUNITY FOR SONS OF FARMERS.

BUILDING UP THE HOME TOWN

Some Causes for Complaint Which Can Be Eliminated by the United Efforts of the People.

How often do we hear it said that the young man has not the opportunity that the young men of a score of years ago had. How great is the complaint of trusts and combinations which control industries to the detriment of the smaller ones in business, and how often is reference made to these combinations in the large cities at the cost of the smaller towns.

Innovations in business methods have been many. It may be said that this is an era of economical methods; that evolution is going on continually broadening the field for individual effort and making possible the operation of small enterprises. There can be no doubt as to the detrimental effects upon small towns of this business concentration in the larger cities. Pessimists deplore the lack of opportunity for the young men of to-day. At the same time the very conditions put forth the cry that there is a scarcity of the right kind of material for important places of trust. However this may be, there is one thing evident, and that is, small towns being kept from advancing narrows the field for the young men who would otherwise enjoy an opportunity to engage in business.

Traveling to the large city for employment, the youth, perhaps, seeks a clerkship at moderate wages. There are thousands of others that he must compete with in the race for success. His field is narrowed. It is not often that he has fair competition, and favoritism he finds is one of the obstructions in his path. The cure for this condition is to devise means of enlarging the scope and importance of the so-called country towns.

There is no economical reason why the large city should have the business that rightfully belongs to the small town. There is no saving in buying goods at a distant point even though a small percentage may be saved thereby. Whenever a resident of a community sends his money to some other community for the necessities that he requires, he robs his own home town of a certain amount of business. Employment is given to the people of the large city instead of the people of the local community.

It has been estimated that more than 50 per cent. of the trade goes from some communities to larger cities. If this trade were given to the home town, it would immediately double its business importance and give a corresponding increase in employment for the people. This means that the population of the town would be increased and the opportunity for engaging in business would be greater. Not only this, but it is an established principle that the value of farm lands to a great extent are dependent upon the activity of the town near which the farms may be located. Thus it is seen that if the sons of farmers would have greater opportunities open to them for engaging in business, it is for the interest, by close adhering to the home trade and home protection principle, to make them the field for individual effort in a business way.

HELPS FOR TOWN BUILDERS.

Strangers to a town form their opinions as to its people by the attractiveness of the business places and the residences. In a town where the buildings are dingy and the stocks of goods below those of the stores are carelessly arranged, it is evidence that there is a lack of enterprise. It pays the business men of a town to be careful as to the exterior appearance of their places of business.

Small towns usually contain but few expensive residences. It matters little whether expensively built residences are if the buildings are kept well painted and the yards neat and clean. This is evidence of the good taste of the people.

* * *

In many towns in country districts are hitching posts placed here and there before the stores. It is generally the case that where these are placed no regulations as to the placing of hitching posts indiscriminately in the streets exist. It would be well when some side street that is convenient to the business portion of the town is selected where and others can hitch their teams instead of in front of the stores.

* * *

Good sidewalks give the strangers to a town a favorable impression of the place, and also they are economical as in many ways and may prove a matter of economy through the prevention of accidents that might give cause for damage against the town corporation.

* * *

Nearly every small town has its public park. It is often noticed that these parks are like they were. They are public pastures and serve no good purpose as places where the people of the town can meet evenings for social intercourse. People of towns should take pride in keeping the public parks in good condition. They can be made pretty spots with but little effort and expense.

OPPRESSION IN FOREIGN LANDS.

Laborers Reduced to Slavery Through Systems of Land Holding.

Americans should be thankful for the liberty that their form of government affords. It is only necessary to study into conditions as they obtain in many of the European countries, to have one's heart moved for the common classes of the people of those countries. The holding of vast estates by the nobility has reduced the peasant classes to a condition of serfdom.

In these countries it is also noticeable that the artisans, and the workers in the mills, receive wages that are barely sufficient to buy them food and clothing. In many of the continental countries of Europe the farm laborer receives as compensation from $1 to $1.50 a week. In Silesia, where there are large cotton factories, expert weavers receive from $2.25 to $3 per week, and women employed at like work earn less than $2 per week. Even in Old England, where labor is said the best of any European country, in the cotton factories the scale for labor runs from $4.56 to $10.20 a week. Where wages are so low it is impossible for the people to save money, and it is necessary that they live upon the plainest and cheapest food in order to make ends meet.

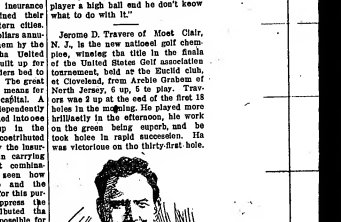
In comparison with these countries how grand are the opportunities for the laborer in the United States! In America there are homes that all may build unto them. In no part of the earth is there such reward for individual effort. It is said by some that there is a tendency even in this free country toward oligarchy. That the tendency towards the concentration of financial power and business in the densely populated districts is a menace that is too lightly estimated. The preventive remedy for this evil lies in the hands of the masses. There is great need of the people in general studying more deeply into economic subjects. The simple principles upon which business rests appear to be little understood by the average citizens. The remedy for the prevention of the building up of one section of the United States at the cost of another section is readily at hand, and each and every citizen can do his part in administering the remedy.

For many years great insurance companies have maintained their headquarters in large eastern cities. Millions upon millions of dollars annually were contributed to them by the people in all parts of the United States. The vast funds built up for the protection of policyholders tend to seek profitable investment. The great captains of finance evolved means for the employment of the capital. A dozen small industries independently conducted would be combined into one by one man, capitalized far up in the millions and the money contributed to the funds maintained by the insurance companies utilized in carrying out the plans of the great combinations. Thus it can be seen how enterprises have been built up and the money of the people used for this purpose, and too often to oppress the classes that contributed the funds which made it possible for bringing into existence these combinations.

It can be understood how essential it is that industries of this kind be established in the different states, and how the money contributed by the people of a state to a company in some other state works directly to the disadvantage of the people of the state. A better whole good in the insurance business applies equally to other industries. By keeping the earnings of people in the community where these earnings are produced, it is to the best interests of the people. If it is necessary that they be sent from the community, as far as possible keep in the country within the limits of the state, for what assists a state to greatness makes lighter the burden of taxation upon all the people within it and materially helps every community within the state.

The student can quickly understand how the concentration of business and of money can be prevented by a simple rule which involves the patronage of local institutions and the retaining in each community as far as possible all the wealth produced within that community. If this principle be closely adhered to it will be impossible for any acquirement of such vast power to still oppress the people as the case as the common classes of many of the European countries are oppressed.

Need a Good Bank.



A good bank is a valuable asset for the small town. It encourages habits of prosperity; people of almost every community have a surplus amount of money to deposit in bank, or to invest in a way that will bring a fair margin of interest. Lately a system has been worked up of doing a banking business by mail. Alleged savings banks and investment companies in the cities advertise and solicit deposits. Many who have little knowledge of financial affairs make deposits in these banks. The Lincoln bank at St. Park, Ill., was one of these institutions that made a great offer to the people of agricultural districts in order to secure deposits. More than $1,000,000 were deposited by farmers and others in this concern. Within a year it was declared unsound by the State Bank Examiners, and the promoter of it placed under arrest and charged with fraud. The poor deluded depositors are not likely to receive five per cent. of their deposits. Remember that when you send your money from your local community it ceases to be any factor in developing home industries or in adding to the wealth of the place. It is better always to patronize home banks, than

Sporting Gossip.

Ted Everett, of Buffalo, who is managing an amateur baseball team in London, England, as a summer pastime, has written a letter to a friend, telling how the great game is misplayed in dear old Lannon. Part of the letter reads as follows: "Well, the game over here is really a-dregs, and I don't know just what to say about it. Americans make up most of the teams in the British league, and you would be surprised to see some of the resident Americans who come out to play. Some are so regular as clockwork and play in all kinds of weather. The weather has been anything but good for baseball, and this has given most of us old horses stiff legs and sore arms, and consequently young sore arms, and consequently young scrubs have had somewhat the advantage. Our team is composed mostly of chaps older than myself, and you know after an illness of some years, it is no cinch to get out and run about bases, throw balls, etc. They are trying to make the game popular over here as a summer pastime. So few Englishmen understand anything about it that the best plays are not generally weedered at. Close, snappy games are not seen very often, and they want le lots of hitting, plenty of running, and errors don't enter into the thing at all. We played a corking good 6 to 5 game not long ago, and the spectators didn't have any use for it at all. We had several good catches, double plays and some really good fielding, but all of this was wasted on the yellow hammers. Pollewlog our game came the reserve team, which ended with a score something like 83 to 2, filled with bad hitting, all sorts of running and innumerable errors. This game was just what the people wanted, and they had a great time. There are some English football players and cricket players in the team, and can tell them by every move. Throw a cricket player a high ball and he don't know what to do with it."

Jerome D. Travers of Mont Clair, N. J., is the new national golf champion, winning the title in the finals of the United States Golf association tournament, held at the Euclid club, at Cleveland, from Archie Graham of North Jersey, 6 up, 5 to play. Travers was 2 up at the end of the first 18 holes in the morning. He played more brilliantly in the afternoon, he won the game being superb, and he took holes in rapid succession. Ha was victorious on the thirty-first hole.

JEROME TRAVERS

Graham was defeated on a cold, but could not offset the brilliant work of his youthful opponent. Travers is a mere youth, being but seven and a half years over seven years. In addition to being national champion, he is the amateur champion of New Jersey present Metropolitan and New Jersey title holder; he also won the Princeton and Wilmington open oreeate this year. He has participated in four national tournaments.

Bob Courtney is a mighty coach. But there is one Cornell undergraduate who can never be persuaded to believe so. And here is the story of an occurrence that away back in the youth's present opinion of the veteran oarsman.

When the first squad went into training for the varsity crew this year, one big freshman attracted Coach Courtney's notice. That boy had the build, size, rugged, long-reached frame of an oarsman and seemed alive with enthusiasm. Courtney kept his eye on him. When the lad was slow on the recovery, too easppy on the stroke, and persisted in making his slides jerky, the coach carefully pointed out each failing. But to his disgust those admonitions had no effect upon the big freshmen's "form" worsa and worsa. His knew absolutely nothing about rowing, and Courtney asked:

"How did you learn to row?"

"Eighteen," aeswared the freshman.

"You must have been born more ignorant than a Hottentot," snapped Courtney. "You never could have acquired all you don't know in tha few years you've lived."

Ohio is a great baseball state. Cleveland is a good second in the American league. Columbus leads tha American association, with Toledo second. Springfield has the honors in the Central, and Canton is third; Newark is ahead in the O. and P., and Youngstown, to accord Steubenville occupies the leading position in the F. O. M., and Zanesville is third. The National league is the only one in which Ohio teams do not make a good showing. Cincinnati being in the second division.

Washington Gossip

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—To his hired help Uncle Sam is generous to a degree, going down into his wallet to the extent of something like $3,000,000 annually to give them a 30-days' outing at the seashore or in the mountains.

This sum is for the army of employes in Washington alone and does not include the thousands of others who are on duty and on the payrolls throughout his vast domain and in foreign countries. Liberal lawmakers decided that ten months each year was long enough for employes to work, and that 30 days for annual leave. At first this law was for the officials and clerks only, and did not include printers, pressman and navy yard workmen. Eventually these were given 15 days annual leave, and finally, through hard and persistant efforts, the full 30 days. No sick leave, however, has ever been granted them, and, strange as it may appear, they seem to be the healthiest class of government workers. The government printing office, the bureau of engraving and printing, and the navy yard are not classed as "hospitals for invelids," as the treasury and other departments are termed. Not getting pay for being sick, those not entitled to such leave manages to remain in extraordinarily good health and perform their duties with great regularity.

So badly abused has been the sick leave privilege that at the last session of congress what appeared to be a determined effort was made to repeal the law, but the matter was permitted to go over, giving the Roop commission and other reformers an opportunity to make further investigation and secure facts and figures. If one is to judge by the policy of retrenchment and reform so strenuously carried out by the present administration, it is entirely safe to assert that sick leave will not be one of the pickups now enjoyed by government workers after the next session of congress.

There are in Washington about 81,000 employes of Uncle Sam. The salary and wages paid will aver $1,200 each, male and female. This gives to each individual employe $100 leave money, and is ready on call for officials and clerks any time during the calendar year, but employes of the class stated are not entitled to leave until the beginning of the fiscal year —July 1.

WILSON BARS WOMEN AS PRIVATE SECRETARIES

HEREAFTER women clerks of the department of agriculture will not be permitted to act as private secretaries or confidential clerks for male chiefs of divisions or bureaus.

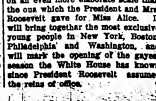
Secretary Wilson has no prejudice against them, but he deems it due to them that not one of them be required to perform services that will bring her into such relations with her chief as to enable evelinddied characsons to do any gossiping. He considers it better for the good name of the woman employes in the department to make a rule that men chiefs of division shall have men as private secretaries or confidential clerks.

The fact that the secretary had prescribed such a rule for his own guidance has become known recently through his refusal to permit a woman stenographer to be detailed as clark to a chief of hrreeu. He is perfectly willing to have the stenographers take dictation from the chiefs of bureaus, but he will not allow them to be detailed to fill positions the duties of which might require them to remain after the working hours or to go to the homes of the chiefs to finish work outside of office hours.

Two years ago, when there was a scandal in the department, the woman who performed the duties of private secretary for a bureau chief for several years, was brought into a notoriety altogether displeasing to the secretary.

A majority of the men chiefs do not want women in such positions, but occasionally one comes along who is so well pleased with the work done by a stenographer clerk that he asks to have her promoted and made private secretary. Requests of that kind are being refused.

THE flag that floated over Fort McHenry during the bombardment by the British on the night of September 13, 1814, and which inspired Francis Scott Key when he saw it still floating over the ramparts at sunrise the next morning to write the "Star-Spangled Banner," is now upon exhibition in the hall of history at the Smithsonian institution.



The flag, which is about 32x30 feet, has been loaned to the institution by Mr. Eben Appleton of New York, for two years upon the personal solicitation of Dr. Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the institution. As the flag lies draped in the glass case, only one of the large stars is visible. It is backed by canvas stated to have been placed there by the late Admiral Preble, formerly stationed at the Boston navy yard. As little of the flag can be seen in its present resting place, it is the purpose of the officials of the institution to drape it upon one of the walls of the hall of history, where it can be plainly viewed by the visitors to the building.

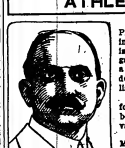
According to J. B. Taylor, of the United States coast and geodetic survey, Col. Armstead, who commanded Fort McHenry during the bombardment by the British fleet, took the flag after the retreat of the fleet and had it cut in two and had it conveyed to his headquarters. He later gave it to his mother, who was a sister of Mr. Taylor's great-great-grandfather.

ETHEL ROOSEVELT WILL HAVE GAY COMING OUT

WHEN Miss Ethel Roosevelt makes her formal bow to society at the White House next winter Washington will see the first of a series of entertainments such as have not been held since the days of Nellie Grant. True, the social career of Mrs. Douglas Langworth, as Alice Roosevelt, was marked by many notable affairs in Washington, but with the exception of a few small dinners which were given for her shortly before she was married there was only one large entertainment at the White House which was strictly for Alice, and that was her coming out ball.



Whether the continuous showar of attentions from her friends and society generally precluded Miss Alice from having many affairs of her own was never made clear.

Miss Ethel's first season as a society girl will be notable. According to the present plans, which are being discussed, a brilliant ball will be given for Miss Ethel next January. Mrs. Roosevelt gave for Miss Alice, Cathedral school after the Christmas holidays.

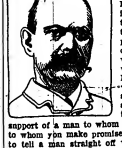
Miss Ethel is very anxious to make her debut while her father is president. The debut ball will be given in the east room and will be planned on an even more elaborate scale than the one which the President and Mrs. Roosevelt gave for Miss Alice. It will bring together the most exclusive young people in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, and will mark the opening of the gayest season the White House has known since President Roosevelt assumed the reins of office.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

ATHLETE IN CHARGE

Georgs W. Woodruff, who has been named by President Roosevelt as acting secretary of the interior during the absence of Secretary Garfield, is one of the best-known authorities on outdoor games in the country, an all around athlete with a number of splendid records to his credit and developed the Pennsylvania university and Carlisle Indian football elevens.

His was the unusual record of having been for his entire four years a member of the football eleven, the track and field teams and the varsity crew. He captained the crew of 1889.



After finishing his classical course at Yale, Mr. Woodruff went to the University of Pennsylvania to study law, and it was here that he made his reputation as one of the foremost football tacticians of his day.

When Mr. Woodruff left collega a fighter was wanted in the forest service as law officer, and Mr. Woodruff got the appointment, becoming chief aid to Gifford Pinchot, the government forester. He did yeoman service in organizing the national forest reserve policy, and his industry and ability especially commended itself to the president, who soon discovered that the energetic, restless, planning, hustling attorney was a man of much his own mold.

The acting secretary of the interior is about the same age as Mr. Roosevelt and is not unlike the president in appearance. The shape of the face, with the prominent teeth, the mustache and the expression of restless energy are not unlike.

Mr. Woodruff is one of five assistants to the attorney general, and is connected with the department of justice, though his assignment is to give advice to the department of the interior in matters where legal points are raised.

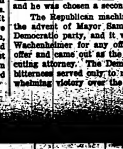
GOTHAM CITY CHAMBERLAIN

James J. Martin, the newly-appointed city chamberlain of New York, who is expected to join Mayor McClellan in his fight to oust Charles F. Murphy from the leadership of Tammany Hall, is one of the most powerful district leaders in the metropolis. He is pointed out as the "last of the old school of politicians," and he says he is proud of the distinction. The notion that the successful politician of the present day is the man who can shake hands smile sweetly and promise without either fulfilling or offending is scorned by Mr. Martin.

"Politicians should stick more to the truth," says he. "I admit, and I know that it pays. Now and then it creates a little friction for a short time, but it disappears. You can never hold the support of a man to whom you lie, nor can you hold as a friend a man to whom you make promises that you do not keep. My policy always was to tell a man straight off whether I could do a thing or not. If I said I would, I did, and I got along all right."

Mr. Martin was born in Ireland and came to this country a babe in arms. At the age of 11 years he went to work as an office boy for a lawyer. In 1863, in company with several other boys, he ran away from home and enlisted in the Ninth New York volunteers. He served on the field for a year and then was made head of the clerical force with Gen. Dix. He continued in this office until the end of the war.

JAPAN'S FOREMOST DIPLOMAT



Viscount Hayashi, minister of foreign affairs in the Japanese cabinet, who recently went to Seoul, the Korean capital, in the interests of his country, which is hopeful that the emperor will abdicate the throne as requested by the premier, is a man much feared by those who would have the present government continue. After the emperor had refused to relinquish his power Japan lost no time in sending Hayashi to the scene and the news of his arrival spread dismay about the palace.

The circumstances leading up to the selection of Hayashi for the important office he now holds are interesting. Marquis Saionji, the prime minister, in reorganizing his cabinet, gave the portfolio of foreign affairs to Takashi Kato, formerly minister to England. After holding the office only a few days Mr. Kato suddenly resigned, it is said, for reasons never made public. Thereupon Ambassador Hayashi, then at the court of St. James, received an unexpected call to return to Japan and he was placed in the cabinet.

Viscount Hayashi is only 47 years of age, having been born in 1850 in Sakura, a little town near Yedo. His father was a prominent scholar and physician and the son was given a careful education in law and languages. His ability was early recognized and in 1870 he was sent to England to familiarize himself with Anglo-Saxon civilization. In 1891 he was appointed vice minister and began his diplomatic life. As soon as the war with China was over he was sent as minister to China and his success at this post was brilliant. His chief achievement was the commercial treaty between China and Japan which was negotiated and signed by him in 1896. It was he, too, who signed the dual treaties of the British alliance treaty. He was created viscount for bringing about this treaty.

SENT MAGNATES TO JAIL

Lyman Wheeler Vaschenheimer, the prosecuting attorney through whose efforts 33 Toledo lumbermen and brick men have been sentenced to jail for violation of the anti-trust laws, is 46 years old and a native of Toledo. He has always been a Democrat. Nine years ago he was nominated for police judge. His opponent was Scott Kelly, who had been nominated for a third term. Kelly was very popular, Toledo was almost hopelessly Republican; nevertheless Mr. Wachenheimer was elected. Before his term was half completed he was the most popular official in the city. He was a terror to law breakers, and the result was a perceptible diminution of crime in Toledo. He well liked was Judge Washeiheimer that it was difficult to get a Republican to run against him, and he was chosen a second and third time, by overwhelming majorities.

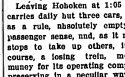
The Republican machine, which had controlled Toledo politics prior to the advent of Mayor Sam Jones, was in close touch with a wing of the Democratic party, and it was proposed by this combine to nominate Judge Wachenheimer for any office he chose to designate. But he rejected the offer and came out as the people's champion and was nominated for prosecuting attorney. The Democratic city boss called him traitor, but their bitterness served only to nerve him to greater effort, and he won an overwhelming victory over the bosses.

Around the Metropolis

What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

NEW YORK.—Plans for making New York a "city beautiful" and obliterating the ugly spots, including Chinatown and other districts of the East side, as well as to enhance the famous old Battery, are now well under way. Civic organizations are making concerted efforts to wipe out these eyesores, which have come gradually, and to which the public has been accustomed. The Battery will possibly be the first spot to be improved. This, in its present shape, makes anything but a beautiful gateway to America for ships. The Battery is now sadly torn up as a consequence of the construction of the great McAdoo tunnel and its greensward is defaced by many unsightly shacks, piles of lumber and what not. These are visible to the eye of every immigrant coming into the port and surely when they view the landscape they never look for the mythical "gold" street, which years ago was supposed to be paved with double eagles. Some of the city beautifiers are possibly going to step too far in the matter of revolutionizing the landscape. There are a few of them who would deprive Broadway of its beautiful electric signs. Think of the great white way without its electric lights! The thousands of incandescent lights marvelously illumicate the thoroughfare and in artistically beautiful devices "bark" during the dark hours for everything from the newest design of a hatpin to champagne and corsets. The lights should not be forgotten, because they are the whole of Broadway. Take them off the street and it would resemble "Main" street in a big country town. It is Riverside drive, not far from the luxurious palace of Charles M. Schwab, and certain parts of Fifth avenue, where dwell some of the wealthiest families in the world, that improvements are needed.

TEDDY BEARS UNDER BAN OF SCHOOL TEACHERS

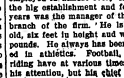


THE hundred thousand Teddy bears in the metropolis are on the verge of panic. Though the nature-faking controversy left them unscathed, a newer and greater peril confronts them. School teachers are declaring that the Teddy bear is a menace and must be abolished, and though the board of education has taken no official action in the matter, and is not likely to, the agitation against the Teddies in educational circles is growing very strong indeed.

The crusade against the Teddy bear started recently, when a clerical gentlemen came out with a statement that in replacing the doll, the bear was a pernicious substitute. For, while the doll appealed to all the maternal instincts of a little girl and developed them along healthy and natural lines, the Teddy bear did no such thing.

Now the teachers have joined the fight. Little girls, they point out, formerly got their first lessons in sewing through the natural desire to provide their dolls with pretty clothes. The Teddy bear, however, does not wear clothes, save possibly a ribbon or sweater or coat, and so the up-to-date child who has discarded her dollies for the intrusive brute, has no incentive to learn to stitch or make button holes.

"The Teddy bear is not good for little girls," said Miss Ella G. Chose, a supervisory teacher of sewing in the New York schools. "The bear is keeping the children from the pleasure of caring for a doll. He can't wear pretty frocks and dainty underclothes, and the little girl who has him for a pet gets no incentive to make these things. Hence she loses the education involved in dainty garments. The Teddy bear is all right for boys, but not for girls."



DURING the peculiar eminence that the family of McCurdy, of insurance fame, built up, the Delaware & Lackawanna railroad paid tribute. The McCurdy family lived at Morris Plains, which is the next station on the line of the railway named beyond Morristown. The D., L. & W. ran reasonably frequent trains as expresses to Morristown, several of them without a stop from Hoboken to the old capital of Morris county is the evening and an equal number in the morning hours from Morristown to Hoboken.

Some four years ago the McCurdys applied to the railway company for an express to leave Hoboken at an hour when commuters could have little use for it, and that train was supplied. It leaves New York at 12:50, runs to Summit without stop, and is due at Morris Plains at two p. m. Its schedule time is about 15 minutes faster than any other fast train on the road to the same place. Even the fast through expresses do not make the time it does. But that is not its central point of interest.

Leaving Hoboken at 1:00 p. m., it carries daily but three cars, that are, as a rule, absolutely empty in the passenger sense, and, as it makes no stops to take up others, it is, of course, a losing train, making no money for its operating company, but preserving in a peculiar way the demand of an interested clientele. A casual and lonely traveler upon it, nothing but the conductor lived at Morris Plains, but since they had left there was no reason for its continuance, except that it served a train crew up to Morris Plains to return on an accommodation. It is the peculiar illustration of what scientists call the retention of the original principle.

"McCURDY TRAIN" STILL RUNS TO MORRIS PLAINS

J. P., JR., GRADUALLY TAKING FATHER'S PLACE

J. PIERPONT MORGAN, JR., is slowly getting into the harness which his father is slowly getting out of. Last year he had taken his father's place as director in only two companies—the International Mercantile Marine company and the Northern Pacific Railroad company. This year he is on the boards of two others—the Arcadia Coal company, of New York, and the North British & Mercantile Insurance company.

But these facts of public record do not indicate the extent to which Mr. Morgan, Jr., has shifted to his son the cares and responsibilities of his Wall street office. For several years the older Morgan has been trying to remain more at home with his books and art treasures, or on his yacht, the Corsair. It has been a hard thing to do, for the "old man," as the street calls him, has been so accustomed that even yet—he was 70 last April—other financiers, finding themselves in a difficulty, seek him out and beg for his suggestions.

But J. P. Morgan, Jr., will succeed his father when he really retires from active work. The son has been carefully trained for the important position he will assume in the financial world, in colleges and in the office. He has been employed in almost every capacity in the big establishment and for several years was the manager of the London branch of the firm. He is 40 years old, six feet in height and weighs 200 pounds. He always has been interested in athletics. Football, golf and riding have at various times engaged his attention, but his chief delight is yachting.

THIRD VICTIM OF GOTHAM STRANGLER

BODY OF EIGHT-YEAROLD GIRL IS FOUND IN BASEMENT IN NEW YORK.

Worst of Three Cases—Child, Who Disappeared a Week Ago, Was Shockingly Maltreated, Killed and Mutilated—Cobbler Suspected.

New York, Aug. 3.—"The graveyard," as the foreign-populated neighborhood on First avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, is known locally, gave up yesterday a fresh crime, rivalling in atrocity the mysterious butcheries of last week. The latest discovered victim was the eight-year-old girl, and, like the two young women murdered, she had been shockingly mistreated before death, and the body mutilated when life was extinct.

The three murders are strikingly similar. Last Thursday night a woman was strangled to a Twenty-second street boarding house; the next morning the body of a still unidentified woman, who had been choked to death, was found in an areaway in East Ninetieth street. Katie Pritschler, daughter of a restaurant waiter, disappeared a week ago and was missing that night. A ribbon placed about the throat and drawn so tightly that it cut the flesh showed how she died. Her body was the one found Thursday.

Most Brutal of the Three.

If the brutality of the murders can be qualified, that of the Pritschler girl ranks first. She was assaulted, murdered and then her lifeless form was horribly mutilated.

"The graveyard" takes its name from the proximity of the old Thirteenth street cemetery and the locality has been the scene of several revolting murders. The majority of the residents are foreigners.

Carl Pritschler, the father of Katie, is a hard working, respectable citizen. He has several other children, all younger than Katie.

Body Found After a Week.

The girl left her home at 319 East Thirteenth street last Thursday night to play in the street. When she failed to return the father notified the police and a general alarm was sent out. The body was discovered within a block of her home and scarcely a hundred yards from the location of a pincard placed by the father, calling attention to the fact that the child was lost. How the body could have remained undiscovered for a week is not explained.

The girl's body was stumbled upon by a woman who visited the basement of the house at 103 East Fourteenth lay upon a berry crate with seemingly no effort at concealment.

"You can say for me," Coroner Harbinger declared, "that the crimes in Berlin, of which the newspapers have told, have not been committed sandth part as bad as the murder of this little girl."

Cobbler Under Suspicion.

At the coroner's direction, Gaetano Rippolano, whose cobbler shop adjoins the girl's home, was arrested and asked to explain his absence from his shop on last Friday. He established the fact that he had spent the day at Bristol, Conn. The girl is said to have frequented Rippolano's place and a search of the shop brought to light a man's shirt which bore red stains. The cobbler was arraigned and remanded to the coroner.

The police also began a search for a woman who is said to have formerly roomed at the Pritschler home, but who left there after a quarrel and took lodgings in the house where the girl's body was found.

TAKEN FROM "HOLY JUMPERS."

Iowa Girl Convert is Ordered Returned to Her Home.

Waukesha, Wis., Aug. 3.—Olga Lundell, the 17-year-old Swedish girl, who has been a member of the "Holy Jumpers" sect at the Fountain house in this city for several months past, and whose mother came here to secure her release, was Friday evening, on the order of Court Commissioner Hamlock, given in custody of the sheriff of Waukesha county, who was ordered to take the girl to Iowa, despite the fact that she testified on the stand that she desired to remain with the "Jumpers," that being "the Lord's wish."

The courtroom was crowded to suffocation and the order of the court was received with great shouts of approval by the citizens who heard the verdict.

Noted Boston Clergyman Dies.

Washington, Aug. 1.—Secretary Nott Wednesday approved a recommendation of the Sheridan statue commission and directed that a contract for that statue to Gutzon Borglum, a New York sculptor. The commission agreement given to A. Ward was cancelled because the design failed to please Mrs. Sheridan.

JOHNSON MAY SEND TROOPS

MINNESOTA GOVERNOR WARNS LEADER OF STRIKERS.

Active Resistance by Them Will Bring Armed Interference—Ore Handlers' Strike Ended.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 1.—After a consultation with his advisers Wednesday afternoon, Gov. Johnson declined to send personal representatives to the iron range to investigate and report to him whether or not it would be advisable to send state troops there. The governor's reports regarding the situation here have been of so conciliatory a character that this course of action was deemed necessary.

Gov. Johnson said Wednesday night that he had sent three men to the iron range to investigate conditions, but declined to give their names. The governor in the afternoon sent the following to Petrielle, the miners' leader, in answer to a telegram from Petrielle:

"St. Paul, Minn., July 31, 1907.—T. Petrielle: The mining companies state that it is not true that they have refused to pay the men their June wages; that they are willing to pay all the men anything coming to them; they also state it is not true that their armed employes or deputies have patrolled the balls where the men are holding meetings or prevented them from holding meetings in Hibbing. Any resistance of the kind you threaten would call for armed interference by me, when all men alike will be protected in their liberty and property. John A. Johnson."

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 1.—Shortly before two o'clock Wednesday afternoon the ore dock workers, who have been on a strike for recognition of the union and e raise in pay, voted to return to work. Neither of the issues raised by the men was granted by the Duluth, Missabe & Northern railroad and the men will return to work Thursday morning. Their status will be the same as it was the day they voted to strike. All of the employes will be taken back by the company without prejudice and the pay they have been receiving, under a temporary agreement with the company which would not have expired until October 31 next, will continue.

ACCUSED OF ROBBING MAILS.

Senior Clerk in Post Office at Columbia, Tenn., Arrested.

Columbia, Tenn., Aug. 2.—Nell N. Hughes, senior clerk in the Columbia post office, and Postmaster A. M. Hughes, of Columbia, was arrested by United States post office inspectors Thursday morning, charged with robbing the mails.

The arrest was made by means of a decoy letter. Hughes waived examination and gave bond for his appearance at the next term of the federal court. He is a member of one of the most prominent families of the state.

The arrest was the culmination of a number of robberies at the Columbia post office during the past year, wherein money ranging in amounts from one dollar to ten dollars and stamps valued at a few dollars each time have disappeared.

Postmaster Hughes was recently relieved from office by order of the president. His case attracted national attention, alleged neglect of duty being the cause of removal.

WOMAN WORKS AS MAN MINER.

Har Sex Accidentally Discovered After Years of Masquerading.

Washington, Pa., Aug. 1.—Masquerading as a man and working side by side with her husband in the various Washington county coal mines, "Joe" Povis was discovered Wednesday to be a woman. Povis, when she was taken to a hospital suffering from injuries sustained in a mine accident at Cecil.

The woman, according to her husband, Steve Povis, had been working with him three years. Her coarse voice and close-cropped hair developed as to her sex, while her strength equalled that of any of her male Slav companions. The woman acted as Povis's "helper," and was paid by him.

To Stop Warship Explosions.

London, Aug. 1.—As a result of explosions on warships of various navies of the world, attributed to the overheating of magazines, the British admiralty has decided to equip the magazines of all ships in the British navy with refrigerating machinery to keep down the temperature. The total cost of the installation of this device is estimated at $3,500,000.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Aug. 2.—A serious earthquake is prophesied to take place in Uruguay on August 4.

FRED MAGILL AND HIS WIFE INDICTED

GRAND JURY AT CLINTON, ILL., VOTES TRUE BILLS CHARGING THEM WITH MURDER.

Evidence is Said to Be All Circumstantial—State Now Puts Forward Thaney Theft Former Banker's First Spouse Was Smothered.

Clinton, Ill., Aug. 2.—Fred H. Magill and his wife of 24 days, Fayn Graham Magill, were indicted for murder Thursday afternoon by the special grand jury called to weigh the suspicious circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. "Pet" Magill, the bank-er's first wife, on the night of May 30.

The grand jury did not deliberate long over the evidence. After the last witness had retired Hale's Attorney Miller was swindled from the room and the shirt sleeved farmers had their minds made up in half the time.

The word was carried to Magill and his wife in jail, but they did not break down. They declared they were ready for trial and had expected this.

It may be stated authoritatively that the grand jury in all of the four days' session found no direct evidence of murder against either the man or the girl. There was plenty of evidence of a serious nature, but all was circumstantial.

State Pushes New Theory.

That which turned the tide against Magill and his wife and put the murder vote in the realm of certainty was the testimony of Chicago physicians that they could give no reasonable explanation for the woman's death. This gave an opportunity to play up a new and startling theory. That Magill had smothered his wife. The state's attorney took full advantage of the opportunity to inject a greater amount of "reasonable doubt" in the minds of the jurors.

Added to this was his additional fact, which has leaked out, that the friends of Magill, who were rallied up on to testify as to the authenticity of the letters, backed down before the jury.

Sixth Count is Quashed.

Clinton, Ill., Aug. 3.—Judge Cochran Friday sustained a motion to quash the sixth count of both indictments against Fred Magill and his wife. He overruled the motion to quash the other indictments, holding that they were good.

The defense immediately filed a motion to consolidate the two cases, so that both husband and wife would be tried together, and the court took this under advisement. The defense then asked that the cases be set for trial as speedily as possible, and Judge Cochran announced that November 9 would be the earliest possible date, but after considerable argument on this subject, the judge adjourned court until Saturday morning, by which time he will decide whether the trials shall begin next week or in November. The defendants were then arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

Chinese Uprising Feared.

Harbin, Aug. 2.—During the last few days nomadic bands of Tunguses have made frequent raids in Russian territory. THREE DIE ON SCHOOL SHIP

FATAL ACCIDENT ON COURONNE, OF THE FRENCH NAVY.

Breech-Block of Big Gun Blown Off During Target Practice—Five Men Are Injured.

Toulon, Aug. 3.—The breech-block of a hundred millimeter gun was blown off Friday on board the gunnery school ship Couronne during target practice in Salins roadstead, and three persons were killed and five wounded.

The force of the explosion was terrific and the bodies of the dead men were so badly mutilated as to be almost unrecognizable. Three of those wounded are in a serious condition.

As soon as he learned of the accident, Admiral Merquis sent the armored cruiser Latouche Treville to the assistance of the Couronne. Those dead and wounded were then taken aboard the cruiser, which conveyed them to the naval hospital of St. Mandrier, where everything had been prepared for their reception.

The accident caused a sensation in the town, where most of the members of the crew of the Couronne belong, and flags are at half mast as a sign of mourning.

The cause of the explosion is a mystery. It was believed at first that the accident was due to the breech-closing mechanism not working, but a subsequent investigation failed to establish this as a cause. A question was also raised concerning the quality of the powder used in the gun, but nothing tangible was ascertained. The commander of the Couronne has sealed all the guns on board the vessel with a view of forming a board of inquiry to investigate the explosion.

A similar accident occurred on board the Couronne April 19, when three men were killed and a number wounded.

FRANCE AND SPAIN ACTING IN CONCERT

PROMPT MEASURES ARE TAKEN TO MEET THE SITUATION IN MOROCCO.

Former Sending Troops—Several Warships on the Way—Report That Stain Bank at Tangier Has Been Pillaged.

Paris, Aug. 3.—The French and Spanish governments are acting in concert and with great promptness to meet the situation that has arisen in Morocco. A warship of each of these powers is now in the harbor of Casablanca, and three French and one Spanish man-of-war are on the way to Morocco.

France has proposed to Spain the immediate landing of French and Spanish troops at Casablanca, and in anticipation of a favorable reply has prepared three transports at Toulon to convey 2,500 men and 300 horses to Morocco. What further steps, if any, are contemplated have not been made public. Slight delay sod embarrassment in meeting the situation are caused by the absence of Premier Clemenceau, who is of Karlsbad taking the cure.

Limited by Convention.

An official communication issued Friday says that the action of the powers in Morocco is limited to that granted them under the Algeciras conventioo.

Up to midnight no telegram has been received from Tangier reporting the arrival there of fresh news from Casablanca.

A dispatch received here from Oran, Algeria, reports that the State bank at Tangier has been pillaged and that a British consular employe has been captured between Tangier and Fez. There is no confirmation of this news from Tangier.

Spain Sends Second Cruiser.

Madrid, Aug. 3.—The government announces that in addition to the cruiser Infanta Isabel, which already has arrived at Tangier, the cruiser Don Alvaro de Bazan, now at Las Palmas, has been ordered to the Moroccan coast.

Germans Not Pleased.

Berlin, Aug. 3.—The French charge d'affaires here visited the foreign office Friday and informed Foreign Secretary Tschirsky of the situation at Casablanca and the intention of the French government to send warships to Morocco.

The Post, which often reflects the views of the government, discusses the Moroccan situation at length, concluding its article with the statement that Germany will interpose no unnecessary hindrance to France if it is established that the measures she are required to restore order. She will also raise no objection if it is evident that comprehensive measures are required to restore order. She will, however, be little pleased with the turn affairs have taken, and says that if France set out in the beginning to secure control of Morocco, safe seems to be making the way easy for her by constantly bringing up new questions for her to settle more firmly into the saddle.

REFORM FOR NEW MEXICO.

President Tells Gov. Curry in Rulk with Iron Hand.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Radical reforms in the territorial government of New Mexico are to be inaugurated when the arrival in Santa Fe of Governor George Curry, who has just returned from the Philippines to assume that office.

President Roosevelt conferred with Gov. Curry for two hours Wednesday and left him on his way thoroughly imbued with the necessity of ruling with an iron hand until the alleged angels of heaven and graft in New Mexico has been straightened out.

"Clean government is what the president wants," said Gov. Curry on leaving Oyster Bay, "and that is what I shall do my best to establish."

A Sacrificial Adjustment

By JAMES WILLIAM JACKSON

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

A stinted youth had taught him the hatefulness of poverty and filled him with a desire for riches. From the day on which he deposited his first five dollars in the savings bank he had kept unfalteringly to that ambition.

And now there had come out of the great west a girl who defected his ambition from the pole-star of finance. In other days he had smiled indulgently upon the young men whose less forceful minds drifted from their desks to dreams of fair faces and musical voices.

This girl, with her tall grace of figure, possessed a wonderful comeliness, charm of manner and strength of intellect. Already she had told him she could not care, but he held desperately to a forlorn hope.

Writing now for her to come downstairs he heard the rustle of a dress and rose to meet her. She acknowledged his greeting with more than usual gravity.

"I have disturbing news," she explained, clasping her hands with a slight nervousness. "My brother's business has gone wrong."

Grayland was not wholly unprepared for the news, yet it prompted a sudden selfish hope.

"You will come to me, then?" he begged; "I am not rich, but—"

"No, no," she interrupted, warding off the temptation with a hasty gesture. "Think of my father and mother. I must ha their only comfort in this."

She spoke proudly, and Grayland was conscious of a deep admiration. The stern principles which guided her were kin to those that ruled his own life.

He was about to speak as the maid announced her brother's counselor.

"I was never more glad in my life to reach e friendly camp," the visitor confessed, as he sank wearily into a seat. "I have been hunted like a common beggar this livelong day.

"Just come from one of your clients," he continued, addressing Grayland; "trying to raise a loan for Miss Corson's brother. Garrett was the only man I found with a spark of sympathy. He said I could have what I wanted, with your approval."

Grayland was pacing the floor by the time the lawyer finished. A vision of impending happiness suffused his mind; the sensation of a great, half lifted load obscured his heart. He would, a friend, so commend himself to this girl that gratitude should be cet love.

Yet he remained silent for so long that the lawyer spoke fidgetily. Helen looked at him anxiously. He spoke, finally, with an effort.

"Garrett has always trusted me," he hscerted, more to himself than to the others.

He relapsed into silence again until the lawyer prompted him with an anxious "Well?"

"Harsher, I cannot give my approval," he confessed, suddenly, turning to face the lawyer squarely. "The affairs of the company are in much worse shape than the public imagines. It is impossible."

He spoke with a convincing definiteness, and Marsden sat speechless.

"Him alive!" he begged, recovering himself with a start; "dead minister all the way. Your principal is willing to take the risk. He knows what he is doing."

"Yes," Grayland admitted dryly; "he has taken many risks with me, but they were good risks. I have lended the money in this case it must be contrary in my advice."

Grayland resumed the restless pacing, and Marsden dallied with a forlorn hope until he seemed convinced that nothing was to be gained by staying.

"Garrett was our last hope," he declared gloomily. "There will be another wrecked business career and some broken hearts by this time tomorrow. You will know where to place the blame. I bid you good afternoon."

Grayland accompanied him to the door and Helen heard the low tones of the one reiterating his plea and the firm voice of the other withstanding.

When Grayland came back the girl sat wearing her fingers with a slow, nervous movement, her eyes gloomily downcast.

"Helen," he besought; "tell me you are not angry."

She looked up at him searchingly. He met her glance with unflinching eyes.

"Oh, no," she assured him, fervently; "not angry. You did right. I am proud of your strength. But—it—it—costs to be proud." She hid her face with a trembling hand.

"I understand," he murmured. "It is bitterly hard. But I could not approve when it seemed like pouring sunshine through a sieve."

He was explaining, ut apologizing. She knew that.

"You will go away now," he continued. "The father and mother who gave you to the world deserve that sacrifices should be made for them. I love you a thousand-fold more because you think of them."

The door opened and a step was heard. She half started from her seat.

"My brother," she whispered. "Poor boy! He has been so worried."

There was only a moment left to Grayland. She spoke quickly:

"You will let me be your friend, still; and when all is once more wall, you will let me—hope?"

She hesitated, turned and looked at him an instant; and he was content when he heard a simple "Yes."

She was gone. He answered her brother, who came in with dragging step and the worn face which marked long days of battle and short nights of fitful sleep.

Grayland heard a smothered sob as the door closed on his sister; close. He rose to leave them alone; but Corson noted the movement and turned.

"Jess there?" he inquired. "Stay a moment. Helen, listen. I have already expressed to you, Helen, my belief that this man is not worthy of you; that you should never give yourself to a man that would lend his soul at interest."

His sister had drawn away to the full height of that dignity with which she met affront.

"Corson went on: "Grayland advised against a loan to help us out; but despite that Garrett came to our rescue. The magic of his name and millions quieted the mob of creditors and restored confidence. Now there are a dozen willing to help us. We are saved; more than saved, so far as money is concerned."

She received the glad news with a soft cry of relief.

"When Marsden carried to Garrett the decision of his representative this old gentleman said simply: 'Thats finait; I am out.' He had been heartened that John Grayland had offered, unconditionally, every dollar he had in the world in this difficulty. Garrett claimed a prior privilege. That turned the tide; the world was full of fools, and the gentleman to make a mistake. Grayland's money would have been lost. It was not nearly enough."

Grayland was standing with his back turned, looking out of the window and wondering whether the business world would count him a fool.

"Grayland," Corson was saying; "there are some things that make spoken thanks sound cheap; but most humbly do I beg for your forgiveness and the privilege of sharing my sister's friendship."

Grayland's only answer was a pressure of the hand held out. When her brother left them Helen came to him. She asked no questions, made no comment. It was enough that happiness had come through him, enough that, reading her own heart again, she was believed that her futuro happiness would come through him alone.

THE PARSON WASN'T SURE.

Had Officiated at a Funaral, But Was Hazy on the Soul's Whereabouts.

"I was once suddenly called out of town in take charge of a case I knew nothing about. In short," said a west side lawyer the nther day, to a Kansas City Times man. "When I reached the district courtroom at my journey's end I found judge, jury and witnesses all waiting to begin the trial. I looked over the plaintiff's petition and the list of witnesses and waded in with my evidence. The first witness was a local minister with white hair and a remarkably serena countenance. I asked.him the usual questions and then:

"'Do you know Mrs. H——, the sister of the plaintiff in this case?'

"'I ought to,' he answered; 'I baptized her in my church.'

"'And do you know Mr. H——?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Where is he now?'

"The old man regarded me with the most benign look I had ever received from a human helng," the lawyer continued.

"'I don't know, I am sure,' he answered. 'I officiated at his funeral a week ago last Wednesday.'"

Public Interest in Game.

Any one who doubts that game protection is a live subject can quickly dispel the doubts by subscribing to a press clipping service and reading the excerpts from legislative reports that will come to him, says a writer in The Sportsman's Book. There is now scarcely a state in the union which is not awake to the necessity of preserving game to the extent that is possible, and in every state where it is a subject of legislative action the widest and deepest interest is manifested in the doings of the solons, not only on the part of a very large proportion of the male population, but on the part of very considerable numbers of the fair sex as well, and in not a few of the states there have been fights this winter over various phases of the subject as fierce and bitter as are ever waged over any public question. Most of the legislatures that have been sitting are through with their labors, and those still sitting are approaching the end, and from these legal mills have been ground no end of game laws.

Royal Dowry for Maids of Honor.

A tradition attached to maids of honor is that they invariably marry well. Their position at court brings them into contact with highly eligible parties, and an old custom dating back for centuries ordains their royal mistress to provide a dowry of $2,500 on their marriage. Queen Victoria has always kept up the custom, and the present queen has followed her example.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Butter Record.

St. Paul—From a total production of 7,500,000 pounds of butter in 1887 to an annual increase of about that number of pounds in the past three years is the record of the growth of the dairy industry in the state of Minnesota. While the figures for the year ending July 31, 1907, have not been compiled, the total undoubtedly will reach 100,000,000 pounds, and possibly exceed that number.

The annual report of State Dairy and Food Commissioner Edward D. Slater, which has just come from the printer's hands, gives the details of the production of butter by the creameries of the state for 1904. In that year the total production was 74,454,449 pounds. In the next two years the increase was about 7,000,000 pounds a year and the increase this year probably will exceed that amount somewhat so that the total production for the year will be about 100,000,000 pounds. This relates only to the products of the creameries and does not include the dairy butter, the production of which has also increased in late years, although the rapid increase in the number of creameries has put their production greatly ahead of that of the dairies.

Duluth At the Fair.

Duluth—St. Louis county and the city of Duluth will probably have a fine exhibit at the coming Minnesota state fair. A representative of the fair visited Duluth recently and found the people much interested in a display. The matter was taken up at a meeting of the public affairs committee of the Duluth Commercial club, which was addressed by the state fair man. The subject was then referred to a committee of which Bishop Joseph Golrick, formerly of Minneapolis, is chairman. It is the idea of the committee to surprise the southern part of the state with a display of farm products made in St. Louis county, where it was formerly thought nothing would grow. The Duluth people also have in mind a great exhibit for the fair of 1908, when they will take part in the semi-centennial of Minnesota with a complete display of the resources of the northern half of the state—vegetables, minerals and manufactures.

Drowned By a Fish.

Mankato—The first drowning in 26 years among the summer guests at Point Pleasant, Madison lake, occurred last week.

J. C. Miller, one of the leading merchant tailors of St. Louis, Mo., was fishing near Stoney point with his father-in-law, C. W. Doty, and Antonin Tezak. They hooked a large fish, apparently, and Miller stood up in the boat. Baker, who is seventy-five years old, clung to the boat until rescued, but Miller, who could not swim fairly well, thought that he could reach shore, which was only 75 yards away. He struck out, but when he had made one-third of the distance he became entangled in the weeds and sank.

In his struggle for life Miller rose to the surface five times, but finally disappeared. Another guest, Mr. Nippolt of Springfield, who was within a quarter of a mile away, heard Baker's cries and rowing up rescued him.

Exoltsmant.

Perham—A man grieving the name of Rollin N. Dow, of Minneapolis, has caused great excitement among the farmers living a few miles south and west of here, and incidentally has sent the price of farm land skyward.

Dow has been endeavoring to secure a warranty deed to 'all minerals in every nature, with the right to explore therefor upon, in or under' farms in certain localities, by paying cash of $1 per acre, with the option of purchasing the farms at any time inside of a year at $100 per acre. Several farmers have given their options on the terms agreed upon and received $1 per acre. A few of the more conservative have also turned the offer down, believing that if the land was not purchased outright there was no telling what mineral right which had been given would cast a cloud on the title to the land in case of a sale to some one else in the future.

Boy Killed.

Motor's Grove—The seven-year-old son of John B. Kumler, a farmer living nine miles south of here, was fatally hurt in a runaway accident on the farm. The lad was working in the barnyard with a hired man, who was driving a mower, the boy sitting on the seat. The mower struck a stone with sufficient force to throw the boy from his seat. He fell directly in front of the knives and the horses becoming frightened ran away, dragging the mower over him. The man overtook the boy's arm and he otherwise was badly gashed and bruised. He was carried to the home and a doctor called for, but before the physician reached him the boy had died.

NEWS NOTES.

Washington—Sarah E. Mitchell is appointed postmistress at Argo, Ruhnell county.

Minneapolis—John G. Hiber, 74 years old, 421 Rice street, has committed suicide by hanging himself in the cellar of his home.

St. Peter—Prof. E. S. Cheigren, instructor in modern languages and Swedish history at Gustavus Adolphus college, has resigned his professorship to enter the ministry.

Duluth—Two sisters of St. Mary's hospital staff and a young woman companion were hurled from a buggy and dragged along the boulevard a breakneck speed by a maddened horse and badly injured that their recovery is not expected.

Staples—W. J. Keister has resigned as treasurer of the city of Staples, and W. A. Broom has been appointed to fill the vacancy. The new treasurer will enter upon his duties next week.

Mankato—An unidentified stranger, a gypsy of age, was run down by a train on the Milwaukee track one and a half miles south of Mankato. He was dragged along the track for a distance of seven miles before the train was stopped and the body removed.

Will Recover.

St. Peter—Joseph Horvedt, the harvest hand who was bitten by a snake at the Neal Gessman farm in Cleveland township, will recover. Horvedt was chasing the reptile, which is supposed to have been a rattler, fastened its fangs in his right forearm. His employer bound a tiurniquet tightly about his arm above the wound, stopping the circulation, and as soon as he could be brought to the city, Dr. F. P. Simkins cut away the poisoned flesh. Horvedt suffered considerably during the night, but was much better yesterday morning, although his arm is still numb and useless.

St. Paul Grows.

St. Paul—Starting in the heels of 117,654 names in the new city directory the population of St. Paul is estimated to-day at the round number of 215,000, an increase of 9,079 persons over 1906. The estimate is made by multiplying the number of names by 4,302 by 2¾ and adding the product to the population estimate of the previous year. The Minnesota state census of 1905 gave St. Paul a population of 197,025, and the gain is a little more than 5 per cent a year. The families number 43,971 and the buildings 43,807. The changes in names, addresses, occupants, etc., reach a total of 78,000 in the 1907 directory.

Pullman Tax.

Minneapolis—On its own figures the Pullman Car company will pay a personal property tax of $5,800 on its property in Minnesota this year under the new law. Last year the company's tax was at the rate of 3 per cent on its gross earnings, as reported, was only $1,800.

The report of the Pullman company was submitted to the state auditor, and it gives the total valuation of the company's property in Minnesota as $193,000. This report is now in the hands of the state tax commission, which will investigate as to its completeness.

Looks Like Murder.

Wabasha—A little dog gnawing a human hand has furnished a clue to a possible murder. The foot had been cut off evidently with a dull axe or other instrument that had broken the bone, and the pink color of the flesh indicated that the murder had been recent.

The dog is advenced that a murder had been committed and that in dragging the body of the victim to the river he hid it in the foot, which had been hacked off, was lost on the way. The dog found the foot and then the body of a woman or of a boy about 18 years old.

Conductor Killed.

St. Paul—While his train was running through the Como avenue yards of the Great Northern road, C. W. Doty, 45 years old, a conductor of passenger train No. 6, of the Chicago-Winnipeg & Quinoy road, stuck his head out of the door of the baggage car, and the next instant he was dying on a track twenty feet away, with a fractured skull. He had been struck by a semaphore as he leaned out of the car, and he was hurled through the air by a parallel track twenty feet away, striking on his head on the steel rail.

NEWS NOTES.

Bena—John Benoski, a ten-year-old student at the Bena Indian school, was accidentally shot and killed by one of his comrades while hunting near the school.

Brainerd—Mrs. Gulberg has given an option on her farm on the Gull river range, at the rate of $100 an acre, to Fred B. Linn, Minneapolis, consisting of 160 acres and the option was given for $16,000, the money being on deposit in the Duluth bank.

Eden Valley—After being accidentally locked in a box car and carried 83 miles from home in a freight train, Albert Sandhoseer, 11 years old, 1314 East Sixth street, St. Paul, was found frightened and exhausted by trainmen with the crew of a freight.

Hamline—Dr. Cyrus Northrop, president of the University of Minnesota, has been engaged to make the principal speech at the opening of the Minnesota state fair. The exercises will be held in the big livestock pavilion at 11 a. m. on the opening day of the fair.

Duluth—Because he wears a cork leg, Gust Ollis, 40 years old, had a narrow escape from drowning near Fond du Lac, where he is camping with Dr. Linn, on the St. Louis river, engaged in fishing and in attempting to land a big fish which had taken his hook, he fell into the water.

St. Paul—Five additional factory inspectors were added to the staff of the state labor bureau. The increase was authorized by the last legislature session. The new men are R. F. Lamb, Minneapolis; John Whalen, Bemidji; N. F. Olson, Anoka; Thomas Moonan, Wabasca, and Paul Friedlander, St. Cloud. The chief inspector, F. V. Herbert of Minneapolis and C. E. James of St. Paul, were reappointed.

Minneapolis—Eleven little Dietrichs had breakfast in the Milwaukee shops police station when they reached. They were on their way to Stanley, Wis., to join Pete Dietrich, who works for the Wisconsin Central railway.

St. Paul—Herman Bracht, swimming instructor at the public baths, was dismissed from Ft. Snelling to Harriet island, a distance of seven miles, in an hour and three-quarters, without stopping for rest on the way.

Crookston—John Michalenich a farmer residing four miles northwest of Euclid, Minn., was in the city with his carcass on a big wildcat he had killed the previous evening.

MILL BUILT BY TOWN.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP TWO AND HALF CENTURIES AGO.

Structura Erected at New London, Conn., in 1650 Still Running—Used as a Fort During the Indian Wars.

Boston.—The principle of municipal ownership, as understood in 1907, was distinctly recognized in New London, then Pequoot, Conn., in 1650, when the old grist mill, still standing and in entire operation, was built by the vote of the town, and the cost therefor was raised by the enforcement of a special tax upon all the ratepayers.

On November 10, 1950, a town meeting was called for the purpose of arranging a system of cooperation with Mr. Winthrop in establishing a mill to grind corn."

Fifteen persons responded, and it was decided that the land owners should be at "the charge of making the dam and heavy work belonging to the milne."

Six men were assigned as a committee to construct the dnm and six other citizens were appointed to assess the expense and raise a sum sufficient to defray the same.

Then the new town of Pequoet jumped to the other end of the modern philosophy in the economy of industry by en indorsement of the latter-day method of monopoly trade. It was voted at this same meeting that "no person or persons not up ony milne to grind corn for the town of Pequoet within the limits of the town, either for the present nor for the future, so long as Mr. John Winthrop or his heirs, do uphold e milne to grind the town corn."

Somewhere in the records it is also stated that Winthrop had a grant from Queen Anne to build this small mill and to operate it so long as "there are grist or waters run."

The John Winthrop who was so generously treated by the people of Pequoot, and who had also received a perpetual charter for his enterprise from royal hands, was the eldest son of Gov. John Winthrop of the Massachusetts Bay colony, and who himself became the governor of the Connecticut colony in 1657. The same year Gov. Winthrop removed his residence from Pequoot, or "ye Fair Harbour," as some of the people at that time were pleased to refer to the town, to the colony capital at New London.

Winthrop left many reminders of his career in New London, but this old mill is the sole survivor of them all. The mill was built of enduring materials. The date, "1650," is chiseled in the cap piece of granite over the main doorway.

During the Indian wars that followed the settlement of Connecticut this "mill for grinding corn" was used as a fortress by its inhabitants.

Its heavy oaken timbers, as sound as when Winthrop and his associates first put them in place, are still objects of much interest upon the part of the New London people of to-day, while the brick-lined walls give some idea of the strength of the structure as a piece of prosection in time of trouble.

This Connecticut John Winthrop was one of the most versatile and popular men of his day. He practised as a physician while "he ground ees o miller." His acquaintance with the arts and sciences, as knowledge of those things had been unfolded at that time, was of more thm the ordinary sort.

He was kind and charitable and so long, therefore, as he controlled the mill trust there were no complaints from the people.

Even when New London's "grand young man" hscemo governor he lemed the mill to James Rogers, e local baker, and there was no murmors or less disaffection among the townspeople that had its origin in "the first mill monopoly." There were suits and countersuits over various points of issue until peace was finally established le favor of Rogers, who seemed to have been left in control of this property that had been constructed for him by Winthrop.

Rogers died in 1687.

He left five sons and two daughters, and his descendents who have since lived in and about New London are said to far outnumber those of any other original settler.

It was possible that the old mill was an heirloom of many generations of the Rogers family. To-day, however, the mill is under the direction of G. H. Smith.

COLLEGE PROFESSOR MAYOR.

Dr. Taylor Chosen to Succeed Schmitz at San Francisco.

San Francisco.—Dr. Edward R. Taylor, physician, attorney, educator, for 45 years a resident of San Francisco, has been elected mayor of the Golden Gate city to succeed Eugene E. Schmitz, convicted of grafting.

DR. EDWARD R. TAYLOR.

Dr. Taylor is a man of 65 and 66 years of age and is well known throughout the country as a physician and attorney. His acceptance of the office was actuated entirely by his desire to aid the Golden Gate city in its efforts to rid itself of corruption and graft, which have retarded municipal development.

Dr. Taylor is a very accomplished man and has made a reputation as a poet by his metrical translations of the "Odyssey" and "Iliad" and by several original poems. He has always been an opponent of union labor. The labor organizations will have a job on their hands, because of the fiddler-mayor, Eugene Schmitz, now behind the bars, who has been appointed Samuel Seward to fill the unexpired term of Eugene E. Schmitz, convicted of grafting.

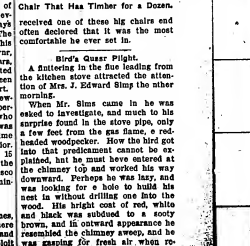
Industries of Tunis.

Tunis used to depend upon its wines, olives, cereals and cattle. Now there are a number of profitable mines, and railways are being built to exploit the country.



UNIQUE ROCKING CHAIR.

Presented to Lawyer Delmas by a Friend.

New York.—When Attorney Delphin M. Delmas, who defended Harry K. Thaw in his first trial, returns to New York from San Francisco he will find that the most conspicuous thing in his office is a lower Broadway. It is a tremendous oak chair. It has massive posts, shining like mirrors, and on one of them is a silver plate bearing this inscription:

"Presented to Delphin M. Delmas. After a hard-fought battle he was tied in on Old Cape Breton Rocker. Compliments of E. Le Roi Willis, Sydney Hotel, Sydney, Cape Breton."

Mr. Willis, who is e keen sportsman and the owner of several imported beet harness racers, is hobby for presenting distinguished friends and men of weight with choirs of this pattern. The late President McKinley received one of these big chairs and often sprang up and worked his way downward. Perhaps he was lazy, and was looking for a hoke to build his nest in without drilling one into the wood. His bright coat of red, white and black was subdued to a rusty brown and in outward appearance he resembled the chimney aweep, and he was gasping for fresh air when rescued.—Columbus Dispatch.

Bird's Queer Plight.

A fluttering in the flue leading from the kitchen stove attracted the attention of Mrs. J. Edward Sing the other morning.

When Mr. Sing came in he was urged to investigate, and much to his surprise found in the stove pipe, only a few feet from the gas flame, a redbreasted woodpecker. How the bird got into that predicament cannot be explained, but he must have entered at the chimney top and worked his way downward. Perhaps he was lazy, and was looking for a hoke to build his nest in without drilling one into the wood. Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Next year's political campaign is starting early in Polk county. There is already four candidates in the field for sheriff.

That Japan can not be trusted as a nation to keep a promise is proven by their action in disbanding the army of Korea and taking entire control of the government. By their action in this one instance they have shown that they can not be trusted and the sendin of a good strong fleet of U. S. war ships to our western coast is certaily a move in the right direction.

The refusal of the County Commissioner to meet to act on the county seat removal petition will place Thief River Falls in the position of having to nanadamus them to compell a meet ing, and by that time Red Lake Falls will probable have enough withdrawels to kock the petition out, and if they do not they will appeal to supream court, and the lawsuit goes merrily on.

The Western Federation of of Miners and Anarchists, who came into Minnesota to float the red flag of anarchy have discovered that they have struck a pretty hard proposition when they try to defy law and order in this state. All honor to deputy sheriff. Powers, of Colerine, who walked into a hall, where they were holding a Federation meeting, and tore the red flag of Anarchy from the wall, staff and all. Down with the red flag in Minnesota the stars and stripes are good enough for us.

The Thief River Falls News complains that the Thief River Falls people are not patriotic because they use the celebrated "Mascot Flour" manufactured at Red Lake Falls instead of the other stuff manufactured in their city. It takes lots of patriotism for a man to eat soggey bread and face an angry house wife when he goes home to dinner, so we suppose the house wives will continue to use Mascot flour if hubby is in a county seat fight with the manufacturers.

A beautiful grove in the heart of the Minnesota State Fair grounds has been set apart as a campings grounds for the fair, which opens on Monday, Sept. 2. A large number of commodious tents will be set up and will be rented for $2 for the entire fair week, at a merely nominal charge to cover the cost of handling. Tickets entitling the individual to remain on the grounds during the week may be bought for $2. A family can go on very cheaply, as meals may be bought at low rates from the restaurants on the grounds or cooking can be carried on at the camping ground is a simple way. There is a supply of pure water and ample sanitary arrangement.

We doubt that the change made in the management of the Red River Transportation Co. of the on the boat at this time is wise, although they done it in the interest of the Company Now the new clerk has got to do his business as stated and we will see it. DUELING IN THE NAVY

The Tragic Affair That Put an End to the Practice.

A MIDSHIPMAN'S CHALLENGE.

It Was Accepted by the Lawyer, and the Battle Was Fought in Delaware. Sad Fate of the Two Principals in the Unfortunate Meeting.

That settlement of quarrels by appeal to the code of honor was no longer to be the unwritten law of the American navy was determined by a duel in which William Miller, Jr., a Philadelphia lawyer, was slain in a personal affair fought along the northern circle of Delaware. The man who fired the fatal shot was Midshipman Charles G. Hunter, and the encounter took place along Naaman's creek on the afternoon of Sunday, March 21, 1830.

Singularly enough, neither Miller, who lost his life, nor Hunter, who killed him, was principal in the original quarrel that led to the meeting on the bank of the little creek in Delaware. Neither had seen the other until a few hours before the challenge was sent and accepted.

Simply a misshut fn a game of billiards played at Third and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, led to the tragedy that plunged two homes into sorrow and blighttered the life of the man whose pistol shot ceaselessly shed human blood.

Henry Wharton Griffith and R. Dillon Drake, prominent society men of Philadelphia, played the game of billiards, and Griffith made the misshot which called forth a taunt from Drake, who was immediately struck in the face with a cue by Griffith. A challenge to a duel was sent by Drake, but Griffith declared that the challenger was beneath his notice and that he would not demean himself socially by consenting to meet him.

Then followed a long and wordy warfare in which each posted the other as a coward. Lieutenant Pearce of the United States navy was called to make an effort to settle the disputte, and it was then that Miller, the lawyer, and Hunter, the midshipman, became involved in the quarrel. In the heated discussion Hunter accused Miller of publishing a confidential letter, and a challenge was at once sent by the midshipman and accepted by the attorney.

It was decided that the duel should be fought early on Sunday morning of March 21, but it was nearly 10 o'clock before carriages containing the principals, seconds and surgeon left a house that stood on Chestnut street above Sixth. The presence of the company excited some attention at Chester, where the party stopped for lunch, but they hurried down the post road, their horses close to the highway and proceeded 200 yards behind a clump of trees that would shield them from observation.

As the sun was setting two pistol shots rang out simultaneously as one of the seconds exclaimed "One, two, three to five!" Hunter stood unharmed as the ball from his opponent's pistol struck at his feet, but Miller cried out that he was shot, placed one hand on his breast and fell with a bullet lying close to his heart. In a few minutes he died, while pale and anxious faces watched the convulsive breathing of the dying man.

"Gentlemen," said Hunter, "I had no enmity against this man. I never knew of him until two days ago. Let those whose quarrel embroiled him be responsible for his death."

After a hurried consultation it was decided that the midshipman should leave the state at once, and he was driven rapidly to New Castle, Del., where he boarded a boat for New York and rejoined the navy.

Side the tragedy it was decided to wait until dark and take Miller to Philadelphia in a carriage.

Sealing the dead man between them, two seconds held him in an upright position on the long journey to Philadelphia. News of the duel had reached Chester, and a crowd of men stood at Third street bridge to intercept the carriages. The first buggy contained the surgeon, and, as his explanation was satisfactory, he was permitted to proceed. The dead man in the second carriage was driven through the crowd without the ruse being detected, and at midnight the body was placed in a house in Walnut street, where vigil was kept by the widow, who drank heavily to support them in the terrible strain under which they had been placed.

Miller's father said that he held no malice against Hunter, but the midshipman, who was suspended for a year for punishment, was haunted by the specter of the dead man lying on the bank of Naaman's creek, slain by his hand, and died a prematurely old man after a lonely stint off from the days of preferment in the navy. He was buried by the newspaper men of New York, who erected a tombstone over his grave.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CALLING IN PARIS.

The Concierge Is a Peculiar Institution In Several Ways.

You leave your card at the door of the person to whom you desire to present yourself, and there it is taken up either by that peculiarly French functionary, the concierge, says Professor Bartol Wendell in Scribner's. At least in Paris, the greater part of French people live in large houses constituting a number of apartments with a common entrance and staircase. Close to the entrance door, on the level of the street, are some small, little rooms inhabited by the concierge, or porter, with his family. These duties among other things, is to keep strict watch on whoever goes in or out, and at least one of them, often the porter's wife or half grown daughter, is always at hand.

The chief peculiarity of their temperament seems to be insatiable appetite. At whatever hour of day or evening you call on a concierge you are sure to find somebody eating or just risen from table, and the atmosphere inhabited by this loathful personage seems immortally laden with the fumes of something recently boiled.

No matter whether you call on a friend who lives in some unpretending out of the way place or on one who inhabits something like a palace, the concierge is always about the same. You can detect little difference between those in charge of important doors and of insignificant. They are as like as house flies. Of course there are private houses in Paris, with proper domestic servants such as you would find anywhere, but these, grand or simple, are so unusual that you remember the concierge as everywhere standing between you and further human intercourse.

In response to your card, which the concierge duly sees delivered, bones a card, often with a note, in return. If, as is generally the case, this acknowledgment of your existence contains an intimation of when your Fréhell acquaintance may be found at home, either habitual or for your special benefit, you make your second visit at that appointed time and thus enter into real personal relations.

Otherwise, your intercourse has limited itself to a polite exchange of cards. Generally speaking, you never see or hear made a definite appointment. To call on a person at any other time is to be more than polite your card with the concierge—would be an intrusive pretense to intimacy.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

His Got the Trout.

A story dealing with a large trout that was rising regularly and frequently is told in "How to Fish: A Treatise on Trout and Trout Fishers." This is the story:

"He was going up and down, up and down, up and down; not as the insects offered themselves, but as it suited his composure that he should take a midge from the abundance. One youth was casting at the trout; another was looking on. Said the angler, 'I'll have that fish whether he takes it or not.' 'How?' his friend asked. 'I'll throw the fly into his mouth.' The trout went on rising; the angler went on casting. I perceived the angler's notion. It was that if he kept casting accurately and the trout continued to rise in the regular manner mentioned the fly would ere long fall at the very moment when a midge was being taken. This reasoning was justified. The large trout was hooked and landed by a fly that had been cast into his mouth."

A Kind Examiner.

Sir John Stainer was dearly loved by the students when he was professor of music at Oxford. "As an examiner he was most considerate," said one who studied under him, "and would always do his best to set you through. I remember his asking me a paper in a viva voce examination. He waited patiently for the answer; but, partly through my nervousness no doubt, I could not think of it. At length he exclaimed testily, 'Dear me, how stuffy this room is, to be sure,' and he went and began tugging at the ventilator cord. It was quite two minutes before he got the thing open, and by that time he had sat down again and rearranged his gown that the answer was ready. Comparing notes later in the day with a man who was examined quite soon after me, I told him how the ventilator had served me. 'How remarkable,' he replied. 'Why, when I was stuck he said, "How extraordinary drafty this place is," and spent quite two minutes in shutting the ventilator.'"—Manchester Guardian.

The Razor in Disrepute.

"And he told her all his heart, and said unto her, there hath not come a razor upon mine head, for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb; if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak and be like other men."—Judges xvi, 17.

Half on man or brute is a sign of strength. He who desires to keep at safe distance from dentists, let him keep also at a great distance from the knife of the barber. To shave is an act against nature. Provoke nature, and in return nature will provoke you.

Said Daniel Webster: "—— the razer! It has taken me 40 curse. If I had cut the more I had and more trouble than all my speeches."

Rufus Choate, the lawyer, called the razor an instrument invented by Lucifer to fill mankind with barbers.

Edward Everett never used profane language, but before shaving he would invariably give vent to all sorts of French barbarisms.

Strict Water.

There is a general impression that the Jordan water which is used at royal baptisms is taken from the sacred streams, put into a bottle, hermetically sealed and left untouched until the bottle is opened by the officiating priest. As a matter of fact, the water which flows out of the lake of Galilee and descends a rocky gorge to a level far below that of the Mediterranean is full of organic substances. If a bottle be filled with the water and kept tightly corked for a few days it turns perfectly black and offers to the nostrils all the odors of the tropics. The precaution is therefore taken of boiling the water and drawing it before it is sealed up, and this is why the baptismal water always possesses the crystal clearness which one notices on those ceremonial occasions.—Modern Society.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

You can waste a good deal of time talking how valuable you are.

You never say a man won't listen to reason if he agrees with you.

A heart is often abused if he isn't polite, but how many say "Thank you" to a boy?

No one seems to have as hard a time earning money as the woman who marries for it.

The strange man's idea of religious liberty is the privilege of staying home from church.

Having good judgment and being a fool for luck are frequently the story of a single financial success told by different parties.

"How poor are they who have no patience! What wound did ever heal but by degrees?" Who is the author of the above? It is not important whether or you can remember the author if you can silently accept the lesson taught.—Atchison Globe.

Miss Hepsey hung tho tea-kettle over the fire ond ast down to think.

"These hens! Can Celinda be trusted to let them out in the morning and shut them up et nigbt? Will she remember whot I said ebout the setting hen, and the eggs in tho yellow bowl? No!" said Miss Hepsey mournfully to her own thoughts. "If I concludo to go to Portland, I must just hid good-hy to my chickens beforo I go!"

"Hepsey," said Aunt Maguire, putting her head in et tho door, "don't forget that grny flonnel; hut you mustn't pay too mueb for it; I'd rathor go without." Aunt McGuiro disappeared, with her widow's cap tilted on ono sido of her popper-and-salt enrls, and her niece mused on.

But, unfortunatoly, addled eggs were not tho least of her trouhles. She knew just as well as if Mme. Demorest had told her, thet o feded, brown elpaca is no dress to meke uny impression in—only e dowdy impression—and that upon this visit to Portland depended o great deal more then a few yards of flannel or a brood or two of chickens.

There was Hiram Stackpole, living not three squores from the family she was about to visit. She should meet him; how could it be avoided unless she always kept berself veiled to the chin? She trembled ot the thought, but ot tho samo time chid herself for trembling. Why did sho care for meeting Hiram Stackpole eny more than Deacon Nutting? He surely would not speak to her unless sbe would give some sign of recognition.

At seven next morning tho Pooleville stage drew up beforo Aunt Maguire's door for Miss Hepsey. At the post office they stopped to take tba mall bag and a young man.

"Why, Fred Tracy, how dn you do?" exclaimed Miss Hepsey, ber eyes brimming over with welcome, aud the youthful look flashlug back to her face, giving a momentary glimpse of her departed freshness and hloom.

"Aro you going back to Portland, Fred?" asked Miss Hepsey, the care-worn look returning to ber face.

"Yes; I've rusticated three days, and that is nll I cnn spere. I'm in Stackpole's store," he continued, carelessly. "Ahem! I helievo be is an old acquaintance of yours? I happened to mention once tbat I had cousins at Pooleville, end theu he asked me if I knew a lady thore by the name of Hepsibah Dillon."

"Ah!"

A queer littlo sparkle sbot out of Miss Hepsey's eyes. It might hava heen pleasure, it might bave been pain.

"Yes. He was vory particular to inquire just how you wero situated"

At last, witb the usual flourish nnd energetic crying out at tho horses, tbe stago drew up ut the depot, and in fiva minutes Miss Hepsey was ou her wey to Portlond and to her fete.

With tho noisy wheels Miss Hepsey's thoughts flew backward to the days when sho had heen young and beautiful. Hiram bad loved her then, thero could be uo doubt of that. His looks hod said it a thousand times. And even if looks and tones und signs and intimations bad been all at fault, bad he uot "told ber all his heart," lu written language, strong and unmistakable?

Sho would uever forget that letter, for it was the last he over wrote. Not for lack of response ou her part. No, sho had written immediately, aud there had been no equivocation lu ber answer.

And theu the sweet expectation that had rested over her through days, aud weeks, and even months, until bope deferred bad made ber heart sick! He never wrote agaln; he never came; and if her letter said too much, or if be suddenly discovered be bad mistaken bis own feelings, sbe never knew.

Somewhat less theu a year after this, Mr. Stackpole's sister, Lucy, who bad come to Pooleville on a visit, died suddenly at Fred Tracy's Uncle John's, and Hepsey was there with ber good sense, ber good taste, her quiet nerves and ready bands, when Hiram came to taka his dead sister for her hurial in tbe ancestral tomb.

He camo into tbe darkened parlor unexpectedly to Hepsey, as sbe stood by the casket, putting rosemary and Persian lilacs in the still hands that had unwittingly doue her a grievous wrong.

Nothing passed between the two old friends but such looks of sad sympathy, as strangers might give and receive about a bier, and then Hepsey, who was needed no longer, went away, with her beart full of wounded love and proud regret.

This was 12 years ago. She had never seen him since. And now they would meet again. Wall, what cared sba? When a past event is dead and buried, why should its ghost walk? There is always enough to do and bear in tha living present. For instance, at this vary moment sbe ought to be thinking out the plot of a new story, for Miss Hepsey's facile pen was all she could depend upon for tha winning of her daily bread.

Before the cars stopped at Portland —long enough before—she had quite recovered her equipoise and mada her entrance at Dr. Pond's with her usual gentle self-possession.

"I am so glad," said Mrs. Pond, cordially, after the first greeting was over, "so very glad you have come in seeson for my little social suppor tomorrow! I was afraid Aunt Maguire's cold might detain you a dey or two; and your old friend, Mr. Stackpole, is to bo here."

Mr. Stackpole again! Hepsey was glad the name bad been spoken so many times that day that the strangeness was wearing off.

Tho next evening Hepsey came into the long, bright parlor, dressed in her best black silk, a much-enduring garment, that bad been turned and stiffened with gin; hut then black silks, like dead men, tell no tales—and she looked very sweet and attractive with her fresh blue rihbons aud her peaceful face.

Mr. Stackpolo thought so when be came in late in the evenlug. After a few words with the hostess, be slipped into a sbadowy corner, and looked eagerly over the room until be saw Miss Hepsey sitting in a deep window a littlo aside. Tben he stood gazing at ber face as though be wisbed to reed all that the pust lost years had printed ou it. There was a yearning look in bis eyes, u look of loug hunger satisfied ut last.

Presently Miss Hepsey's eyes, drawn perhaps hy the magnetism of bis, turned toward Mr. Stackpole's corner aud fell upon the remembered face. Sho turned her eyes awey quickly; insiantly tbe flame, long huried and smoldering in her heert, leaped up into life sgain, hurning ut ber cbeeks and choking her breuth. Poor Hepsey! Sho did not understaud thut it wes Mr. Stackpole's glence of earnest lova that had stirred the old pleasure and tho old pain; sbe hlemed ber own heart for it all.

Wheu sbo raised her eyes they looked into the face of Mr. Stackpole, who wes staudlug before.

"Hepsihab!" said be softly, bolding out his baud to her. "Ab, Hepsihab!"

The old name tbat sbe had bardly beard for years! Tho uame be bad called ber by; bow it thrilled ber, hringing to full life agsin the huried sbadowy host of hopes, and loves, aud yearnings! They started up, suddeu, unlooked for and suhlime, like the old dead Incas thrown up in the great earthquake; hut not like them, withered and past reviving.

"You have not forgotteu the letter I wrote you before I went to Portland, Hepsihah? The letter and the question I asked in it 12 years ago?" Mr. Stackpola entreated iu a tona tender and tamnlous, bolding fast ber band in dread lest sbe should vanish ouce more.

"Sir?"

"Ob, Hepsibah! it was only this eveuing I got your answer."

"Mr. Stackpole!"

"Only this evening, Hepsibah! After 12 years' waiting! Yes, it came at last; I have it—here it is!"

"Mr. Stackpole! My letter?"

"Your precious letter, Hepsibah. It bas been lying all these years in Sister Lucy's writing desk. Fred Tracy brought me the desk yesterday, and just before coming here to-night I opened it and looked over tha contents. Away in one corner, slipped carelessly into an old package of papers, was this, with the seal unbroken."

"Lucy must hava taken it out of tha office," stammered Hepsey.

"Yes, I suppose so, and in ber careless way locked it into ber desk and forgot it. It must hava come whila I was at Island Pond. It was so like Lucy, tha dear, heedless child!"

Hepsibah's face was full of amaze; but there was also a tender light in it, very sweet to Hiram Stackpole's eyes.

"I am going to repeat that old question to-night," he said, softly, "and I shall hold you to tha same answer, Hepsibah."

"The same answer," repeated she, half unconsciously.

The same question and the same answer! And the years that had come between were like a tale when it is told. Then the full moon, looking in at the oriel window, shown again upon the one bit of Eden that was shut outside the garden with the first lovers.

NO GAIN AND SOME LOSS.

Neighbor's Comment in Which There Seems a Strain of Sarcasm.

"Yes," the leader of the amateur brass band was saying, "it's curious to see what an effect learning to play a horn has on some persons. I used to be a pretty good bass singer, but I can't sing worth a cent now."

"Does learning to play a horn spoil the voice?" asked his next-door neighbor.

"It did mine."

"How do you account for it?"

"I don't know bow to account for it. Strains the vocal chords, perhaps. All I know is that I hlew my voice out through the mouthpiece of my cornet."

"Did you have a good voice?"

"Everybody said so."

"Then it's a great pity you ever learned to play a horn," rejoined his neighbor, shaking his head sadly. "I —er—think I should have enjoyed hearing you sing."—Youth's Companion.

THE NEW YORK LIFE'S PROGRAM.

Economy, Publicity and the Paramount Interest of Policyholders.

President Kingsley, of the New York Life Insurance Company, says, in an address to the policyholders, that his plan of administration involves these points:

"First: Strict economy; second, the widest, fairest and fullest publicity; third, the continuance of the New York Life as a world-wide institution; fourth, such an amount of new business under the law as we can secure while practicing intelligent economy, and enforcing the idea that the interest of the policy-holder is paramount."

The Tell Tale Voice.

"If you want to tell whether or not the man you are talking to is telling the truth don't look him in the eyes," said a Denver bank teller to some friends. "It is the voice, when you don't look at the eyes, that tells you whether the other fellow is lying. We use the system frequently in the bank. A man will come in to tell us some business tale. We look at his feet or his hands or his knees, but never in his eyes. If he's telling the truth his voice will be firm and straightforward, and the absence of your gaze in his eyes will not affect it. But if he's lying he'll be confused by your action, and his voice will tremble; he'll hem and haw, and clear his throat. You may rest assured then that he's stringing you."

Always in the Way.

Recently a country doctor in the north of Ireland, a bachelor, who was locally noted for his brusqueness and irascibility, was driving along a narrow lane, or "boreen," when his passage was effectually barred by an old woman, who was returning from the bog leading an ass whose panniers were filled with peats. The woman led the ass to the side of the lane as quickly as she could, but not quickly enough to please the short-tempered doctor. "Faugh!" he exclaimed, with a snort of disgust. "Women and asses are always in the way." "I'm glad ye have the manners to put yourself last," said the old woman, calmly. The doctor drove on without another word.

Concerning His Business.

A Boston lawyer, who brought his wit from his native Dublin, while cross-examining the plaintiff in a divorce trial, brought forth the following:

"You wish to divorce this woman because she drinks?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you drink yourself?"

"That's my business!"—angrily.

Whereupon the unmoved lawyer asked:

"Have you any other business?"—Everybody's.

SOAKED IN COFFEE

Until Too Stiff to Bend Over.

"When I drank coffee I often had sick headaches, nervousness and biliousness much of the time, but when I went to visit a friend I got in the habit of drinking Postum.

"I gave up coffee entirely and the result has been that I have been entirely relieved of all my stomach and nervous trouble.

"My mother was just the same way. We all drink Postum now, and without coffee in the house for 2 years, we are all well.

"A neighbor of mine, a great coffee drinker, was troubled with pains in her side for years and was an invalid. She was not able to do her work and could not even mend clothes or do anything at all where she would have to bend forward. If she tried to do a little hard work she would get such pains that she would have to lie down for the rest of the day.

"At last I persuaded her to stop drinking coffee and try Postum Food Coffee and she did so and has used Postum ever since; the result has been that she can now do her work, can sit for a whole day and mend and can sew on the machine and she never feels the least bit of pain in her side, in fact, she has got well and it shows coffee was the cause of the whole trouble.

"I could also tell you about several other neighbors who have been cured by quitting coffee and using Postum in its place." "There's a Reason." Look in pkg. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS OF BUGS.

The Beetle—Steady-going, conservative. Lacking in acuteness and sensibility. In religion, a hard-shell Baptist.

The Hornet—Sharp and aggressive. Deficient in courtesy and politeness. Never stands on ceremony or anything else; sits down hard. Is nervous, and affects other people the same way.

The Fly—Honest, and affectionate in disposition. A great humorist; tickles some people immensely. Slow to take offense, but quick to dodge a band.

The Bumblebee—Full to the mandibles of common-sense and industry. Inclined to be loud in conversation, and is something of a bully. Has a warm heart and a red-hot business end.

The Flea—Mercurial and flighty. Cannot be depended on. A great traveler, but stops frequently to take a bite.

The Mosquito—The embodiment of perseverance. Has a longer bill than the plumber, and presents it oftener. Works day and night. Is meek and cheerful under abuse, and sticketh closer than a brother. Never sings when it is full.

The Ant—A hard worker, and cross, as most hard workers are. Very inquisitive, especially as to the texture of trousers and pies. Is fond of picnics when they come in the regular line of business. Enjoys a good fight, and can carry off more boodle at a lift than an alderman.

Not for Him.

"You didn't seem to be particularly interested in Miss Perkleson," said the inveterate matchmaker. "I had hoped you would like her."

"I liked her pretty well," replied the widower, "and she was very entertaining and all that, but I noticed that she had a projecting chin. My first wife had that kind. It's a pity that so pretty a woman should be disfigured in that way."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Keeping Them Under.

Friend—One of your clerks tells me you raised his salary and told him to get married, under penalty of discharge.

Business Man—Yes; I do that to all my clerks when they get old enough to marry. I don't want any of your independent, conceited men about my place.

His Fatal Mistake.

Fred—So she turned you down, eh?

Joe—Yes. I made the mistake of confessing that my heart was in my mouth when I proposed.

Fred—What had that to do with it?

Joe—Oh, she said she couldn't think of marrying a man whose heart wasn't in the right place.—Chicago Daily News.

The Other Side of the Question.

"Do you regard the railroads with disfavor?"

"My friend," answered Senator Sorghum, "I cannot yet bring myself to feel that my opinion in such a matter is important. My comfort still depends very largely on whether or not the railways regard me with disfavor."—Washington Star.

THEIR MOTTOES.

Doctor—My motto is "Be sure you're right, then go ahead."

Merchant—Mine is somewhat different; it's "Be sure you get ahead, then you can make it right."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Point of View.

Young Mother—I don't believe in letting everybody kiss my baby. It's unwholesome.

Bachelor Brother—O, I don't know that it's unwholesome, but if the baby has been eating molasses candy it's unpleasant.—Chicago Tribune.

Maybe.

Bacon—They say some people find it cheaper to live in Paris than in New York.

Egbert—Do you refer to the insurance people.—Yonkers Statesman.

Slumber Robes

Here we have three pretty night-dresses, specially designed for making in thin materials for summer wear, such as nainsook, lawn, cambric, mull, or maddepollom. The first has a deep square yoke of the material finely tucked in series, each series being divided by lace insertion; the lower part is gathered to the edge of yoke under a narrow band feather-stitched. The opening is down the center-front under a box-pleat. The sleeves are gathered into narrow hands covered with lace insertion, and edged with a lace-edged frill of the material.

The second has a prettily shaped yoke of the material cut in deep points at the edge and in a small V at the throat, it is trimmed with rows of lace insertion crossed to form diamonds; the neck is edged with a frill of narrow lace, and a bow of ribbon ornaments the front. The gown is gathered to the yoke, the opening being down the center-front. The sleeves, which reach only just below the elbow, are gathered into bands of insertion, edged with a deep lace-trimmed frill.

Our third illustration shows another small yoke, which is cut square in the neck, it is composed entirely of rows of lace insertion, mitred at the corners to form the square. The sleeves are trimmed with deep frills of lace.

Material required for each night-dress: Five and one-half yards 36 inches wide.

White Linings Worn

Is General Foundation for Transparent Materials of All Colors and Gives Good Results.

None of the later developments of the season is more noticeable than the use of white as foundation for the transparent materials of all colors. It is claimed to have had its origin in the favor shown the lingerie skirt, but whether or not that be true, the result is one to be desired. Black and blue combinations are being much favored, and one of the smartest visiting gowns of the season is made of black barege trimmed with bands of Sevres blue liberty silk, while it is worn over a foundation of white taffeta. To be sure, the soft material is made very full and the foundation of white is by no means aggressive, but it is there, and it gives a general effect of lightness and charm to the entire gown. A very lovely rose-colored voile, also noted within the week, is worn over white, and gray mousseline so treated becomes far more beautiful than when worn over a matching color. There is a preference just now for brightening the gray with a little trimming of color, and a very beautiful princesse gown that is to go to one of our leading resorts, is made of the mousseline, or chiffon, in a rather dark shade. The waist portion is cut out to form a very deep V at back and front, and there are no sleeves, while beneath the gown is to be worn a guimpe of Irish lace. But at the foot of the skirt are several alternating frills of pink and gray point d'esprit net, while beneath the whole is a closely fitted robe of soft, supple white taffeta.

Simple and Smart

Pretty Dinner and Dance Gowns for Those in the Heyday of Youth and Beauty.

Very pretty informal and simple dinner and dance gowns for the young set are of mousseline and batiste in white and pale colors. These are full waists with high silk or ribbon girdles, fastening with three straps and three pairs of large buttons, covered with the same material as the girdle. The straps being of cord and wide apart, are new and pretty. Bertha frills of lace and ruffles of the gown fabric often trim the decolletage in the various lines, and finish the short sleeves. The same ruffles and lace carry out the three rows of a Greek design upon the skirt. The whole skirt and its ruffles may be plisse for a change. No one may wear with more distinction the extreme of simplicity so well as when youth and beauty go hand in hand. The difficulty lies in the impossibility of convincing those who are young and beautiful of this fact.—Vogue.

Purse Monograms.

Purse monograms this season are smaller than formerly. On the large bag a gold or silver button in dull finish is placed on the top side just below the clasp. On this button is engraved the monogram of the owner, and not infrequently the engraving is outlined in black. Smaller purses, hand purses especially, are seen with corner monograms in the shape of a hollow triangle, inside of which is set a script or old English monogram.

Hat Gossip.

Either very small or very large flowers are used on summer millinary. Water lilies and jasmine are fashionable among many other famed flowers.

"Lamp shade hats" is the name given to the glorified mob cap at present in vogue.

The oblong shape is the latest survival of the mushroom hat.

New Idea in Ruffles

Parisian Costumers Now Put Them Upside Down—Finished with Ribbon Band.

Little bristling plaitings and ruffles put on upside down are the newest things in Paris dressmaking. They are made in silk usually and used on the same or on wool materials. They are set on the bottoms of skirts and in groups half way up, and in this case the bottom ruffle of each group is finished at the lower edge with a ribbon band.

They are used especially on the full sleeves and at the top of a high princess skirt. In this case the whole waist is made of the inverted plumage. Narrow kilted lace is used, though it must be quite narrow to stand in place. The prettiest effect is had by buying shaded or ombre silk, stripped up and plaited, or to buy equal quantities of five or six shades of the same color of taffeta.

The waist then is started with the dark color matching the skirt, and graduated up with two or three rows of each until a delicate shade is reached at the neck.

Over-Blouse

This is one of the simplest forms of the popular over-blouse with kimono sleeves. The top is drawn in to fit the band by the sets of three tiny tucks about three inches in length, that are placed at regular distances all round. The neck is then set to the double band, that must be ornamented by embroidery, galloon, or lace insertion. The edges of sleeves and sides are turned over to the right side, and are covered by the trimming; this makes the inside perfectly neat.

The Colored Edge.

The colored ourlet or edge was a feature of most of the thin gowns, whether of muslin, filet or gros tulle, says a Paris correspondent. In most cases there was a draped high belt of the same silk as the ourlet, and the thin stuff was much "worked," that is, embroidered, inset with lace and so on. These costumes were worn with scarfs or long loose garments, with short or no sleeves at all, and open to show much of the inner gown.

The Linen Shower.

When giving a linen shower send out the invitation on paper which looks like hemstitched linen. It is best for the guests to meet before calling upon the bride-elect and arrange what presents are to be sent. No difference what marked pieces you give the young woman, the monogram should be with her maiden initials.

TIRED BACKS.

The kidneys have a great work to do in keeping the blood pure. When they get out of order it causes backache, headaches, dizziness languor and distressing urinary troubles. Keep the kidneys well and all these sufferings will be saved you. Mrs. S.A. Moore, proprietor of a restaurant at Waterville, Mo., says: "Before using Doan's Kidney Pills I suffered everything from kidney troubles for a year and a half. I had pain in the back and head, and almost continuous in the loins and felt weary all the time. A few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills brought great relief, and I kept on taking them until in a short time I was cured. I think Doan's Kidney Pills are wonderful."

Watching the Knife Play.

"There is an awful fascination about seeing people eat with their knives," said he who has just spent a week on the farm for this health, with a retrospective look in his eyes. "A knife is such an unexpected instrument. You never know just where it is going to strike. You can't keep your eyes off. You are afraid to look for fear it might slip and cut the mouth half in two, and you are afraid if you don't look it might happen and you won't get to see it."

All in Cold Storage.

An Oregon attorney, representing a client whose title to a certain cold storage plant was under fire, closed an able argument before the Oregon supreme court recently with the following bit of pathos: "Your honor, there is more resting upon your decision than the cold storage plant: a human life is at stake. My client's life's efforts are in this cold storage; his life's blood is in this cold storage; his body and soul are wrapped up in this cold storage."—Law Notes.

Close Confinement.

The new phonograph had just arrived, and in her husband's absence Mrs. Jones thought she would give her parrot a treat, so she set the machine working on a record of "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," sung by Mr. Jones in his best style.

At the very first bar Polly opened her eyes in surprise, and rocked herself to and fro in deep and speechless wonder.

She was evidently thinking deeply, and her excitement was intense. She cocked her head on one side, with an expression that indicated interested conjecture, and irritation at not arriving at a satisfactory conclusion. As the song finished, an idea dawned upon her.

"Well," said Mrs. Jones with pride, "what do you think of that, Polly?"

Then the bird found words:

"Great Scot!" she shrieked. "You've got the old man boxed up this time."

Grape-Nuts

"America has become a land of nervous emotionalists, largely owing to our sins against the dietetic health laws of nature.

"Only outdoor exercise in a cold climate would enable vigorous individuals of our species to digest the viands forced upon alimentary canals enfeebled by sedentary occupations," wrote Dr. Felix Oswald.

Brain workers must have different food than laborers, because brain work uses up parts of the brain and nerve centers, while physical labor uses up other parts of the body.

Grape-Nuts, a food for brain workers, prepared by scientific food makers, is a pure, natural food made from selected parts of field grains known to contain the natural phosphate of potash and other elements required by the system in rebuilding and repairing the brain and nerve centers. This food is skillfully cooked at the factory and is ready to be served instantly with cream. At all first-class grocers and made by the Postum Co., at Battle Creek, Mich. THE DAIRY

KEEPING A COW FROM KICKING.

How Rope Can Be Adjusted to This End.

In the sketch herewith you will notice a rope which is to be passed over the hip, down in front of the udder, drawn tolerably tight and tied. I have found this to be an excellent method of keeping cows from kicking, and it in no way cuts off the milk supply.

The only objection to such a plan, says Breeders' Gazette, would be that injury might happen to the mammary veins running forward from the udder. These veins remove the blood that comes from the arteries to the udder and have nothing whatever to do with the supply of blood from which milk is elaborated.

GOOD AND POOR COWS.

They Can Be Discovered Only by Methods of Testing.

The establishing of test associations will enable the dairyman to eliminate the unprofitable cows from their herds and help them to get better cows and make half the number do the same or even better work than the whole number of our average cows are doing at the present time.

The milk scale and Babcock test must of necessity come into use. Every farmer should have a milk scale hanging in the barn where it will be handy to weigh each cow's milk, and, by the side of this, a milk sheet with names or numbers of cows, enabling him to keep a daily record of each cow in his herd. There is not more than one in 20 farmers that knows the amount of milk and butter fat each cow in the herd is producing per year. However, now is a good time for every dairyman to begin a more economical production of milk. It requires but very little more to keep a cow that will produce 400 pounds of fat per year than one producing 100 pounds.

The most extravagant thing a dairyman can do is to head his herd with a scrub sire; this is a step back and a continual slide as long as he continues such methods. There is no advancement or grading up without a pure bred, prepotent sire. Improvement comes only through the superior qualities of the male used. Experience in my work shows that cows kept at a good profit to their owner are not allowed out of barn in winter more than one-half to one hour per day in fine weather, and are kept in warm, well-lighted and well ventilated stables. They are watered in stable cold days and fed food of a succulent nature, such as ensilage or mangles, with all the alfalfa or clover hay they will consume without waste, and a balanced grain ration of not less than one pound to every three pounds of milk given.

H. C. SEARLES.

DAIRY NOTES.

Three cows without salt produced 55 pounds less milk in a week in an experiment station test.

Only clean tin milk utensils should be used. Patched or rusty thinware should not be tolerated.

When you buy a separator get one that runs easy, washes easy and skims clean and you'll have the best.

Whitewash looks and is mighty nice on the inside of the cow barn and a little salt will make it stick better.

Eastern cowmen practice soiling in summer. They figure green corn or alfalfa fed this way is worth $20 to $25 per acre.

Many a dairyman blames his cows when he ought not to do so. It often quiets his conscience, though, and the cows don't care.

Scoring the Buttermaker.

The officials of the dairy division of the department of agriculture are planning a score card that will not only score butter and cream but that will score the buttermakers and concessions also. This is a good plan, and the card would do much good if it could be honestly used. Some of the managers of factories would be surprised at the low scoring their manufacturer would receive. It would certainly be a good thing for the dairy schools; for it would show the dairy students ranking high up, as a rule. This would be an object lesson to the boards that control the creameries and cheese factories.

Room for Improvement.

The "average" dairyman is a very poor dairyman in the true sense of the word, yet a comparison of the methods in use to-day with those of even ten years ago is quite complimentary to this same "average" dairyman. There's abundant room for improvement yet, however.

THE FALL COW.

She Will Make Winter Dairying Profitable.

If every farmer who follows the practice of having the cows drop their calves in the spring could thoroughly understand the comparative advantage of winter dairying he would pretty soon change his plans. The average cow produces little more than 150 pounds of butter in a year. It is safe to say that this same cow can be made to produce 200 pounds of butter per year through winter dairying entirely.

The cow that drops her calf about May 1 has only about two months of good pasturage ahead before the hot weather comes and the flies begin to pester her. Those two months she will do exceedingly well but then are the two months of the year when dairy products are at the lowest prices. During the hottest season of dry pasture and flies her milk flow will diminish to such an extent that it is impossible to make her give a good flow during even the early winter months.

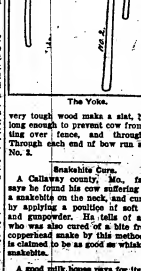
The cow that drops her calf about November 1 or December 1 has been dry during the time of shortest pastures and during the hottest season of the year on the farm. She has a long period of usefulness ahead of her before fly time the following season. She will be doing her very best while prices for dairy products are highest and while the time of her owner is not so expensive. By the time grass comes she will have reached a period in her lactation when a decrease in the milk flow is to be expected, but will give a good flow as soon as she gets on grass anyway. She will be ready to take her rest, when the season is most unfavorable for milk production.

In addition to these facts there is another very potent reason why the cows should freshen in the fall. The young calf will not require very much grain feed the first six months and is old enough to thrive in the pasture the following season and to fight its own battle during fly season. The result is a yearling calf at a very small cost.

It is true that it will cost perhaps five or six dollars more per year to feed the winter dairy cow, but if it does the increase in receipts will be more than double that amount.

CLEAN CREAMERIES.

There Are a Few of Them But Many Are Dirty.



Some time ago I had the pleasure of taking a trip to visit a number of creameries in the county in which I live. As a result of that visit I came to the conclusion that there are many very dirty creameries and also many very clean ones. I could but wish that the people that buy the butter and buttermilk from the two kinds of creameries knew the difference between them, says a writer in Farmers' Review. If they did I am sure that the dirty creameries would all sell their doors and go out of business, while the other creameries would have all the business. If we could get a publicity of that kind it would be a powerful lever for lifting up the quality of our butter and other dairy products.

The dirty creameries were, wide open to the flies and dust. Old milk cans that were spattered all over the floor. The churns smelled strong, and some of the utensils smelled as if they had not been thoroughly washed out for a long time. The clean creameries had cement floors, and the doors and windows were all screened. The utensils all smelled as clean as if hran new. It is a pleasure to think of eating butter coming from such creameries.

WKINLEY MONUMENT

To Be Dedicated in Buffalo Sept. 5. Former Residents Invited.

The beautiful white marble shaft erected by the state of New York in Niagara Square, Buffalo, N. Y., to the memory of President McKinley, is to be formally dedicated Thursday, Sept. 5, and the event will be the central feature of Buffalo's Old Home Week, Sept. 1 to 7. Former residents of Buffalo and the public at large are cordially invited to attend the dedication.

The McKinley monument was planned and executed under the direction of a commission of prominent men, at a cost of $150,000. Gov. Charles E. Hughes, with his military staff, will take part in the ceremonies and President Roosevelt and former President Grover Cleveland have been invited to attend and speak. Military parades will be a feature of the occasion.

SPAIN FAR BEHIND NATIONS.

Illiteracy Prevails There to a Most Amazing Extent.

Of the 20,000,000 people inhabiting Spain, only about 35 per cent can read and write; another two and one-half per cent of the population can read without being able to write, but the remaining 62½ per cent are absolute illiterates. In the south of Spain it is impossible to get a servant who can read and write, and many of the postmen are unable to tell to whom the letters they carry are addressed. They bring a bundle of letters to a house and the owner looks through them and takes those which are for which he thinks are) addressed to him. The Spanish postmen are not paid by the state; the recipient of the letters have to remunerate them according to the amount of their correspondence, and each letter costs the addressee at least one cent. It is a joke among the easy-going Spaniards that he who trusts the postmen best receives the most letters—whether they are intended for him or not.

"Cuticura has put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot and treated some with different remedies for about five years, but when that spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. One doctor told me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up. I decided to give Cuticura a trial. When I had used the first box of Cuticura Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Remedies my child was cured. The poor fellow tried vainly to turn his head, and grunted out: 'I can't eat that; I want to enjoy life while I do live.'"

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

PICTURESQUE OLD KOREA IS NOW "GETTING RELIGION."

Pyeng Yang, Korea.—To the traveler in Korea, Pyeng, the second city in the empire, is notable as a boat-shaped city where the people are afraid to dig wells lest they should sink the city; and as the ancient capital of the nation where Keja who was Korea's Peter the Great, ruled about the time King David was on the throne of Israel and Keja's grave and Keja's well are still preserved. To the religious world, Pyeng Yang is known as the center of the most remarkable missionary work now under way anywhere on the earth.

Within 16 years a Christian constituency of 5,000 persons, that is doubling itself annually, has been built up and in the surrounding country the number amounts to more than 25,000. As an instance of the way in which the church grows may be mentioned the fact that the mother church of Pyeng Yang has swarmed three times within four years and yet retains a membership of 914 communicants and 334 catechumens. The church, which seats 1,200 persons on its floor—of course there are no pews or chairs—is crowded every Sunday. The attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting ranges from more than 700 to 1,200 or 1,300. The smallest of the congregations which have gone out from Central church numbers more than 250 members; the largest twice that many.

Where Religion Has Introduced Baths.

All of these congregations are entirely self-supporting, and they maintain several religious enterprises, such as day schools, colporteurs and a book store and library. They have established a school for the blind, and have made the beginnings of an insane asylum, both the first of their kind in Korea.

More significant than any of these offshoots of the church, is the public bath house run by the Christians; for badly as it needs religion, Korea needs soap and water. I ask no further proof of the genuineness of the conversion of these people than the fact of this bath house, with its four bath tubs and two shower baths—the latter made by up-tilted and perforated Standard oil cans. The full meaning of this institution can be appreciated only by one who has traveled in Korea.

The three pioneers of this Pyeng Yang work are still here, and still young men. They arrived 16 years ago, Rev. Dr. S. A. Moffett, Rev. Graham Lee and Dr. J. Hunter Wells, of the northern Presbyterian board. They chanced to be men of large vision and statesmanlike mold, and so they laid broad foundations upon which the present phenomenal enterprise has been rising. Following them at intervals came 17 other missionaries of the same denomination. Prior to the Presbyterian settlement, Dr. and Mrs. W. J. Hall, medical missionaries of the Northern Methodist church, were already in Pyeng Yang, but at the death of Dr. Hall in 1894 the Methodists withdrew for a time, but later they re-established and now have missionaries in the field, and two thriving churches in the city proper, as well as their country work. I found Mrs. Noble, wife of a Methodist missionary, teaching the bible one week day morning to a class of more than a hundred women and girls, who had come in from the country for that purpose. Mrs. Hall, who is a physician, has since returned and conducts a hospital for women, which, however, burned down a few weeks ago.

An Extraordinary Prayer Meeting.

What may safely be called the most remarkable midweek prayer meeting in the world is that which I attended in the big church in Pyeng Yang. The building is L-shaped and divided into halves by wooden partitions at the angle of the L. One side is reserved for women and the other for men. The church is utterly devoid of furniture, except rough straw mats on the floor. Into it were gathered on this Wednesday evening no less than 1,200 persons, men and boys, women and children, all seated upon the floor.

The congregation was quiet, alert and reverent. At prayer they all bowed forward, with their heads to the ground. Missionary Lee led the music with a coronet, and the people sang lustily. Everybody carried a Bible and followed the Scripture reading. The address was listened to with all the intentness and responsiveness that any speaker could desire. At its close the leaders and many of the other men crowded to the platform to speak with their beloved "Moksa," or pastor. It struck me that this Korean missionary, and many of his associates, have a work and an opportunity which the ablest preacher in America might covet.

How American Doctors Fit the Orient.

One of the first facts about the missionary community here which strikes a visitor is the harmony and cooperation existing between the two missions. The missionaries are the only white people in Pyeng Yang, except one French tradesman and a French priest. Their social solidarity is as marked as the unity of their labors.

The three hospitals are run as one, although maintaining, in some respects, their separate identity. The largest is the Presbyterian hospital, conducted by Dr. J. H. Wells, and ministering to about 10,000 patients a year. Dr. E. D. Follwell, at the Methodist hospital, treats about 9,000, and Dr. Hall, whose work is entirely for women, about 8,000 patients a year. Jointly, the two men doctors are training 22 students, who not only pay for their instruction, and for the privilege of working in the hospital, but are also required to do evangelistic work among the patients. One notable characteristic of these hospitals, which are almost entirely self-supporting, is the adaptation to the Korean style of living. While they have wards containing beds, most of their patients sleep on the floor, as in their own homes, and are there treated. Like Korean houses these wards have heated floors. Dr. Wells has been conspicuously successful in curing the morphine habit, which the Japanese have introduced among the Koreans.

Adaptation is one of the characteristics of mission work in Pyeng Yang. Approaching the city, the visitor cannot at first distinguish the missionary compounds from the native homes. All the residences and the school buildings, and all except one of the churches (the Methodist), are built in native style. The interiors of the homes are naturally adapted to the use of Americans, and yet they are small and simple dwellings.

Teaching the East to Hustle.

The schools are cooperative. Be it understood that there is no public school system throughout Korea. Before the missionaries came, the higher class boys were taught the Chinese classics. The creation of the popular taste for learning, as well as the production of most of the literature in the language of the plain people, may be credited to the missionaries. It is quite general for native churches to maintain primary schools for secular instruction. There are in this district at least three higher academies and the demand for education are by no means met. It is probable that the missionaries will soon have to forego all direct teaching and become superintendents of instruction. The strategical importance to Christianity of thus having a controlling hand upon the education of the nation is apparent at a glance.

In Pyeng Yang proper are three noteworthy schools. One is the college, with 300 students, all of whom are Christians and all of whom pass a stiff entrance examination. This is taught by both Methodist and Presbyterian missionaries and by native teachers. It is expected shortly to grow into a Christian college with a thousand students. There is also a girls' high school with half a hundred students. I was much struck with the industrial school attached to the college, where some students work their way through an education. Here they have a genuine blacksmith shop, machine shop and carpenter shop, all of which are producing marketable wares. The machine shop, for instance, is unable to supply the demand for a certain braiding machine which it turns out. The industry and the skill shown by the student workmen would seem to indicate unsuspected capabilities on the part of the Korean. This establishment more nearly resembled a bona fide workshop than any other industrial school I recall.

The manager of this industrial school is Rev. Graham Lee, who seems to be a practical mechanic. In addition to running the industrial school he is the pastor of the largest church in Korea, and has charge of 40 country churches besides.

Like Story-Book Missions.

This suggests the country work that centers in Pyeng Yang, and one peculiar phase of Korean missions. The church here is self-supporting. New churches spring up almost in a night, without ever having seen a missionary. The Korean Christians are trained to do personal work. Everyone is expected to be an evangelist. Thus it comes to pass, that, by the telling of the news from mouth to mouth, the number of believers spreads with greater rapidity than the missionary can follow. It seems literally true here that the missionary cannot keep up with the work, much less lead it.

A few days ago Dr. Wells and Dr. Sharrocks went to Wiju, a city north of here, which figured often in the war dispatches. En route they looked in upon some country congregations. The first night, in a little village of about 1,200 inhabitants, they found a prayer meeting under way—the regular midweek service, with no less than 700 persons present. This, be it remembered, was in a village where no missionary resides, and where no white man visits oftener than once a quarter. The next night they came, as unexpectedly as before, upon another village prayer meeting, with 600 persons in attendance. In these villages, as in many others round about, the villagers, Christian and non-Christian, are in the habit of gathering in the church for morning prayers, before going out to the fields for work.

It seems as if religion has become the very life of these people. It is certainly their supreme interest and pleasure. They build their own churches, with their own hands. Indeed the Christian communities throughout Korea probably come as near communism, in their simplicity and fraternity and cooperation, as anything known in this present day.

One Man Baptizes More Than a Thousand.

From Wiju I hear a story that matches the famous incident of the delegation of Indians to St. Louis, years ago, to seek somebody to go back with them to teach them the white man's book. The Wiju Christians have built themselves a commodious church and have now established an academy or higher school. Among them, however, was nobody qualified to conduct the latter. So at the annual meeting of the Presbyterian mission a delegation was sent down from Wiju to Seoul to plead for a missionary. The people agreed not only to give him the heartiest of welcomes, and to pay all his expenses, but also to provide his salary as well. Yet they were sent back with their request denied. There are not enough missionaries to go around.

Here in Korea there is no hunting up of people for the church; the people are clamoring to come in. During the mission year just ended, one man in this region, Rev. C. E. Kearns, baptised 1,100 Koreans. Yet it is not made easy for a Korean to become a Christian. Careful always lest men and women should desire to enter the church from unworthy motives, every applicant is obliged to become a catechumen for at least one year. Then he must pass a rigid examination as to his character and his knowledge of Christian truth. The missionaries impose what they say is the New Testament standard of conduct upon the people. Every Christian is required to be a total abstainer, to refrain from all forms of gambling, to observe Sunday strictly, and to have a clean character morally. An offending member is promptly disciplined.

The Magistrate's Concubine.

When it is considered that these people are just emerging from the raw heathenism and devil worship which prevails around them, these standards seem the more remarkable. The Korean Christians here go farther than their fellows in America. In the "big church" of Pyeng Yang some of the members have formed an anti-tobacco society, for the Koreans, men and women, are confirmed smokers. These people give the money they thus save to the church, and two colporteurs are so supported.

No distinction is made among classes. In a village near here the magistrate, who is the chief resident official, desires to become a Christian. The local church leaders came to the missionary to ask what they should do, since this great man keeps a concubine. The decision was immediate and decisive that he could not be accepted as a catechumen until he had conformed to the church's standard in all respects, no matter how high his office or how great his wealth.

It is said that, with respect to the percentage of gifts and with respect to the activity of the ordinary members of the churches, Christianity in Korea is far ahead of Christianity in America. Certainly for ingenious, open-hearted, child-like Christianity, I have never seen anything to equal these Koreans. Their manner, their words and their work irresistably suggest the church of the apostolic age.

Bunyan's Primitive Flute.

The most curious story told of John Bunyan's life in Bedford jail is this: To pass away his gloomy hours he took a leg out of his stool and with his knife fashioned it into a flute. The keepers repeatedly searched his cell to find the cause of the music, but when he heard them coming he would always replace the leg in the stool, and they never discovered how the music had been produced.

FIXING OF THE COST

THE FACTORS IN PRICES OF COMMODITIES.

PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Equity in Division of Profits to All Engaged in Producing, Manufacturing and Selling.

Were the masses of people better informed as to principles underlying business transactions and commerce in general there would be less cause for complaint as to matters pertaining to buying and selling of commodities.

One of the faults, if it may be so termed, is the inclination of the people to complain about prices they must pay for goods required for domestic and other uses. There can be no doubt but that in many districts retail merchants exact exorbitant prices, this to an extent is the fault of the people who are little acquainted with real values. There are three important things to be considered in the fixing of the selling price of all commodities. These factors are the cost of the raw materials, the expense of manufacturing and the expense of distribution. From commercial transactions neither of these basic elements can be eliminated. The farmer who is the grower of corn, wheat and other cereals that comprise food stuffs, receives compensation for his product in accordance with the laws of supply and demand, and the values that may regulate the monetary markets of the world. The producer of cotton in the southern states, must receive for his product compensation that is based upon the cost of labor, manufacture and what finished articles in the cotton line may bring in the markets of the world. The producer of the raw materials must pay for his labor, and for his investment in farm lands and farm equipment. The manufacturer who buys the raw products must take into consideration the expense of labor, the maintenance of his manufacturing plant, the interest upon the amount invested, and also various other items, and the sum of these with what he can secure for his finished product, regulates the price that he pays for the raw material. In the distribution of goods the middle man plays an important part. He is the go-between the producer of the raw material the manufacturer, and the manufacturer and the consumer. He cannot well be eliminated from commercial transactions. He performs a service that neither the producer of the raw material or the manufacturer can more economically perform. The middle men are the jobbers, the commission agents and the retailers; each performing his special service in the matter of distribution. The consumer is the end of the chain, the final buyer of commodities who utilizes them for his own use and the uses of his family. There should be a margin of profit in each of the different transactions that will allow equitable compensation to each and every one interested in the production of a finished article. All goods have a real value and this value is determined solely by the elements referred to herein. The consumer must expect to contribute his mite towards the support of all engaged in commerce. He is the beginning link, as well as the ending link of every transaction. The farmer who grows wheat, when he forces the grocer from whom he buys his flour to sell the flour at a low rate, indirectly has an influence in lowering the market for the wheat that he produces. When the consumer demands that goods be sold at a price below the cost of production, he invites substitution of inferior goods, adulteration of the articles and encourages a system that is unwholesome.

The people should understand that they never receive something for nothing, or receive anything of value for less than its value unless under some abnormal circumstance. Of late years there has a system grown up of offering great bargains in various kinds of goods by catalogue sent through the mails, and presenting attractive and illusive advertising that goods are being sold at less than cost. The intelligent man or woman will carefully consider all the circumstances relative to such offers, and will be guided accordingly. It is evident that when special bargains are made there are conditions that justify such bargains; that goods are not of standard grade, are stale, or deteriorated in some manner. Also there has a system of offering "free premiums" grown up that is unwholesome, and to an extent an imposition upon the people as the system compels them to pay for articles that are not essential for them to have. The man who buys sugar does not care to be forced under the guise of paying for sugar to pay for a paper of pins or a package of needles, even though these may be a "free premium." It is well to bear these points in mind, and a little study into business economics and principles will be highly advantageous to the one who desires to know about the proper value of goods he must buy.

Care of Shade Trees.

While shade trees are very desirable along sidewalks and roads, unless they are kept well trimmed they become much of a nuisance, preventing evaporation of rains and helping make muddy streets. It is well for citizens of every town to look after the trimming of shade trees, and the planting of shade trees where they are needed.

SCHEMES TO DEFRAUD.

Some of the Plans to Secure Money Without Adequate Compensation.

Plans to secure money from the people without giving adequate returns are numerous. Not alone are the residents of country districts made the victims of schemers, but city people as well are now and then humbugged by shrewd fakirs. Within the past year or two it was announced in the columns of magazines and the farm papers of a seedless apple being evolved. A few months later seedless apple trees were widely advertised from different parts of the country. One concern which started in to operate on an extensive plan organized seedless apple companies in different states of the western country. Within a few months hundreds of thousands of dollars were taken from the pockets of the people for seedless apple trees. These trees were just the ordinary kind, and poor stock at that. So bold were the operations of the seedless apple tree schemers that the secretary of agriculture found it necessary to issue a bulletin warning the people of the fraud, and later the post office department issued fraud orders against those engaged in the nefarious business. There are nurseries located in nearly every state. It is a good plan for the residents of farming and fruit growing districts to carefully investigate concerns selling fruit trees and similar lines before they are given patronage.

A number of petty grafts have lately been worked throughout the country. One of the common ones is the hiring of agents to sell soaps, perfumes and other commodities on the premium plan. The concerns which operate games of this class generally have their headquarters in some large city and through advertising secure the names of people desiring employment as canvassers and agents. To such they send letters holding out extraordinary inducements. Those who agree to act as agents sign a contract which is an agreement to pay for such goods as may be sent to them on consignment. The sample outfits which are forwarded, or the small stock of goods, are billed in such a way as to allow the concern an exorbitant profit. If the agent succeeds in selling the goods and remits promptly there is not likelihood of being any trouble, but generally the goods are so poor in quality that they remain dead stock in the hands of the canvasser, and he will find that the agreement he has signed will hold him to pay for the goods.

• • •

One of the humbugs that is perpetrated upon the people of many communities is the selling of stock in cooperative mercantile companies. During the past three or four years the residents of many small towns and agricultural districts have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not millions, through the buying of stock in alleged cooperative establishments in large cities. One company with headquarters in Chicago, doing a mail order business, sold stock in excess of $1,000,000, and when the concern went into the hands of a receiver about a year ago there was not ten per cent. of assets to return to stockholders. Other alleged cooperative deals involve what is termed a profit sharing plan. This plan does not require the purchase of stock, but the cooperative part is purely a scheme devised for the securing of trade.

COSTLY LESSONS IN ECONOMY.

It Is Not Always a Matter of Saving to Buy Cheap Goods.

Almost every rural community has within its confines people who have paid well for experience and have learned costly lessons as to buying of goods.

Not long ago in a western town a citizen desired to buy a kitchen range. A visit to the local hardware store was made and the prices asked by the dealer were not satisfactory to the prospective purchaser, who by the way had his attention attracted by the advertising in his farm paper of "a bargain" in a kitchen range. The range was advertised as equal to those costing "twice the money at the local store." The citizen sent a money order to the concern advertising the range, and in the course of a few weeks he was notified by the railroad agent that the range had arrived. In removing it from the station to the farm house, in some inexplainable way part of it was broken. The broken pieces were taken to the local hardware store but could not be duplicated. A letter was written to the range company and in the course of a few weeks a duplicate of the broken part was received, but it was discovered that it would not fit the stove. It had to be returned and a few weeks later another piece was sent; then the stove was placed in use. Within six months the top had become so warped that it interfered seriously with the drafts. At the end of the year the stove was burned out and ready for the junk heap. The purchaser of the stove then determined that he would secure another range from the home dealer. He paid the home dealer the price he was asked which was about one-third more than the poor range cost, and after a few years the range was found to be as good almost as when first bought.

This is one illustration of how economy wrongfully practiced is expensive. It is not always wise to seek the bargain counters when good articles are wanted. Neither is it a wise idea to buy goods before you have an opportunity to carefully examine them and determine their value.

Sporting Gossip.

After an interval of 11 years Andrew Freedman, former president of the New York National league club and one of the lieutenants of Richard Croker, is ready to pay Fred Pfeffer, once a member of Anson's world beaters, what he owes him. It was some time back in 1896 when Freedman, imbued with the idea of giving New York a real baseball team, hired Fred to play second base. Pfeffer reported in good shape and played for a time, until Freedman had one of his "moods," and put Fred on the bench. After a while Pfeffer was released, but Freedman forgot to pay him for the time he was warming the boards, and the hero of many a baseball battle went to court about it. John M. Ward, also a star ball player in his day, but then, as now, a lawyer in New York, undertook to collect the amount. The case ran through the courts of New York, Freedman consistently losing and appealing. It finally came to the court of last appeals, and if the mells from the east show better speed than the courts Fred will get a check by and by. He received a letter from Mr. Ward recently stating that everything was settled and that the original amount of $680 had been growing some, as the decision allows interest on the money since the suit was started.

Justin J. Clarke, the brilliant catcher of the Cleveland club is the youngest backstop in the major leagues. He was born in Detroit just 24 years ago. He started his professional career with an independent club in Defiance, O., in 1902. Spring of 1903 he received a short and satisfactory trial from Toledo, being released before the championship race started. He then played in the Texas league for a season. The Atlanta club of the Southern league purchased his release. He caught for Atlanta the entire season of 1904, working in 135 championship and 18 exhibition games, 153 in all. That fall he was bought by Cleveland, with which he has been ever since. Season of 1905 he was a bench warmer but last year worked regularly with Bemis, until disabled by a broken finger. He is said to have Indian blood in his veins, weighs 165 pounds and stands about five feet, nine inches. He is not only a fine catcher and hard and accurate thrower, but also an excellent batsman and has before him a brilliant future in the national game.

President Comiskey, of the Chicago White Sox, the other day made the following interesting observation: "In baseball there is this fact to be borne in mind—a right-hand batter will, in the long run, bring in more runs than a left-hand batter. For that reason the fourth and fifth men in the list should be right-handers in wielding the willow. Why is that? Because, as a rule, the right-hander hits the ball harder than the left-hander. Besides that, the right-hander hits naturally to right field, while the left-hander has to 'pull' the ball to do this. A long fly to right field is surer of scoring a runner from third than the same fly to left, for the baserunner can watch the fielder easier and gets a better start for the plate. When a left-handed batter takes his position at the plate, facing the pitcher, the left fielder always comes in closer to the infield, knowing the usual inability of left-handed batters to hit the ball hard. On the other hand, as soon as the righthanded batter goes up, the left fielder gets back deep into the garden again. So with no outs, or one down, I'd rather see a right-handed batter at the plate than a left-handed, for the baserunner is surer of scoring, for if it is a left-hander at the plate the left fielder is sure to be drawn in, making the throw to the plate that much shorter."

The Illinois-Wisconsin Baseball league has been organized by Beloit, Janesville, Rockford and Belvidere. These towns were represented by H. J. Mills, T. F. Abbott, C. J. Golden and W. E. Morrow, respectively. The league will play Sunday ball only. The closing games will be played October 18. Officers were elected and other business transacted at a meeting held at the Nelson hotel, Rockford.

Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—Apply at the recruiting office-early and avoid the rush.

A move is on foot to increase the pay of United States soldiers and sailors, which was fixed more than 50 years ago, and it was expected that when the increase is granted there will be a rush of recruits.

It has been generally assumed that Uncle Sam's soldiers were by far the best paid in the world, and that belief has in large part been the cause of the failure of attempts made in the past to secure increases in pay.

But now, in connection with the systematic preparations that are being made to lay the subject of "something wrong in the army" before congress at the next session it has been discovered that this belief is founded in error and that several nations are much more liberal in the treatment of their soldiers than is the United States.

The fact will be brought to the attention of congress in connection with the subject of a general increase in the salaries of both army and navy.

A Canadian sergeant, for instance, enters upon his service with a wage of one dollar per day, which increases according to the provisions of the longevity laws to $1.25.

The American sergeant gets $18 a month at first, and the expenses are larger than the Canadian non-commissioned officer, because of the considerable difference in the scale of living and the lower tariff rates upon the necessities of life in Canada.

Even Cuba pays her soldiers three times as much as the American private. The Cuban rural guard gets the pay of a New York policeman. Other countries than these two exceed America in the pay allowed their soldiers, and data is being gotten together to make up a strong case to demonstrate to congress that the real reason for the numerous desertions from the American army is not dissatisfaction with the hard work, or dislike for some particular officer, nor even the lack of a simple and well regulated canteen, but the small wage paid to the soldier compared with the compensation in civil life.

NO TRIAL FOR TUCKER ON CHARGES OF WIFE

COL. WILLIAM F. TUCKER of the pay department of the army, husband of the daughter of Mrs. John A. Logan, who is now stationed at Chicago, will not be court-martialed on the charges preferred against him by his wife.

This is the opinion of army officers who are familiar with the contents of the report, which has been made after a full and careful investigation of the charges. The inspector general of the army has had several of his best inspectors at work on the case, and testimony has been sought upon the Pacific slope and in the Philippines.

The report has been prepared and forwarded to Secretary Taft, who is at Murray Bay enjoying a vacation. It is expected that Secretary Taft will act upon the report before starting for the Philippines.

Army officers who are in a position to know the substance of the report say that the inspectors have not found sufficient evidence to warrant the department in ordering a court-martial. Mrs. Tucker has the civil courts open to bar for redress if she desires, and may sue for a divorce without consulting the officials of the war department, but officials say the department goes slowly in all matters affecting the private affairs of army officers, and that the family skeleton is not paraded except upon occasions which cannot be avoided.

"It would be highly improper for us to say anything at this time," said Mrs. Logan. "We do not know that the report has been prepared. We must await its publication and know officially of its contents before we can make any statement."

Mrs. Tucker shares the opinion of her mother and will not discuss the case in advance of the publication of the report. Neither she nor Mrs. Logan would at this time give any expression concerning plans for further proceedings in the event the report is, as expected, adverse to the charges made against Col. Tucker. If they contemplate the institution of civil proceedings in the courts that fact will not be discussed until after the report is published.

WITH 30,000 enlisted men in its service, dependent almost wholly on the aid they receive aboard ship, there is not a dentist in the whole naval service. This is the showing that Surgeon General Rixey will make to congress at its session this winter.

Gen. Rixey will urge three important measures, upon which he is now working, and which will later be incorporated in his annual report to be submitted to the secretary of the navy. He will urge in the strongest terms possible that congress pass a law authorizing the reorganization and enlargement of the naval hospital corps, the employment of a sufficient number of dentists to attend to the needs of the enlisted men in the service and the creation of a corps of women nurses. In his last report Gen. Rixey showed, and also when he appeared before the house and senate naval affairs committees, that a very large percentage of the sickness in the navy was directly attributable to the lack of dentists aboard ship and at the various naval stations. He said he considered this one of the most important matters upon which congress could act, as the efficiency of the sailors properly to perform their duties was dependent upon their physical state.

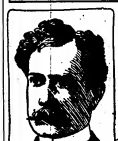
INCREASE IN IMPORTS BENEFITS WHOLE WORLD

ALL the world, or at least all the grand divisions of the world, have profited from the large increase in importations during the fiscal year just ended. This gain, as already announced by the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, amounts to over $200,000,000 compared with the preceding year.



Of this increase about $115,000,000 is in imports from Europe, $33,000,000 in imports from Asia, $15,000,000 in imports from North America, about $10,000,000 in imports from South America, nearly $10,000,000 in imports from Africa and about 5,000,000 in imports from Oceania.

The largest increase in imports from one country is from the United Kingdom, showing a growth of about $77,000,000 over the preceding year. Pig iron alone shows an increase in the 11 months ending with May of nearly $7,000,000 from the United Kingdom alone, pig tin an increase of $3,500,000 and cotton cloths, cotton laces, silk, crude India rubber and manufactures of various sorts, as well as many other less important articles, show a considerable growth.

From Germany imports show an advance of almost $28,000,000. This occurs chiefly in beet sugar, chemicals, kid gloves, silks, knit goods and paper manufactures, the largest single increase being in sugar, which alone shows an increase in the 11 months ending with May of nearly $6,000,000 compared with the immediately preceding year. From France the imports show a gain of about $21,000,000, chiefly in silks, laces, diamonds, gloves and other manufactured articles.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

LEADING SOUTHERN DEMOCRAT

Edward Ward Carmack, of Tennessee, who has come to the end of his term in the United States senate, to which he was elected in 1900, is being urged by his friends in his home state to run for governor. And there are those who would have him seek still greater honors. In fact he has been frequently mentioned as a Democratic presidential possibility.

Mr. Carmack is of Scottish descent, though American for four generations, nearly six feet tall, straight, full-chested, and of powerful grip, as befitting one who has lived much out of doors.

Left fatherless at an early age, young Carmack nevertheless determined to become a lawyer. To that end he went to the celebrated Cumberlenka school in Maury county.

"But I have no money," he said to Principal Webb, "and I will have to work to pay for my tuition. He paid for his tuition soon after, being admitted to the bar in 1890.

He practiced law at Columbia, and without any solicitation or even knowledge on his part his friends nominated and elected him justice of the peace. In 1894 they sent him to the legislature. He was editor of the Nashville American from 1896 until 1899, when he became editor of the Memphis Commercial. He was elected a member of the national house of representatives in 1897 for the Tenth district of Tennessee. But not without a hard struggle on the part of Josiah Paterson, who appeared before the house and bitterly contested the election.

Mr. Carmack's speech before the house, in which the Republicans contstituted a large majority, had much to do with his victory over the contestant. He asserted his rights and demanded them.

From the house Mr. Carmack was sent to the senate. There he opposed the acquisition of the Philippines and the acceptance of the Canal Zone from the newly-created Republic of Panama. He supported President Roosevelt in his summary discharge of the negro troops for rioting at Brownsville.

MAY SUCCEED COREY

Alva C. Dinkey, who, it is reported several times, will before long succeed William Ellis Corey as president of the steel trust, is another of the Carnegie millionaires. He has been president of the Carnegie Steel company for a number of years at a salary which exceeds that of the president of the United States. And this young man, not yet 40, has risen to his present position entirely through his own efforts.

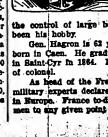
While young Dinkey was at school he studied telegraphy, and at 18 got a position on the Baltimore & Ohio road. Six months later he went to Carnegie as operator, but he soon gave that up to learn the machinists' trade. It was with the details he liked to deal.

In the early '80s he gathered about him a number of prominent Pittsburg business men and organized the Iron City.

He conceived a way in which electricity could be applied in rolling mills and he took up the question with the chief engineer of the Carnegie works. One device after another he patented, reducing the amount of labor required for the process to one-sixth by his improved methods.

In 1898 he was appointed assistant superintendent of the Homestead steel works, and in March, 1901, he succeeded William E. Corey as general superintendent of the Homestead works. His administration of that position with its great responsibilities has been eminently successful and is the reason why Carnegie selected the man who have preceded him as chief executive of the Carnegie Steel company.

Dinkey is the brother of Mrs. Charles M. Schwab and resembles his brother-in-law in his methods of handling men.



FOE TO HAT TIPPING

Count Johann Harrach, one of the greatest nobles in Austria, is heading a movement to abolish hat-raising as a form of salutation, and to substitute the military salute. The supporters of the movement declare that this exposure of the head induces colds, influenza and other ailments, and even baldness. It might also be added that it causes hats to become worn out much more rapidly than they would otherwise be.

Austrian etiquette requires a man to raise his hat to all his acquaintances, male and female, alike, as well as to his social inferiors such as cabmen and servants. Hence anybody with a tolerably large bowing acquaintance is continually lifting his hat as he goes along the streets. Count Harrach says this may be all very well in a moderate climate, but in the cold winters and broiling summers of Vienna, it is not at all a healthy practice. And so the count, despite the fact that he is nearly 80 years of age, is heading a crusade against this time-honored custom. For himself, the military salute of merely raising the hand to the head, and he thinks that among a people so familiar with military forms and usages as the Austrians are, such an innovation ought not to be difficult.

"FIRST SOLDIER OF FRANCE"

Gen. Hagron, "the first soldier of France," who recently resigned as chief of the army as a protest against the new law requiring conscripts to serve only two years in the army, is an indefatigable student of war. He holds that it is wrong for the Socialist majority in the chamber of deputies to sacrifice the interests of national defense for political capital.

For years Gen. Hagron has felt the growing danger to France from her old-time enemy, Germany, whose population is constantly increasing, while France is standing still.

He is looked upon in Europe as the best military expert on firearms and ordnance. Besides, he is a brilliant strategist and tactician. He is a master of the lessons taught by the great battles in the American civil war. Cavalry, especially the control of large bodies operating against a single point, has always been his hobby.

Gen. Hagron is 63 years old. He is the son of an army officer and was born in Caen. He graduated at the head of his class from a military school in Saint-Cyr in 1864. During the Franco-German war he attained the rank of colonel.

As head of the French army he perfected an organization which other military experts declared could mobilize more rapidly than any other army in Europe. France today is able to throw her entire army of over 1,000,000 men to any given point in the country within 48 hours.

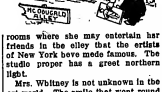
What Is Going On in New York City Told in Interesting Manner

NEW YORK.—Dwarf cows no larger than a Shetland pony or a St. Bernard dog are something of a novelty in America, though they are common enough in Ireland, where they are known as the Kerry or Kerry cows. They promise to add a novel feature to the picturesque side of fashionable life in the Hempstead section of Long Island.



Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, who owns an estate of some 200 acres adjoining the Meadow Brook Country club, is the prime mover in starting the fad in this country and has recently brought from Ireland two fine specimens which are to be augmented by another importation, now on its way from the other side.

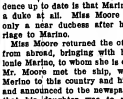
So interested is she in her new pursuit that eventually she intends replacing all her Holsteins and Jerseys with the little cattle.

It was back in 1883 that the Kerry cow, which is a native of Ireland, making its home in the Kerry mountains, became a popular breed in England. Lady Henry Somerset introduced the cows in that year at the Irish fair, in London, where they received considerable attention from stockraisers and at once became a fad among English women who operated show stock farms. At that time they were not an expensive breed of cattle, as they could be bought for $20 a head, and were familiarly known in Ireland as the "poor man's cow," from the fact that they could live where another cow would starve. Now the price has advanced, on account of their recent popularity, until they cost about $200 each, and many are even higher.

Kerry cows never grow more than 36 or 38 inches in height. In appearance they might be compared with an ordinary sized cow as a diminutive might to a bound of normal proportions. They are squatty in appearance, with a fairly good sized body, but with short legs. They are kind and gentle, and although so much smaller than ordinary cows are equally fine milk producers.

MRS. WHITNEY TO LIVE IN MacDOUGALD ALLEY

DESERTING her magnificent studio in West Fortieth street, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney has joined the colony of artists in MacDougald alley and has taken an old hayloft in No. 19, used until a few days ago by a public backman. The alley runs from MacDougald to West Eighth street, near Washington square, and is one of the principal centers of artistic life in the city.



In these quarters, when they are remodeled, the daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt and the wife of Harry Payne Whitney will pursue her chosen profession, for which she has been fitting herself by many years abroad.

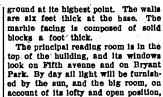
Mrs. Whitney will oversee the remodeling and prepare the plans for the decorations. There will be living rooms where she may entertain her friends in the alley that the artists of New York have made famous. The studio proper has a great northern light.

Mrs. Whitney is not unknown in the art world. The smile that went round when, as Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, she took up sculpture, has given place to serious expression.

Her first work of any magnitude was the designing of the pillars for the Hotel Manhattan. Then when the contract was let for the decorations of the Hotel Belmont, Mrs. Whitney's designs for the dining-room were accepted.

In MacDougald alley, as neighbors of Mrs. Whitney, will be the two talented painters, Mrs. Bullard and Miss Sarah Kotherine Sweeney.

MISS MOORE CAPTURES AN ITALIAN NEAR DUKE



SOCIETY girls who have been envious of Miss Elsie Moore because she was to become a duchess, may be resting their time. While Miss Moore's father, Charles A. Moore, the rich tool supply man, declares that Don Mario, who is a real duke, other evidence up to date is that Marino is not a duke at all. Miss Moore may be only a near duchess after her marriage to Marino.

Miss Moore returned the other day from abroad, bringing with her Don Ionie Marino, to whom she is engaged. Mr. Moore met the ship, welcomed Marino to his country and his heart, and announced to the newspaper men that his daughter was to marry a duke. And Marino is not a real duke, if the Italian consul general is correct in his statements. The consul general was not anxious to discuss the matter but he repeated what he said before, that a certain Torlonia Marino was a well known figure in Rome. He said that this Torlonia belonged to a titled family and that his brother was the bearer of the title of duke. He did not know of any title possessed by Marino.

It appears that Marino is the brother of Duca Leopold di Giulio di Merio di Giovanni, who is a real duke, though not of great distinction. Merino, however, may be a duke sometime if all other claimants to the title die off. He is said to have money. One genealogist says that the founder of the family in Italy was a contractor named Torlonga, who went from Auvergne, France, in the wake of the French army when it invaded Italy. This contractor settled in Rome and became the financial and political agent there of the prince of Furstenburg, through whom he obtained the German title of baron. He established a bank and had the farming out of the business monopoly.

The genealogists appear to agree that the family is by no means ancient, but rose rapidly in the last century. One genealogist gives the name of the founder of the family he Alexander. His descendants made money by farming and banking.

FINE PUBLIC LIBRARY IS NEARING COMPLETION

IN THE "most magnificent public building in the United States," as New Yorkers characterize the new public library, now nearing completion at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, on the site of a once famous reservoir, there will be 63 miles of book shelves. It is estimated that these shelves will afford lodgment for 2,500,000 volumes.

Realizing the value of the treasures which will be stored here, the architects and builders have taken especial care to make certain that this mammoth collection shall be safe from fire.

The walls of the building are of massive stone, shining white. It fills the entire frontage of two city blocks from Fortieth to Forty-second street, facing east. It is 394 feet long, 274 feet deep and 180 feet above the ground at its highest point. The walls are six feet thick at the base. The marble facing is composed of solid blocks a foot thick.

The principal reading room is in the top of the building, and its windows look on Fifth avenue and on Bryant Park. By day all light will be furnished by the sun, and the big room, on account of its lofty and open position, will be especially well lighted.

Between the reading room and the stack room beneath there will be direct vertical communication.

The basement contains parcel rooms, a department for the exhibition of patents, a special library of children's books, a luncheon room, a book binding, quarters and lockers for employes and an office of the circulating department of the library.

RAILROAD WAR IN ALABAMA IS ENDED

GOVERNOR AND SOUTHERN ROAD OFFICIALS REACH AGREEMENT.

State Gains a Victory—Company Will Put New Laws into Effect, Pending Court Decisions, and Recovers Its License.

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 9.—Gov. Comer and the officials of the Southern railroad reached an agreement late Thursday afternoon and the license of the railroad in Alabama will be reinstated.

Beginning September 1, 1907, the railroad and its allied lines will put into effect the two and a half cent passenger fare act and the measure reducing the freight rates on 110 commodities commonly shipped in Alabama.

Victory for the State.

The agreement was not reached without concessions being made by both sides, but in the main it is a victory for the state. The laws in question will not be put into effect permanently. The agreement specifically declares that their operation beginning September 1 is only subject to the final determination as to their constitutionality and their reasonableness, when a decision on these questions is finally rendered by the court of last resort. Meanwhile, the other laws enacted by the legislature at its winter session affecting the railroads of the state will remain in force by virtue of the injunction granted by Judge Thomas G. Jones, of the federal court.

The railroad's representatives agreed that they would appear before Judge Jones and ask him for an order modifying the restraining order issued by the United States court two months ago, to permit of the immediate operation, subject to the final decision of the court, of the two acts in question.

License to Be Restored.

In consideration of the agreement of the railroad representatives to permit of the operation of these two laws, the one affecting the passenger traffic, and the other the freight, it was agreed by Gov. Comer that the revocation of the license of the Southern in Alabama should be canceled and the company permitted to do business without hindrance by the state.

The compromise affects only the one railroad system, the Southern. The other railroads of the state were not parties to the conference.

G. W. DELAMATER A SUICIDE.

Once Prominent Pennsylvania Politician Takes His Own Life.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 8.—George Wallace Delamater, once candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, and who served as state senator from Crawford county from 1887 to 1890, committed suicide by shooting Wednesday in his office in this city. Descendants of neighboring offices in the Diamond National bank building found him dead with a 38-caliber bullet hole in his right temple.

Grief over the death of his father, George B. Delamater, at Meadville, Pa., on May 6, and the sudden death of his son, James Scott Delamater, in June at Counsellville, Pa., is believed to be the cause of his suicide.

Shirley P. Austin, a son-in-law, who took charge of the body, declared that the dead man's affairs were in no way involved and that he had nothing to worry about. He was connected with the Prudential Life Insurance company in this city and leaves a comfortable fortune to his family, being heavily insured. Mr. Delamater was born March 18, 1840, in Meadville, Pa.

RAILWAY STRIKE MAY SPREAD.

Other Western Roads Threatened—Citizens Man Four Mail Trains.

Denver, Col., Aug. 8.—There is no prospect of a settlement of the strike on the Colorado & Southern road, and it may spread to other systems of roads. Grievance committees of the Denver & Rio Grande and other roads are in the city, and they will make a demand for an additional two cents an hour for the yardmen.

Sixteen of the largest mines near Trinidad, depending directly on the Colorado & Southern for handling their product, closed down Wednesday indefinitely as a result of the switchmen's strike. The shutdown throws some 4,000 men out of employment.

To prevent the closing of their mines, which would entail a loss of thousands of dollars, and to relieve threatened coal famine at Central City, ten of Central City's most prominent citizens manned a train of rail destined for that district. They took charge of the freight at Golden, where it had been laid out since the calling of the strike of trainmen on the Colorado & Southern.

Cavalry Squadron Is on Road.

Fort Leavenworth, Kas., Aug. 9.—The first squadron of the Thirteenth cavalry, U. S. A., made up of 250 men, has departed from here on its march to Fort Sheridan, Ill. The squadron will pass through Iowa and Illinois, stopping at the Rock Island arsenal, where it is said, Kermit Roosevelt, son of President Roosevelt, may join the soldiers. Among those who joined the squadron here are Capt. Pitchugh Lee and Lieut. Philip Sheridan, son of the late Gen. Sheridan.

GODIVA'S RIDE REPEATED

COVENTRY'S NOVEL CELEBRATION ATTRACTS THOUSANDS.

Nude Figure of Tradition Imitated By Actress in Pink Flashings.

Coventry, England, Aug. 8.—Mounted on a white palfrey and decorously clothed in masses of hair, pink flashings, and clouds of gauze, a modern Lady Godiva Tuesday gave a reprehended a compromise and a vaudeville actress, whose specialty is to display herself in groups of living statuary, was engaged to represent the historic benefactress of Coventry.

The actress, who is said to have complained that she could make half a dozen summer frocks out of the gauze she was compelled to wear, took an hour and a half to arrange her trailing hair and long draperies and then a special committee had to approve her costume before Lady Godiva was permitted to take her place in the pageant.

Many of the local clergy, who had been preaching against the fleshings as being suggestive of nudity, left the city temporarily, but most of the people of the county and 80,000 to 100,000 from the outside had a sight of Lady Godiva as she traversed the six miles.

Lady Godiva, who flourished about the middle of the eleventh century, was the wife of Leofric, earl of Chester. She was a woman of great beauty and piety and the benefactress of many churches and monasteries.

According to the legend Lady Godiva begged her husband to relieve Coventry of a burdensome tax, and he consented to do so on the condition that she should ride naked through the market place. This she did, covered only by her long hair, and thus won a gift for the people.

According to some versions of the story the people were commanded to keep within their houses while Lady Godiva passed, and only one man, "Peeping Tom," disobeyed and was miraculously stricken with blindness.

AUTO RACE ENDS IN DEATH.

Two Milwaukeeans Killed When Car Collides With Bridge.

Milwaukee, Aug. 8.—A race between two big automobiles from Milwaukee to Okauchee, a distance of about 25 miles, with a time limit of forty of 25 as the stakes, ended in a frightful accident Wednesday to one of the cars, which resulted in the death of two of its occupants and painful though not fatal injury to two others.

The machine which met with an accident collided with a bridge which spans Elm creek, near Brookfield junction, about nine miles west of Milwaukee. The wrecked car is owned by Alderman Koerner, while Frank Schlitz was one of other machine, which reached its destination in safety.

The dead are: Ex-Alderman Joseph Kuschbert, Milwaukee, and George Post, chauffeur for John Koerner, died in hospital.

Those injured are Horace Greeley Sloan and "Paddy" Dorrell.

WILLIAMS IS THE NOMINEE.

Vardaman Accepts Defeat in Mississippi Senatorial Contest.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 9.—The Democratic state executive committee has declared Congressman John Sharp Williams as the party nominee for the United States senate.

The canvass of the returns showed a majority of 648 votes for Williams, the totals being as follows: Williams, 59,496; Vardaman, 58,848. There will be no contest over the result.

Solving the Trunk Mystery.

Monte Carlo, Aug. 8.—The evidence secured here indicates that Theresa Williams, parts of whose body were found in a trunk and in a valise at Marseilles and who was a well known frequenter of the gaming tables here, was murdered for her jewels. Mr. and Mrs. Gold, who are English, and who owned the trunk and valise, will be extradited from Marseilles to Monte Carlo and will be tried here.

Foresters Bar Liquor Man.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 8.—Liquor dealers, wholesale and retail, and bartenders in saloons or other places where liquor is sold, will hereafter be prohibited from becoming members of the Catholic Order of Foresters. The international convention of that body, now in session at the old capitol here, Wednesday adopted an amendment to the constitution by a large vote to that effect.

Drivers Name Daniel J. Tobin.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 10.—The contest for the presidency of the Team Drivers and Helpers' International union has been settled by the election of Daniel J. Tobin, of Boston. Cornelius P. Shea, president for the past four years, was defeated. The vote was Tobin, 104; Shea, 94.

Crop Condition Good.

Washington, Aug. 10.—The crop report of the agricultural department shows the condition of corn August 1 as 82.2; winter wheat production for 1907, about 409,509,000 bushels; an average of 14.6 per cent.; spring wheat condition 79.4.

MOORS ATTACK THE CASABLANCA CAMP

TWICE REPULSED BY FRENCH SHIPS AND TROOPS WITH HEAVY LOSSES.

Warships Fire On Them—Reported Bombardment of Mazagan Not Confirmed—Mulay Amin Approves Action of Europeans.

Casablanca, Aug. 10.—The Moors Thursday night renewed their attempt to invade Casablanca, but were repulsed with heavy losses by the fire from the warships. All the consulates here are now guarded by machine guns.

The total of the Moorish losses here is estimated at 2,000.

Attacks Twice Repulsed.

Tangier, Aug. 10.—News has been received here that Arab tribesmen, who had gathered from the surrounding country to the number of five or six hundred, swept down upon Gen. Drude's camp outside Casablanca Thursday afternoon. They were driven off with considerable loss. Later they renewed the attack and again were repulsed. The French ships are in splendid condition and their spirits. The warships supported them during this attack by keeping up a steady shell fire on the horsemen.

When the French consul from Casablanca arrived here Friday he received a letter from Muley Amin, the military governor of Casablanca, officially approving the action of the French forces and asking the aid of France in inflicting punishment upon Raisuli.

The latest advices received here do not confirm the reported bombardment of Mazagan. Advices from Mogador, dated August 7, say everything was quiet there then and that no trouble was apprehended unless European complications resulted from the bombardment of Casablanca. Morocco city is quiet.

More About Bombardment.

Further particulars of the bombardment of Casablanca show that when Admiral Philibert's squadron arrived off that port the armored cruisers Condé and Galilee bombarded the outskirts of the city while the Jeanne D'Arc shelled the Arab quarter. So soon as the foreign legion landed the gates were battered down, the soldiers took possession of the ramparts and the streets were cleared by the infantry, with the use of rapid fire guns.

The French warships Condé and Galilee are at Rabat and the Du Chayla is still at Mazagan. Admiral Philibert has issued a proclamation at both places warning the natives that the least act of hostility against Europeans will result in the towns being completely destroyed.

The sacking of Cape Juby occurred July 30.

Preaching a Holy War.

Paris, Aug. 9.—Special dispatches received here from Tangier represent the situation as being more alarming on the coast and in the interior. Cadi Sale, the administrator of customs at Rabat, is said to be openly preaching a holy war among the Mussulmans, as a result of which the French consul has distributed arms to the Europeans.

In addition a fanatical priest named Mechiach, at the head of a horde of followers, is traveling through the Littoral inflaming the anti-foreign sentiment.

Reports from Fez say that the advisers of the sultan are terrified and have not yet informed him of the gravity of the situation.

Up to six o'clock Thursday evening the foreign office here had no confirmation of the reported bombardment of Mazagan.

Miss Eddy Weds Beveridge.

Berlin, Aug. 8.—Miss Katherine Eddy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus N. Eddy, of Chicago, and niece of Mrs. Marshall Field, was married shortly after noon Wednesday to Senator Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana in the American embassy. The religious ceremony was preceded by a civil one.

BONES OF BARNEY FOUND

SKELETON OF STEVE ADAMS ALLEGED VICTIM EXHUMED.

Location Had Been Pointed Out by the Prisoner—Identified by Denver Dentist.

Telluride, Col., Aug. 9.—What is said to be the skeleton of W. J. Barney, the timber man employed on the Smuggler-Union mine who mysteriously disappeared in June, 1901, has been exhumed near the Alta mill, near Gold King basin, 12 miles from town, by Gen. Bullesley Wells, manager of the Smuggler-Union Mining company, and others. According to Mr. Wells' account the body was found in an improvised grave and its location was pointed out by Steve Adams, now in the Idaho penitentiary awaiting trial on the charge of murder, when he was here in June, 1906, in the custody of Wells.

A part of the body or skeleton, including the teeth and that portion by which identification could be most readily established, was brought to town by Gen. Wells.

Barney incurred the ill will of the Smuggler-Union mine after the strike in April, 1901. It was this strike that caused the riots on July 3 of that year. Adams is said to have told Wells that Barney's body was stripped of its clothing, which was buried some distance from his body. Afterward the body was taken up and buried in another place.

While here in 1906 Adams is said to have pointed out the site of the first tree in the darkness of which he claimed to have stood when he fired the fatal charge of buckshot into the back of Manager Collins. He also is said to have told Wells where he threw the rifle after removing it from from the gun.

Denver, Col., Aug. 9.—Dr. Lord, a local dentist, after examining the teeth of the skeleton brought in by Gen. Wells, identified them as belonging to Barney. He had performed certain dental work for Barney and was able to identify the skeleton from this.

It is reported that warrants will be issued for two men who were prominent in the local affairs of the Western Federation of Miners when Barney disappeared. Steve Adams, who confessed to the killing in the county jail, according to general confession, made in Idaho but afterward repudiated, told Gen. Wells, according to the latter's statement, of the manner in which Barney was made away with, and it is upon this recital of details that the warrants are to be sworn to.

WRIT OF ERROR IS GRANTED.

Standard Oil is Permitted to Take Its Appeal.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—Judge Peter S. Grosscup, of the United States circuit court of appeals, Friday afternoon granted to the Standard Oil company of Indiana a writ of error allowing the defense to take its appeal from the judgment of Judge K. M. Landis, who imposed the record-breaking fine of $29,240,000.

Efforts of the defending lawyers, Hunt, Holdom and Merritt Starr, however, to obtain a supersedeas staying the execution of the judgment during the pendency of the case in the higher court without furnishing more than a bond for costs were thwarted.

Greeks Selling Their Lands.

Muskogee, I. T., Aug. 10.—Restrictions on lands in the Creek nation having expired at midnight Thursday night, there was great activity among speculators in securing the lands of the Indians Friday. Both full-bloods and mixed bloods all over the Creek nation were busy disposing of their lands. An attorney inside the statement Friday that by Saturday morning practically every acre of land in the Creek nation, except the home steads, would be deeded to white men.

Mrs. Russell Sage Gives $50,000.

New York, Aug. 9.—Mrs. Russell Sage has given $50,000 for a new building for the Long Island railroad employes branch of the Young Men's Christian association at Long Island City.

WIRE MEN IN MANY CITIES ON STRIKE

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY TEMPORARILY TIED UP IN THE WEST.

Postal's Employes in Chicago Also Abandon — Their Key—Company Will Make Stubborn Fight—Small Expects Early Settlement.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—The strike of telegraph operators, begun Thursday midnight in the Chicago offices of the Western Union company, spread rapidly Friday, tying up the local business of that corporation and practically putting out of service all its transcontinental lines.

At 5:15 o'clock Friday evening about 500 operators of the Postal Telegraph company left their wires and joined the strikers. Only ten employes remained in the main office and the company's 100 branch offices in the city were closed.

All but about a score of the 785 employes of the Western Union in this city quit their keys, and practically the entire forces walked out at Kansas City, Denver, Dallas, Fort Worth, Colorado Springs, Helena, El Paso and Salt Lake.

In New Orleans all the Postal Telegraph operators, numbering about 60, left their wires Friday night because an operator was suspended for refusal to work the Chicago wire. In the Western Union office there an operator was discharged for the same reason, but the union men did not make an issue of it because he was an extra man.

Exchanges Are Crippled.

The effect of the walkout of the operators in Chicago was apparent first on the board of trade and the stock exchange. The Western Union has the exclusive contract for handling the stock quotations between the exchanges of the country, and the failure of the company to summon sufficient loyal employes to handle its business put the brokers in a quandary. The firms which have leased wires, employing their own operators, handed all the information regarding the security markets in eastern cities that was available up to noon.

The Gold and Stock Ticker company, which is affiliated with the Western Union and operated the wires from the New York stock exchange, ceased to send the quotations.

A meeting of the grievance and executive committee of the union was held at one o'clock in the afternoon, when the formal demands on the Western Union company were drawn up by presentation. These include the eight-hour day, a 25 per cent increase in wages and recognition of the union.

What Mr. Small Says.

Oakland, Cal., Aug. 10.—Samuel J. Small, the national president of the Commercial Telegraphers' union, was seen in this city Friday afternoon and submitted to a brief interview.

"The subject," he said, "is too delicate to say much about. Mrs. Nichols is, of course, the storm center of the strike and she and the San Francisco officers of the company are responsible for what has happened. The latter have not lived up to the agreement signed two weeks ago. When an investigation is made some things extremely sensational will come out.

"The strike is spreading. We have advices that the operators in the following cities, in addition to Los Angeles are out: Chicago, Helena, Mont.; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Salt Lake, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Omaha, Kansas, Denver and Butte. These represent about 2,000 operators. Oakland operators will be so out, but we are holding them back.

Expects Early Settlement.

"We expect that the whole trouble will be settled in two or three days. President Clowry of the Western Union Telegraph company will have his face before him in 24 hours and may settle it at once. I cannot say anything about our demands, for everything is in a chaotic condition at present.

"Mr. Stewart of the department of commerce and labor, arrived here today and will look into the San Francisco and Oakland situation. He will probably go into communication with Commissioner Charles P. Neill at Washington and the whole matter will be adjusted quickly, provided Col. Clowry instructs his subordinates to treat the San Francisco and Oakland operators humanely."

Company Will Fight Hard.

New York, Aug. 10.—The Western Union Telegraph company will fight the strike of its operators in the western cities, in the east, or wherever the issue may go' but, it appears to win as it claims to have won in 1883. A strike among the 3,000 operators of Greater New York city is imminent, though the sentiment among the employes is said to be divided.

P. R. Budd, Coal Magnate, Dies.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 9.—P. R. Budd, president of the Budd Coal company, of Cincinnati and president of the A. R. Budd Coal company, of this city, died at the Monongahela house in this city Thursday of cancer. He was born in Cincinnati 60 years ago, and was interested in the coal business practically throughout his business career. He leaves a widow and three sons, A. R. Budd and B. C. Budd, of this city, and C. M. Budd, of Memphis, Tenn.; also one daughter, Mrs. G. E. Reed, of Louisville, Ky.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

How a Veteran Was Saved the Amputation of a Limb.

C. B. Frank Doremus, veteran, of Roosevelt Ave., Indianapolis, Ind., says: "I had been suffering and showing symptoms of kidney trouble from the time I was mustered out of the army, but in all my life I never suffered as I did in 1897. Headaches, dizziness and sleepless nights, nerves, first, and then dropsy. I was weak and helpless, having run down from 190 to 125 pounds. I was having terrible pain in the kidneys, and the secretions passed almost involuntarily. My left leg swelled until it was 24 inches around, and the doctor tapped it night and morning until I could no longer stand it, and then he advised amputation. I refused, and began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The swelling subsided gradually, the urine became natural and all my pains and aches disappeared. I have been well now for nine years since using Doan's Kidney Pills."

AS THE BOY UNDERSTOOD.

Probably to His Mind Conflict of Authority Was Vital.

In one of the Atlantic Sunday schools recently the lesson for the day had to do with Mammon and the corrupting influences of great riches.

Toward the close of the exercises, sny's Harper's Magazine, the superintendent called upon the infant class to repeat the golden text, which had special reference to man's inability to serve his Creator and the money god at one and the same time. The class failed to respond as it should, when the superintendent, noticing his own young boy pal in the ranks, who had that very morning been drilled thoroughly on the text, called to him. The response was immediate, though a slight departure from the original, for in a voice that was distinctly heard in all parts of the room there came the following modification:

"Ye cannot serve God and mammal"

Fell into Bad Company.

A canny Scot was brought before a London magistrate on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. "What have you to say for yourself, sir?" demanded the magistrate. "You look like a respectable man, and ought to be ashamed to stand there."

"I am verra sorry, sir, but I cam' up in bad company the nicht Glasgow," humbly replied the prisoner.

"What sort of company?"

"A lot of teetotalers!" was the startling reply.

"Do you mean to say teetotalers are bad company?" thundered the magistrate. "I think they are the best of company for such as you."

"Beggin' yer pardon, sir," answered the prisoner, "ye're wrong; for I had a bottle of whusky an' I had to drink it all myself!"

Depends on the Dogs.

Asa Goddard, of the American Automobile association, was reconning in Worcester some of his touring adventures.

"One summer morning," he said, "the approach of a great flock of sheep by the roadside to pull off a narrow country road. I halted my car, and watched with interest the passage of the sheep, the intelligent dogs and the shepherd.

"I had a short talk with the shepherd about his odd and difficult trade.

"'Look here,' I said, 'what do you do, driving sheep like this on narrow road, when you need another flock coming in the opposite direction?'

"'Well,' said the shepherd, 'ye just drive sheep, both of 'em, and the one that has the best dogs gets the most sheep.'"

High-Priced Meat

may be a

Blessing

If it gives one the chance to know the tremendous value of a complete change of diet.

Try this for breakfast:

A Little Fruit

A dish of Grape-Nuts and Cream

A Soft-Boiled Egg

Some Nice, Crisp Toast

Cup of Well-made

Postum Food Coffee

That's all, and you feel comfortable and well-fed until lunch.

THEN REPEAT.

And at night have a liberal meal and vegetable dinner; with a Grape-Nuts pudding for dessert.

Such a diet will make a change in your health and strength worth trial.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

County Exhibits.

Hamline—Fourteen county exhibits are to be made at the coming Minnesota state fair. This is the largest number ever made at any Minnesota fair—a fact which shows the continual growth of the fair and the interest felt among the various counties of the state. The large exhibit was reported to the board of managers of the fair yesterday by J. M. Underwood, superintendent of the agricultural and horticultural divisions of the fair.

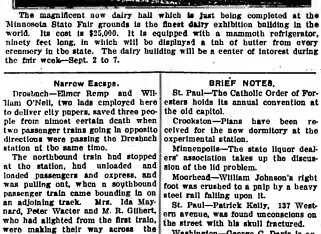
As the new lighting system will give abundant light, this as well as all other parts of the grounds will be well illuminated at night. It is in this part of the grounds that the great display will have its stopping place and from which it will rise in its daily flights.

The board has authorized the purchase of wheeled chairs for use during the fair. These will be for rent and with men to push them will doubtless prove a popular way of seeing the fair.

Another innovation will be named streets and signs at all points directing the visitor to this and that building in the vicinity. The board decided to again have a bureau of information, and made plans for the postoffice, which has been maintained for some years during the fair. Last year the postoffice handled over 15,000 pieces of mail and issued nearly $1,000 worth of money orders.

Drowned.

International Falls.—Word has been received here that Burt Wesley and Maude Wheeler were drowned at Rainy Lake City on Sunday.



They were among a party of pleasure seekers who were spending the day at that place. A boy who witnessed the drowning says the young people were engaged in a scuffle on the dock and fell in. The bodies were recovered and both were buried together.

While the drug carrying the caskets was en route to the burying place it became mired in a swamp, and it was necessary to hitch on an extra team to get it out.

His Swindled.

Le Sueur—John B. Sturtevant of Minneapolis was held to the grand jury here yesterday on preliminary examination before Judge Borer on a charge of having swindled Melvin P. Curtis, landlord of the Park hotel, to the extent of $100 by fraudulently inducing Curtis to sign a promissory note for that amount under the impression that it was a receipt for some Cuban land company stock. The bail was fixed at $300 and Sturtevant, being unable to find bondsmen, was taken to jail. The defendant introduced no testimony on the examination.

New Dairy Hall, Minnesota State Fair.

The magnificent new dairy hall which is just being completed at the Minnesota State Fair grounds is the finest dairy exhibition building in the world. Its cost is $25,000. It is equipped with a mammoth refrigerator, ninety feet long, in which will be displayed a milk from every creamery in the state. The dairy building will be a center of interest during the fair week—Sept. 2 to 7.

Narrow Escape.

Droubach—Elmer Remp and William O'Neil, two lads employed here to deliver city papers, saved three people from almost certain death when two passenger trains going in opposite directions were passing the Droubach station at the same time.

The northbound train had stopped at the station, had unloaded and loaded passengers and express, and was pulling out, when a southbound passenger train came bounding in on an adjoining track. Mrs. Ida Maynard, Peter Vacter and M. R. Gilbert, who had alighted from the first train, were making their way across the track toward the station platform and did not notice the engine bearing down upon them.

The two boys, who had their arms filled with bundles of papers, saw the danger simultaneously, and dropping their papers rushed to the careless passengers and pushed them from the tracks just in time to save them from being hit by the locomotive. Neither of the nimble young fellows were injured.

Will Move the Town.

Sparta—If the plans of the steel corporation meet with the co-operation of citizens, the novel spectacle of moving a town in order to extract the iron ore underlying it will be presented here.

Representatives of the corporation have asked Town Clerk D. M. Monser to call a meeting of citizens for the consideration of the improved proposition of moving the townsite to a point about a mile and a half northeast of the present location, where drilling probably will show there is no underlying ore body to necessitate further move of the village in case it is located there.

The matter has caused considerable excitement among the citizens and opinions of all sorts are being expressed.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. James—There is a move on foot to sell the Park hotel property in this city to the Lutheran hospital association for a hospital.

St. Peter—Professor J. F. Wojta, for four years in charge of the agricultural department at Gustavus Adolphus college, has forwarded his resignation to the board of trustees.

Minneapolis—Red Men of Minnesota may bar saloonmen from membership.

Hamline—The state fair board is making plans for the biggest fair on record.

Royalton—Burglars entered the saloon of James Boyd, rifled the till and took a quantity of cigars, a drink and Mr. Boyd's coat.

Mankato—Mayor J. W. Andrews issued a proclamation directing that on and after tonight the saloons in this city shall be closed at 11 o'clock, following the state law, instead of the city ordinance.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—The Catholic Order of Foresters holds its annual convention at the old capitol.

Crookston—Plans have been received for the new dormitory at the experimental station.

Minneapolis—The state liquor dealers' association takes up the discussion of the id problem.

Moorhead—William Johnson's right hand was crushed to a pulp by a heavy steel rail falling on it.

St. Paul—Patrick Kelly, 137 Western avenue, was found unconscious on the street with his skull fractured.

Washington—George C. Davis is appointed postmaster at Ponemah, Beltrami county, vice J. G. Morrison, jr., resigned.

Minneapolis—With elaborate ceremonies and addressed by Archbishop Ireland, Mayor Haynes, and others, ground was formally broken for the new Catholic high school at Sibley and Tenth street and Hennepin avenue.

St. Peter—Keeping the lid on Corinne Station and getting the Le Sueur county authorities no end of trouble, Carolino is an abandoned station on the Omaha, midway between this city and Mankato, and a short time ago Richard Dale and Samuel Gaffer opened a saloon that catered to trade from both cities.

West Concord—J. F. McCarthy was the winner in the cheese scoring contest here. This is the third of a series of six contests conducted this summer by the state dairy and food commission. The cheese scoring contest is held in connection with the butter contest, which has not been completed.

New Ulm—Mayor Charles Silverson has informed the Protestant ministerial unity that he will not apply the "lid" unless they secure a petition and have it liberally signed by the citizens. He believes there is no sentiment worthy of note clamoring for the enforcement of this particular law.

Minneapolis—A staff of readers, under the supervision of the state department of public instruction, began reading teachers' examination papers from all the counties of the state at the new capitol. The papers cover all examinations taken for first, second and third grade certificates, and the work covers a period of about ten days.

Minneapolis—Girls' screams for help caused the flight of burglars who had entered the residence of Captain F. E. MacLean, 292 Armidel street, shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday morning.

White Bear—Ross Clarke, for many years a resident of St. Paul and prominent in the business and political life of that city, was found dead yesterday in his summer home here.

White Earth—C. G. Sturtevant of Detroit, Minn., has been awarded a contract to plot out the townsite of White Earth, as provided by the last session of congress.

STANDARD OIL DOWN TO 466.

Stock Reaches the Lowest Quotation in Many Years.

New York, Aug. 10.—Several stocks quoted in New York fell to new low record levels Friday. Notable among them was Standard Oil, which at one time during the day reached 466, the lowest point touched in many years. A little later the stock was offered at 475 with no bidders.

Several years ago Standard Oil sold above $800 per share, and Friday's price indicates a shrinkage in value computed on the total capital stock of more than $300,000,000.

ATHLETE STATESMAN.

FORMER FOOTBALL COACH IN CHARGE OF A DEPARTMENT.

George W. Woodruff, Who Made a National Reputation for Penn Eleven, Temporarily Appointed to Secretary Garfield's Place.

Washington.—Following his established preference for athletic men, President Roosevelt has made a former football coach secretary of the interior. Of course, it is only a temporary appointment that goes to George W. Woodruff, former developer of Penn and Chicago Indian elevens, for Secretary Garfield still has his job.

But while Mr. Garfield is away on his vacation the inventor of that piece of football strategy known as guards-back will have full authority in the department.

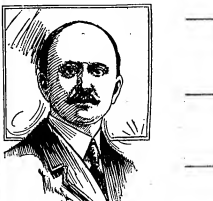
Mr. Woodruff is one of the five assistants to the attorney general, and he is connected with the department of justice, though his assignment is to give advice to the department of the interior in matters where legal points are raised.

The acting secretary of the interior is about the same age as the president, and was at Yale at the same time Mr. Roosevelt was a student at Harvard. But Mr. Woodruff as a college man had a career that pulled Mr. Roosevelt's. He was an exceptional athlete. His was the unusual record of having been for his entire four years a member of the football eleven, the track and field teams and the varsity crew. His captained the crew in 1895.

After finishing his classical course at Yale Mr. Woodruff went to the University of Pennsylvania to study law, and it was here that he made his reputation as one of the foremost football tacticians of his day.

Woodruff had a career of success for five years at Penn, then a time came when the quality of candidates fell off, and he no longer had men who could carry his ideas into effect. The result was a long succession of defeats which at last passed opposition to the former idolized coach.

As a culmination of the difficulties, Mr. Woodruff resigned and announced that he would quit coaching. First he went to Chicago to take a place with the scrapping goods house of A. G. Spalding, but the desire to coach was strong within the famous tactician and after a short time he came back to the east and signed to handle the Carlisle Indian eleven.



It was expected that with the contract he would carry out his ideas, Woodruff would invent all kinds of tricks. The eleven did play good football, but not enough better than in preceding seasons to make Woodruff want the job another year.

So he made a final renunciation of football and turned his attention to his neglected profession.

Mr. Woodruff had been admitted to practice in the United States courts, all the way up to the supreme court, while he was still coaching the Pennsylvania eleven, but he was so busy with football that he gave little serious attention to getting clients.

But when he got to few in serious earnest he found out that he was a good lawyer, and others quickly made the same discovery.

A fighter was wanted in the forest service as a law officer, and Mr. Woodruff got the appointment, becoming chief aid to Gifford Pinchot, the government forester. He did yeomen service in organizing the national forest reserve policy, and his industry and ability especially commended itself to the president, who soon discovered that the energetic, restless, planning bustling attorney was a man of much his own mold.

George W. Woodruff.

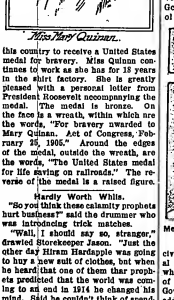
During his stay with the forest bureau Mr. Woodruff made a special study of the public land laws and gained a reputation as Washington's foremost expert on this subject.



Secretary Garfield, when he went to the interior department, had land thieves to deal with, and he needed a man who would have both the courage and the knowledge to fight them. He decided that the former star football coach would be the man to second his crusade, and he had Mr. Woodruff appointed to the place in the attorney generals force that would make him available as adviser to the department of the interior.

Mr. Woodruff is not unlike the president in appearance. He wears spectacles, while Mr. Roosevelt runs to eyeglasses, but the shade of the faces, with the prominent teeth, the mustache and the expression of restless energy are not unlike.

HERO MEDAL FOR WOMAN.

Miss Quinan, of Middletown, N. Y., Recognized for Bravery.

Middletown, N. Y.—Miss Mary Quinan, of this city, is the first woman in this country to receive a United States medal for bravery. Miss Quinan continues to work as she has for 18 years in the skirt factory. She is greatly pleased with a personal letter from President Roosevelt accompanying the medal. The medal is bronze, and on the face is a wreath, within which are the words, "For bravery awarded to Mary Quinan. Act of Congress, February 25, 1905." Around the edges of the medal, outside the wreath, are the words, "The United States medal for life saving on railroads." The reverse of the medal is a raised figure.

Miss Mary Quinan.

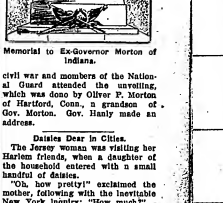
Hardly Worth While.

"So you think these calamity prophets hurt business?" said the drummer who was introducing trick matches.

"Well, I should say so, stranger," drawled Storekeeper Jason. "Just the other day Hiram Hardapple was going to buy a new suit of clothes, but when he heard that one of them that prophets predicted that the world was coming to an end in 1914 he changed his mind. Said he couldn't think of spending money for a suit of clothes if he couldn't wear it over seven years, so he reckoned he'd have to make the old suit do."



Graft in the Millions.

The Philadelphia North American has summarized the results of the three months' inquiry of the committee which has been investigating the construction and furnishing of the Pennsylvania state capitol. It has been shown that of the $13,000,000 expended, at least $5,000,000 was wasted or stolen.

HONOR INDIANA WAR GOVERNOR.

Monument Erected in Indianapolis to Oliver P. Morton.

Indianapolis.—The Oliver P. Morton monument, which was unveiled the other day, comprises a figure of the war governor in bronze, 12 feet high, standing on a base of granite 18 feet in height, and occupies a site in front of the east entrance to the state capitol. Bronze figures of a cavalryman and infantryman stand on each side of the base of the war governor. In front is an eschutcheon composed of a wreath and crossed flags. Mrs. Morton, a niece of the venerated Indianian, says that the body, pose and facial expression are the exact counterpart of Governor Morton. Grand Army men secured from the legislature an appropriation of $35,000 for the monument, and the remainder was made up by private subscription. Vice President Fairbanks, Gov. Hanly, Gen. R. B. Brown, commander-in-chief of the G. A. R.; 3,000 veterans of the civil war and members of the National Guard attended the unveiling, which was done by Oliver P. Morton of Hartford, Conn., a grandson of Gov. Morton. Gov. Hanly made an address.

Daisies Dear in Cities.

The Jersey woman was visiting her Harlem friends, when a daughter of the household entered with a small handful of daisies.

"Oh, how pretty!" exclaimed the mother, following with the inevitable New York inquiry: "How much?"

"Twenty-five cents," replied the girl.

"Merciful heavens!" exclaimed the Jersey woman. "There's a whole field of them back of my house I never thing of picking."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Taft presidential boom seems to be gaining ground in the middle west.

Look out for an advance in the price of oil, John. D. Rockfeller's Standard oil trust got a heavy fine last week.

The Western Federation of labor found it rather poor picking in Minnesota. To much republican prosperity is the reason, with no time to loose kicking.

Though the Tobacco Trust may not be a good one, as its managers insist, it is probably as good as some of the product it puts out in the shape of cigarettes and stogies.

We understand that John D. Rockefeller is a Socialist. We do not know that this is correct, but he certainly produces some strong arguments in favor of "whacking up."

The corn crop in the Valley promises to be better than ever before, and the acreage is said to be double that of last year. A sample of what the Valley can do in this line is shown on the O'Neil farm near Crookston, where the corn stands nine feet high, the ears are all in the silk and will easily ripen before there is danger of frost.—Thief River Falls News.

Our Bumper Crops.

With the present outlook, in this part of Red Lake county, the man that took a homestead on the Eleven towns and pitched in to make his home and fortune here is going to begin to reap his reward, this year, when he reaps his grain.

We have always lived in a small grain producing country, in Iowa and Minnesota, but it see ns to us that we were never in a country where the prospects for farming and stock raising was better than they are here.

The land is rather hard to be opened up and prepared for crops, but those that had faith to stay and try will now begin to receive payment for their labor, as they are now quite sure to have a crop that has not been equaled in northern Minnesota since the year of 1895, and with the prospect of a big price and a sure way to get their grain to market, the 11 towns homesteader can be said to be in a hopeful and a prosperous condition.

Youthful Financier.

This really happened in New York the other day:

Displeased Parent—Molly, I find you have been buying three pairs of gloves without my permission. Why did you do so? Miss Molly (meekly)—Why, daddy, I was obliged to have some gloves; I hadn't a pair in wear! Displeased Parent—It was wrong of you to buy the gloves without the permission either of your mamma or myself. Miss Molly—Well, never mind, daddy, dear; they won't cost anything, for I had them charged.—New York Post.

How Inconsiderate!

"Young Ruggles did a very thought less thing."

"What was that?"

"He wrote a poem in honor of a certain young woman who had just completed her twenty-first birthday and published it in the college paper."

"Wasn't it a good poem?"

"Very good."

"What's the critichism then?"

"Why, everybody who wants to find out can look back any time and discover how old the young woman is."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Thief River Falls Fair Was O. K.

The sixth annual fair of the Agricultural Society of Red Lake county held at Thief River Falls last week was certainly a hummer, and had a large attendeance from both outside and inside the county.

The lateness of the season was somewhat of a handicap to the agricultural display but a walk throu. that department would convince the most skeptical that the soil of Red Lake County was well adapted to the growing of all kinds of grain and vegetables.

The stock on exhibition made a very good display and shows that our farmers are begining to take an active interest in divers ified farming. The races were very interesting and were not in the mudo up class which is so tiresom to the beholder, but was on the principal of let the best horse win.

The Cash Carnival Company contributed some good clean intertainments both at the fair grounds and down town, to help to interest the crowds when the fair was not in operation.

The progressiveness of the people of Thief River Falls and the county in general are highly commendable and that their efforts in building up such a splendid fair have been a success is a condition that will be viewed with genuine satisfaction by every resident of Red Lake County.

There was quite a large number of people in attendence from Crookston and other parts of Polk county, and nercly all the county officials came up from Red Lake Falls to attend one day at least.

Old Fashioned Oratory.

"We don't have no sich forensic oratory as we used to have," said the old settler. "Lawyers nowadays don't orate. They only just talk.

"The old hill K. Simmons of Enn Clair. If hill was defendin' a lowly chicken thief he'd speak with the vigour of magik. I'll never forgit the peroration of his impassioned philippic in the Clay hill case about the poisoned cel. It runs like this here."

The little, thin old man rose, reared back in a defiant attitude and shouted in the cracked treble of age:

"Gentle upon the couch of repose lean liberty as I do, covered with the blanket of constitutional panoply as I am and protected by the negis of American equality as I feel myself to be, I despise the lizzily of the professional lawyer who has just sat down and defy his attempt to penetrate with puny sling the liberatices of me impervious coverin'."—New York Press.

The Log Driver.

The life of a river log driver is a life that seems to get hold of one after a year or two. You are generally wet through for twelve hours of the day twenty-four. Ten of you sleep in a 12 by 15 foot shanty; you live on fried everything, "slush," doughnuts and stewed tea. You go to bed at 10 and get up at 3. You are exceedingly cursed and never praised by the foreman. Your life is in danger more or less all day long, and you never get more than $25 a month for a work that is worth $100. "Then why stick at it?" you say, and all I can answer is, "Just give it a fair trial for a year, and then you'll know."—Wide World Magazine.

A Hard Drinking Beak.

Among the sones of Robert Burns is one upon a whistle used by a dane who visited England in the reitime of Anne of Denmark. This whistle was placed on the table at the beginning of a drinking bout, which was won by whoever was last able to blow it. The Dane conquered all comers, says the story, until sir Robert Lawrie of Maxwelton, "after three days and three nights hard contest, left the Scandinavian under the table."

Clever Girl.

Mother—What's that I hear? Frank actually kissed you at the railway station? And what did you do, pray? Daughter—Well, so as to make everybody think he was a relative and so prevent a scandal I kissed him too.—Berlin Journal.

Fatal Politeness.

First Tramp—After all, it pays to be polite, partner. Second Tramp—Not always. The other day I was actin' dead and dumb when a man gave me a sixpence. I says, "Thank you, sir," and he had me arrested.—London Express.

Not a Spendthrift.

Ambious Mother—I hope you are not thinking of marrying young Clarkson. He spends every cent he earns, Professor—Oh, well, he doesn't earn very much.—Chicago News.

Pessimism and a good dinner cannot both be in one man.—Exchange.

Heart Protectors.

Many persons are puzzled to know why policemen wear their badges so low on their coats instead of on the flap made for that purpose. As a matter of fact the badge or star, as he calls it, of many a policeman is right next to his heart. Some of the officers can thank their "stars" for being alive. This little metal shield has defeated the bullet of burglar or highwayman, and at times, too, has stopped the knife thrust of would be assassins. During the last twenty or thirty years there are many cases on record showing that the little badge has taken a life saver. Even bullets fired at close range, as a rule, cannot penetrate the shield. That's why a lieutenant always feels safer in keeping the star at a vital spot. When off duty some policemen wear their stars on their coats, but always directly over the heart. They are so accustomed to the little protector that they feel uneasy without it.—Philadelphia Record.

Gabri's Wife Dog.

So veracious a man as Sir Walter Scott had a wise dog, a bull terrier. Said the novelist once: "I taught him to understand a great many words, to launch that I am positive that the communication between the canine species and ourselves might be greatly balanced. Camp once bit the bailiff who was bringing bread to the family. I beat him and explained the enormity of his offence, after which, to the last moments of his life, he never heard the least allusion to the story in whatever tone of voice it was mentioned without getting up and retiring to the darkest corner of the room, with great appearance of distress. Then if you said the baker was well paid or the baker was not hurt, after all," Camp came forth from his hiding place, capered and barked and re joiced."

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Too High For the Barber.

"I heard something new in the barbering business this morning," said the gray headed man. "I am occupying a room on the top floor of a skyscraping apartment hotel. This morning I sent for a barber to come up and shave me. He came, but when he saw to what an ... he had ascended he looked ...

"Would it inconvenience you to come down to the regular barber shop?' he asked.

"I suppose that it would not particularly put me out, but that I would like to know the reason for his request.

"The fact is," he said, 'I never like to shave anybody at this distance above the ground. No barber likes to. We seem to be particularly sensitive to height. It makes us nervous. Most barbers will not consider a job above a certain number of feet in the air. Of course if you insist I will shave you here, but you would probably get a better shave ten floors below this one.'

"Well, just out of natural cussedness I refused to humor the ... whim. As a consequence he ... my throat. Whether he did it through nervousness, as he claimed, or pure cussedness he ... not. I don't know. Whatever it was, that is a peculiarity of barbers that I'd like to have explained."—New York Sun.

The Bat.

Nearly all bats have the faculty of hibernating. Their hibernation, however, is not perfect—that is to say, that when the warm days occur in the middle of winter they wake up, together with the insects which are their food. Still theirs is a true hibernation trance, differing from sleep, with very low rate of pulse, heart action and respiration. Probably they would endure immersion in water for an hour or two without drowning, as other hibernators have been found to do.

A Passing from Poverty

By MRS. PRESTON HOWARD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Ooo bitter day in February Josie Evans climbed the steps of a broad stone mansion and pulled the bell with such weak, cramped fingers it was little wonder it failed to sound, and she was left to stand there in sa icy wind, that seemed cruelly scorching for her young heart, as it swept through the thin, sadly-worn garments.

For Josie, never rich, was now most poor! Since the day after Christmas, when she had been discharged from the large store, where she was selling holiday cards, no work had come. Her little pile of money had sunk so low she had had nothing but bread to eat for two days; and last night when Miss Ellis, the dressmaker, came into the cold, furnished room, where she and her roommate sat bundled up in shawls and hoods, and told her of this little job of work, it seemed almost as if an angel had appeared!

But now with the bleak air and the waiting, her courage sank.

"Oh," she cried, "what if this lady will not let me work on her beautiful dress? What shall I do! What shall I do!"

And then, in desperation, she seized the bell with both hands and tugged with oil her strength.

A moment later a trim colored man opened the door.

What joy to pass from the gloom and wintry blast outside into the wide vestibule; its air like summer, the light from rich stained glass falling on huge candelabra, marble tiles and growing palms!

As the servant took the note to his mistress above, Josie, feeling almost as if she owed the elegant furniture an apology for her shabby clothes, sank on a soft cushioned seat and drank in the warm atmosphere, the beauty of the room and the sweet fragrance of flowers.

A soft rustle of silken garments, and a little brunette lady stood near who began to speak briskly, then broke off abruptly with a little cry; and how it happened neither could tell, but in a moment they were folded in each other's arms sobbing on each other's shoulders.

She Opened It and Two Crisp Ve Fell Out.

This little brunette recover d voice and composure first.

"To think I have found you at last," she cried. "You wicked, wicked Josie, to disappear away from me like that! Come right up into my room and have some ecko and fruit to celebrate. Don't you remember when anything happened in school we always rushed I, used to cnt—against the rules—that dear old seminary!"

"But the lady of the house!" Josie managed at laugth to say, partly conquering her sobs; "and tha work on her dress!"

The brunette gave a gay leugh and a sweeping courtesy.

"I am the lady of the house, Mrs. Fantos, at your service; never mind the old dress; we'll work on it together. Comn along!"

And she quickly drew Josie up stairs and into a charming bondoir; gently pushed her into a low easy-chair placing lavitingly before the logs blazing in the handsome fireplace; pulled off her wraps and herded about arranging the regular schoolgirl feast brought in by the maid servant.

"Now," said the little lady, when they had begun to eat together, "I remember you lived in some village away up in the New England hills, till you'd saved up some money you'd earned, and put that with it, and two year father had left you, and took it all and came to the boarding school where I was, to give yourself a year's schooling.

"I know all that because you told me when we roomed together, and used to lie awake after hours to talk—quite against the rules!

"Then, just before commencement, I'd been off to the next town with one of the teachers to buy things, and when I came back to the school there was no you, only a telegram. That said 'your mother very ill. Come at once!'

"And now, you poor, dear child, if your tongue isn't quite frozen this dreadful day, do tell me the rest!"

Then Josie, strengthened by the generous fare, cheered and warmed, found voice to tell how her mother lay for tweea life and death for six weeks, then passed away. How her own strength, exhausted by long watching, failed, and she too was upon a sick bed for a time; and when she rose again and tried to send word to her friend, could not find the address, and had sent the letter to the seminary, asking them to forward.

"And it was forward, forward for six months, my dear! But you haven't heard! That lawsuit I used to harp on so was decided in our favor; so I took the $20,000 and determined I'd go to Europe. There was a party made up, and I started off on a three days' notice. And that unfortunate letter of yours, my dear," she said, elevating her dimpled hands and raising her black brows, "went from Rio to Backabeba, or Borsheba, whichever it is! and I read it at last one day away down in lovely, beautiful Italy. I am a fearful correspondent, I know; but I sat down that minute and wrote to you—"

"Ah," said Josie, "but I wasn't there then."

And she explained how, when funeral expenses were paid for and doctors' bills, there was almost nothing left, save enough she sold the little brown house. And how they had told her there was work for everyone in great New York, and so—"

"Oh, dear, dear, dear!" exclaimed Mrs. Fanton, breaking in. "Don't tell me any more! You've had a dreadful time! But I have you fast now; and shan't lose you again; not if Carris Fanton knows it. Now, let's look at the dress."

That night about nine o'clock, Josie rolled home in her friend's luxurious carriage, accompanied by a small trunk.

And no can carry the things easier so," Carris had said.

And when Josie, in her own room, knelt down and raised the lid, there was a note lying on top. She opened it, and two crisp Ve fell out.

"If you don't take this from an old friend and chum, when she has such loads ood you so little," ran the note, "I never, Josie Evans, will forgive you to this wide, wide world! But you're so 'terrible proud' I sha'n't dare offer you more, I suppose; so, you'll find a pile of work in the trunk that you can do (at my prices), either at your room or in mine. And underneath there are some dresses, and feathers, and things I don't know what to do with, and it will be charity if you can take them off the hands of, overlooxingly yours,

"CARRIE."

Then the teors, so bravely kept back by Josie these lost hard weeks, come with a rush at tais touch of a kindly hand.

Ooe morning, when Josie was sitting in her little room, cold, thank Heaven! no longer, but warmed and sunny, her daft fingers putting the last flying stitches in the pile of work Carrie had given her, that little body dashed in with her usual impetuosity, wrapped in rich valrets and furs, and dropped panting into a stair, exclaiming half breathlessly:

"You must just fling on your things and tumble the work up anyhow and come in the carriage to my house and finish it! Frank's off on a horrid business trip for six weeks. I can't stay alone. I'd die! So you must take pity on mo and come along." And with this she whisked away.

The next evening as Josie was arranging her pretty, light brown hair before the mirror in Carris's "blue room," the mistress of the mansion came hastily in, her hands full of white lace and flowers, her sparkling face lighted up with smiles, exclaiming:

"Now, you must wear this lace fichu, so; over this silk and cashmere. How did you ever manage to make such a stylish dress out of tha rags I gave you! A fechire, it's regular Fifth Avenue! And you must put this big bunch of roses so. I want you to look your very prettiest to-night, because Frank's cousin, Elmer Hay, is to dina here to-night. He's in my importing house, junior partner; and Frank says he's a royal good fellow if there ever was one; so look your prettiest."

And truly, Josie Evans, entering the brightly lighted reception room a half hour later, was a fair picture to look upon; and the handsome gentleman advancing toward her and her friend seemed to think so.

That pleasant evening was the precursor of many; of moonlight sleigh rides, of theater and opera, in which Elmer Hay was their almost constant companion.

And one six weeks sped all too swiftly away. Then one morning Elmer Hay waved them good-by from the deck of an outward-bound Cunarder.

And Josie? Josie then found something missing. Her days were a hundred work, with which Carris kept her supplied, the easier life, the pleasant Sundays passed at Carris's elegant home and the new friends she met there, failed to bring back.

The three months later, when Carris had coaxed her to spend another six weeks at her beautiful country house, and Elmer Hay bent and whispered something in the moonlight by the river side, it came back with a brightness that seemed to flood life with a softened glory, out of which shone the promise of happy years and a loving, manly heart to beat with hers.

FINALLY ROUSED UP UNCLE.

How a Crowd of Villagers Stirred the Saga of the Cracker Barrel.

There was the usual crowd of villagers sitting on the postoffice steps waiting for the mail to be distributed, and among them was Uncle John. He had joined the sitters without saying a word, and at the end of fifteen minutes one of the men winked at the crowd and said:

"Well, Uncle John, have you heard about the big earthquake in Vermont, with 10,000 people killed?"

Uncle John looked at him in a weary way and shook his head.

And the cyclone in Connecticut yesterday and 500 houses blowndown?" continued the man.

Uncle John yawned and was not the least interested.

"The Ohio river rose 200 feet of a sudden the other day and carried the city of Cincinnati down stream. Tens of thousands of people lost their lives. Any of your relatives down there, Uncle John?"

The old man slowly shook his head and reached down to pick up a silver and pick his teeth with it.

"And the whole state of Pennsylvania is caving in," said the joker, "and by-to-morrow there will be a great lake where 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 people have lived."

Uncle John took the news without a word. In fact, he yawned and stretched over it.

"By thunder, but there goes a rat under that pile of lumber across the street," exclaimed the joker as he rose up. "Say, you fellers—"

But he got no further. Uncle John was across the street and had a club in his hand, and within the next ten minutes he had done a half day's work toning down the pile to get at the rat. He had been aroused at last.—Kansas City Journal.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT IT.

Wife's Sneering Comment Met with Sharp Answer.

Galett Burgess at the recent dinner of the American Bookbinders' association of New York said: "I once knew a San Francisco who married a girl for money. She was not a pretty girl, and as time passed and love cooled, she developed e rather tart tongue.

"One day her husband bought with his quarter's allowance a 20-horsepower automobile. He took the car home sayly and brought his wife out to the front door to look at it. She gave one sneering glance, and then said:

"'It's very fine, but if it hadn't been for my money, it wouldn't be here.'

"'Well, Manila,' said the husband, quickly, 'if it hadn't been for your money you wouldn't be here yourself.'"

USED BY THE DOCTORS.

Ninety Per Cent of the Drugs Prescribed Are Patent Medicines.

In spite the opposition of physicians, especially of those whose experience has been neither far reaching nor profitable, to "patent" medicines, ninety per cent of all drugs that physicians use are put up and compounded by manufacturing concerns,—are, in fact, "patent" medicines just as much as if they were advertised in the newspapers.

The average doctor knows little or nothing of pharmacy and is, therefore, glad to depend on the very medicines which in public he condemns, just as he is obliged in many cases to depend on the diagnosis of the patient himself, even while he secretly scrylas what he calls "self-diagnosis." How rapid has been the growth of the professional use of "patent" or "proprietary" medicines is shown in an article written for the Journal of the American Medical Association of September 29, 1906, by A. Leech, M. D., Ll. D. He relates that 50,000 prescriptions, compounded in several drug stores were carefully examined. From 1850 to 1870 no prescription was found for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines. In 1874 but one prescription in 1,500 called for ready-to-use remedies. Between 1875 and 1880 the number calling for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines equalled two per cent of the total. This increased to 5 per cent in the period between 1880 and 1890. In 1895 it was 12 per cent. In 1898 it was 16 per cent, and in 1902-1903 was from 30 to 35 per cent.

Dr. Jacobi says that in a large store he was assured that 70 per cent of the prescriptions were for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines, and this probably is approximately the correct proportion at the present time. From this it would seem that if the "patent" and "proprietary" medicines are good enough for physicians to prescribe, seven cases out of ten they are good enough for family use in cases of necessity and where the symptoms are well known and as easily understood by the people as by the doctors.

Always the Politeness.

A Germantown woman was not long ago watching a workman as he put up new window fixtures in her house. "Don't you think that you have placed those fixtures too high?" asked she, having reference to the curtain rolls last put in place. The workman, a stolid German, made no reply, but continued to adjust the fixtures. "Didn't you hear my question?" demanded the lady of the house. "How dare you be so rude?" Whereupon the German gulped convulsively, and then replied in the gemliest of voices: "I haf my mouth full of schrews, und I could not speask till I swallow some!"—Harper's Weekly.

Dressing the Hair

No matter how light her clothes, no girl or woman can feel comfortable on a hot day with a heavy pompadour adorning the front and a heavier coil the back of her head. Without, then, considering the philosophical effect of chsage upon her mentality, let her resolve to-day to adopt for the next few months a cooler mode of hairdressing then she now affects.

Our lower illustration exemplifies what to perhaps the most popular of these styles, as it is adapted to many different types, is cool, pretty and far more becoming than a pompadour. It is constructed in follows:

First, after brushing and combing the heir thoroughly, gather it all up with the comb so that it is waved loosely front and back, holding it in the left hand with a long lock of heir at the top. Then insert a pompadour comb, slightly curved so as to raise the hair, and then coil or twist the hair forward and fasten with hairpins. This will leave a smaller piece of hair still hanging. Bring this through the coil and around so that it comes out underneath in front, and let it hang down. After fastening the coil more tightly, roll this last piece upward on the two front fingers, beginning at the bottom and twisting toward the head. This will end in a puff slightly smaller than the one behind it. Fasten this at the ends, pull out loosely, insert the back comb, and the coiffure is complete, unless you wish to add a bow of ribbon or velvet on the right side, or perhaps to secure the waved side hair better with light side combs.

Suited to one with heavy hair is the truly classic effect shown in the upper illustration. It is easy since the hair is simply parted deeply, puffed at the sides, made into a "bun" or twisted coil at the back, and secured with pins and three or perhaps four combs. It also looks well with an oval face.

LINGERIE COSTUME A TRIUMPH.

Parisian Confection Greatly Admired by New Yorkers.

A very beautiful lingerie costume recognized at the races a few doys ago as the bridal gown of one of the season's smart brides is of sheer-cut white French mull with Irish crochet appliques and the finest of French hand-work embroidery medallions, says a New York correspondent. Tha creation is the product of a Parisian atelier, a fact apparent in every line and seam of the gowa. It is a princess model built over c carefully boned foundation of white taffeta, the skirt with its panelling of lace and embroidery simulating a princess girdle, above which the side fronts hang loose, these fronts mode entirely of lace and medallions and edged with the lace scallops. The bottom of the skirt is a series of tucked ruffles edged with lace, broken up by the insertion of large embroidered medallions surrounded with Irish crochet. A novel touch of color shows itself in the form of palest blue Louisine silk, folded surplice-wise across the bustline nader the jacket fronts, thus describing the popular empire mode. This same line is followed in the sleeves, small puffs of the material imbroidery medallions, the lower one showing a touch of the blue at the elbow. The hat worn with this costume was of natural straw, drooping, with high crown and abbreviated front brim, the crown banded with pale blue velvet and a bit of the lingerie embroidery. A little to the left of the center front the brim was tucked up close against the crown, supporting held in place by a single pink rose at the base of a pale ostrich feather. Long loops of blue velvet ribbon covered the hair in the back and the under brim was piped with blue velvet.

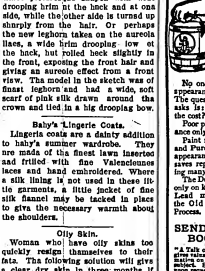
HEAVY SCENTS NOT LIKED.

Decreed That Odors Should Be Faint and Suggestive.

There hes undoubtedly hees a greot reoction from the use of perfumon, and it has long hees coasidered quite bad form to use heavy cosmetic scents.

Whatever is used should ho faint and suggestive.

A sachet of delicete frogrance put among one's linen is sufficient for most women, with perhops one or two drops of scent on an occesional addition.



Strong scents have been decided by doctors to le dengerous to the sense of smell and taste, and to effect even the brain la time, so fashion is doing good work in banning its excessive use.

Bogs of lavender and rose leaves are among the most delightful and delicate ways of scenting one's linen.

MADE UP IN LEGHORN.

One of the Latest Models in the New Summer Hats.

The wide, soft silken scarfs and huge bows so popular with the designers edapt themselves admirably to the greceful loghorn shapes which are sometimes variations upon the cloche or mushroom shapes, and sometimes picturesque shapes with wide drooping brim in the back and at one side, while the other side is turned up sharply from the hair. Or perhaps the new leghorns take on the sureole lines, a wide brim drooping low at the back, but rolled back slightly in the front, exposing the front hair and giving an sureole effect from a front view. The model in the sketch was of fine leghorn and had a wide, soft scarf of pink silk drawn around the crown and tied in a big drooping bow.

Hemstitching.

Hemstitching plays an important part on summer frocks and is used indeed on all garments with equal success. This gives opportunity for many a handkerchief to do duty, the workmanship is a distinct item in its favor. For the past year every article on fine linen has taken on the increasing beauty of hand embroidery, and ona would suppose by this time perfection had been reached in that line, and yet each month, almost each week, brings out still more delicious confections in sheer and wonderful handwork.

Hats Covered With Flowers.

The fashion of covering the hat with flowers is very lovely and vary now, but slightly heavy at first for the head, but, strange to say, after a few minutes' wear the weight of these hats seems to disappear, so the fancy-fancier is not so great after all.

Courtplaster Mends Taffeta.

The common grudge against taffeta is the fact that it splits too soon. Many people are not aware that by pasting courtplaster on the wrong side of the dress just as soon as the crack in the material appears it will prevent the tear from going further. Even when entirely broken, courtplaster will heal the "little rift within the lute." In this latter case the edges should be first drawn neatly together. In case of a very bad rent, a strip of ribbon applied with fine mending silk will not be detected.

Baby's Lingerie Coats.

Lingerie coats are a dainty addition to baby's summer wardrobe. They are made of the finest lawn inserted and frilled with fine Valenciennes laces and hand embroidered. Where a silk lining is not used in these little garments, a little pocket of fine silk flannel may be tacked in place to give the necessary warmth about the shoulders.

Oily Skin.

Woman who have oily skins too quickly resign themselves to their fate. The following solution will give a clear dry skin in three months if used regularly; pulverized borax, one ounce; pure glycerin, two ounces; camphor water, not spirits of camphor, two quarts. The skin should be bathed with this lotion two or three times a day.

SETTING THE BRIDE AT EASE.

"Widder's" Sympathy Went Out to Fellow Passenger.

A couple recently married had just entered the train that woe to bear them to the mountains on their honeymoon, when they become aware of the close scrutiny of them by a famole passenger, who had avidently "spotted" a bride and groom. The young wife, on opening her handbag, let fall some rice on the floor, and the women smiled. The other passengers regarded the couple with interest. Seeing that the bride was every moment becoming more flushed and uncomfortable by reason of their scrutiny, the women la the goodness of her heart, leaned across the carriage.

"Never mind, my deer!" she said. "I'm a widder now, but by this time next week I'll be la the same fix myself!"

NO RELIEF FROM ECZEMA

For Over Two Years—Patent Medicines, Quack Cures and Doctors Fail—Cuticura Succeeds.

"I was very badly afflicted with eczema for more than two years. The parts affected were my limbs below the knees. I tried all the physicians in the town and come to the surrounding towns, and I also tried all the patent remedies that I heard of, besides all the cures advised by old women and quacks, and found no relief whatever until I commenced using the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. In the Cuticura Remedies I found immediate relief, and was soon sound and well. C. V. Belts, Tippecanoe, Ind., Nov. 15, '05."

IN THE NAME OF CHARITY.

Jack London's Story Carries Sting of Truth and Pathos.

"Jack London's famous definition of charity—sharing a bone with a dog when you're as hungry as the dog"—recalls a story about charity," said a magazine editor, "that I heard Mr. London tell at a farewell dinner in New York before he sailed away on the Spark.

"Mr. London said two old men were smoking and drinking together after dinner.

"The host rang the bell and an old woman appeared.

"'Confound you, stupid!' said the host. 'Didn't I tell you I wanted the Scotch? Take this back, and bring what I asked for, you old fool!'

"'Come, come,' said the guest, after the old woman had hurried away in a great fright. 'Come, come, my friend, don't you think you are rather too sharp with your old servant?'

"'Oh,' said the other, 'she's not a servant. She's only a poor relation I'm keeping out of charity.'

"The guest looked relieved.

"'That alters the case, of conse,' he said."—Washington Times.

HIS FOOT ON THE TREADMILL.

Mr. Joacker Tells of One Sentenced to Hard Labor for Life.

Said Mr. Joacker, who was reading the paper: "Another poor wretch has been given a life sentence at hard labor."

Said Mrs. Joacker, who was embroidering blue roses: "Probably he deserves it. What is he guilty of."

"Fraud and no visible means of support. He obtained clothes and a fine turnout with no money and nothing collectible. He seems to be larger and stronger than most of that class, yet it is plain that he has never done a tap of work, though he has managed to live well, so far. But the poor fellow takes his sentence hard and cries piteously, protesting his innocence."

"The wretch! He must have dealt with perfect fools!"

"No, his victim is our own friend, Jack Smith."

"That clever lawyer! Do read to me all about it!"

"'Born to Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, a 13-pound boy.'"—The Bohemian.

No, Not as a Rule.

George F. Angell, Boston's brilliant and persistent defender of animals from cruelty, was talking about nature faking.

"My friend, Will Long is so nature faker," he said, "but I admit that many of our myriad nature writers are. These same's lies of a its seems too closely to resemble that of a little boy I know.

"The boy's teacher said from her desk one afternoon:

"'I want every pupil who has never told a lie to hold up his hand.'

"There was a doubtful pause. Two or three hands were raised. Then my little friend Jim got out:

"'Teacher, is it a lie if nobody finds it out?'"

An Early Discovery.

"Your epigrams and adages show great wisdom," said the dependent.

"Yes," shovered Marcus Aurelius. "I can't deny that I regard them as something very wise indeed. There is nothing like them for popularizing an administration."

POULTRY and BEES

A HILL-SIDE CHICKEN COOP.

Arrangement to Prevent Over-Crowding of Chicks.

Every year during the breeding season thousands of chicks are stunted and dwarfed by being over-crowded in undesirable coops. At the start these coops are all right for 15 or 25 chicks, but as the chicks grow larger and the weather becomes warmer their condition is anything but benithful and conducive to rapid development, especially when the coop is closed at night.

I have adopted the plan of substituting a large roosting coop for each 20 or 40 chicks as soon as they are large enough to roost, writes a correspondent of New England Homestead. This is made from a dry goods box four feet long, three feet wide and three feet high. The front and bottom are removed. Two strips are nailed perpendicular on the front corner projecting one foot below the bottom of the box. This raises the front and gives the roof the necessary pitch when facing a down hill position. Two strips nailed on each side form a support for perches which are fastened together by cross pieces so all may be removed at one operation to be sprayed.

We move this coop twice a week and it is always clean and fresh. The open front and bottom seem a little risky, considering the possibility of wandering cats, rats or weasels. But we are willing to run some risks if we can fit our own and customers' pens in the fall with large, robust stock. This one plan has enabled us to produce Orpingtons well up to standard size, which some fail to do. The accompanying sketch of coop will explain itself.

"SPORTS" AMONG BREEDS.

What is Meant by the Term in Poultry Raising.

Sports are very common among the breeds of poultry that have been created during the past 40 or 40 years. The old breeds, like the black Langshans, do not often produce sports, for the reason that they have been bred pure for many hundreds of years, perhaps for thousands of years. But modern breeds, like the Plymouth Rock, are given to producing sports.

On a Michigan farm the writer saw three pure white chickens that had hatched out of Plymouth Rock eggs. The owners thought they must have been imposed on in some way, but could not explain it. They were sure the eggs that had been put under the fowls were from their Plymouth Rock hens, but were unable to explain how they got the white chickens.

The result shown in the case is common. The Plymouth Rocks were made up of several breeds of birds, one of which was white. That white foundation crops out now and then in white birds. The White Plymouth Rocks were produced by simply breeding these birds till a strain was obtained that gave more white birds than of other colors. The White Plymouth Rocks should constantly throw colored sports for a long time to come, for they have in them the blood of barred Plymouths.

One of the week points about modern breeds is the tendency to sport, which occurs in the general demonstration of the law of averages. There is nothing more certain than the truth of the law of averages, and this is the cause of the sporting. If in a Plymouth Rock strain there is one per cent. of blood of some pure white breed, about one per cent. of the birds produced should be all white. As a matter of fact the percentage is very much smaller than this, and that is why white birds are not so common as one in a hundred.

The breeders are constantly breeding out new breeds, and, of course, all of these new breeds have to be produced by crossing the old breeds. The more breeds there are sporting will occur. It takes many generations and constant selecting of the best to get breeds true to color or form. The sports of the breeds will always be a temptation to the young breeder to create a new breed, which he can do by in-breeding the sports.

Fat Hens Lay Soft-Shelled Egge.

Excessively fat hens lay by soft-shelled eggs when the layers of fat are so abundant as to force the egg out before it can receive sufficient coating of shell. Failure to provide lime is a frequent cause of soft-shelled eggs with hens that are in a good condition.

Grits Are Needed.

A plentiful supply of good grit should always be kept where the fowls can help themselves. It is very necessary in aiding the action of the gizzard in grinding the food preparatory to digestion, and the failure to supply it is often the foundation of many fatal ailments.

DO YOUR OWN THINKING.

Practical Points on Different Breeds of Fowls.

Articles describing the strong and weak points of different breeds, from the practical poultry keepers' viewpoint, appear from time to time in farm and poultry publications. A majority of these articles are written by men and women who faithfully describe the merits and faults of the fowls of this or that variety which they have kept.

Those who have had little or no experience in the business of poultry raising are likely to accept these statements as final and to avoid certain breeds and adopt certain other breeds upon the recommendation of the writers of these articles. That, however, is not a safe thing to do, declares Farmer's Review. Because a certain man found fowls of a certain variety poor layers, excellent table fowls, slow to mature and good foragers does not by any means prove that all fowls of the same variety have the same merits and the same faults. It simply means that the few specimens of the variety which this man bred proved, under his treatment, to be what he described.

There are no principal characteristics, such as the ability to lay extra well, the trait of maturing rapidly, tolering confinement well, etc., which may be put down as the exact attributes of all fowls of a certain breed or variety. The fact is, the usefulness of any fowl depends upon its care and its breeding for generations back. A brood of chicks hatched from eggs laid by fowls which were indifferent layers and which were in turn bred from indifferent layers, cannot by any means be made to produce a high average yield of eggs, no matter how well they may be housed, cared for and fed.

On the other hand, a flock of chicks bred from a long line of heavy layers will prove good egg producers under rather unfavorable conditions, though one or two seasons of indifferent treatment will tear down the laying tendency which has been built up by the work of several years. In selecting the breed, therefore, take one that best suits your fancy but obtain the stock from breeders who are known to have vigorous, healthy fowls, and who have bred them for productiveness during a series of years with success. Then you have only to continue their work to maintain, and perhaps improve, the value of the breed selected for eggs, table poultry or both, as the case may be.

VENTILATED BOTTOM-BOARDS.

How Moisture and Rotting of Frames Can Be Avoided.

One of the objections to hive-foundations is the moisture that gathers between the hive-bottom and the foundation causing rot.

In order to avoid the objection, writes a correspondent of Bee Culture, I make a different foundation as follows: I use a 2x4 at each end, as long as the hive is wide. On top of these I fasten a 1x3 at each end. These 1x3's are 15 inches apart, which makes a foundation six inches longer than my hive bottom. I now take a piece of board wide enough to fill in between the two pieces of 1x3, and six inches long. Fasten one end of it to the 2x4, the other to a small strip fastened under the 1x3's as per illustration. Now, by setting this foundation on the smooth ground many a load of honey will be saved that would be lost if the hive were so arranged that a nearly worn-out bee could not climb from the ground to the hive. I find they will frequently fall in front of the hive with a heavy load of honey, and wings worn out, but still able to walk.

Feeding Young Chicks.

A flock of young chickens is very much like a drove of pigs, when you once get them used to being fed in one place, they will always be there at their regular feeding time. A self-feeder arrangement is all right, but must be enclosed in a pen where the chickens may get but the old hens cannot. First of all, after such an arrangement has been made, is to get the flock in the habit of eating there, then all is easy. As long as they are fed outside, they will not usually come to the pen.

Give Chicks Charcoal.

When chicks are fed meashes it is a great benefit to them to add a little powdered charcoal to the soup, and I have the mash moist enough so the charcoal will stick. The chicks will soon learn to like it and will eat the mixture as readily as plain feed. When they get older feed the charcoal alone and see how they will eat it. It is a fine thing to keep them healthy, for it is a great corrective, preventing fermentation of food in the crop, and for that reason is a great aid in warding off bowel complaint.

What is Castoria.

CASTORIA is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. Dr. Gustave A. Eisengraeber, of St. Paul, Minn., says: "I have used your Castoria repeatedly in my practice with good results, and can recommend it as an excellent, mild and harmless remedy for children."

Dr. R. J. Dennis, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used and prescribed your Castoria in my sanitarium and outside practice for a number of years and find it to be an excellent remedy for children."

Dr. S. A. Buchanan, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have used your Castoria in the case of my own baby and find it pleasant to take, and have obtained excellent results from its use."

Dr. J. E. Simpson, of Chicago, Ill., says: "I have used your Castoria in cases of colic in children and have found it the best medicine of its kind on the market."

Dr. R. E. Eskildson, of Omaha, Neb., says: "I find your Castoria to be a standard family remedy. It is the best thing for infants and children I have ever known and I recommend it."

Dr. L. R. Robinson, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria certainly has merit. Is not its age, its continued use by mothers through all these years, and the many attempts to imitate it, sufficient recommendation? What can a physician add? Leave it to the mothers."

Dr. Edwin F. Pardee, of New York City, says: "For several years I have recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

Dr. N. B. Starr, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I object to what are called patent medicines, where maker alone knows what ingredients are put in them, but I know the formula of your Castoria and advise its use."

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist Is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Secretarial, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

KING AND NOBLES IN KOREA FAVOR WESTERN RELIGION,

Seoul, Korea.—Outside of one or two minor states in Africa, there is probably no mission field where Christianity is accorded so great a degree of royal favor as in Korea. From the beginning of the opening of Korea to the world, a little more than 20 years ago, until the present time, the closest friends of the emperor, to whom he has turned in every crisis, have been the American missionaries. He is not yet a Christian, although he reads the Bible and has received some instruction in Christianity. In attendance upon the Seoul churches to-day may be found members of the royal family, as well as leaders of the nobility.

This is one of the remarkable facts about the recent phenomenal religious history of Korea, namely, that enjoying the favor of the court to a marked degree, the missionaries have yet devoted themselves chiefly to work among the plain people. The latter have been converted by thousands—the number of actual communicants, and not merely adherents, is now given as 80,000—and gradually Christianity has worked from the bottom up, until to-day all of Korea seems favorable and hospitable toward it.

When interviewing the man who had been indicated to me by natives, Japanese officials and missionaries as probably the greatest living Korean, to said, speaking of the growth of Christianity and Christian schools, "The only lights in Korea's black sky are the churches." The opinion widely prevails that the real transformation of Korea will be effected, not by Japan, but by Christianity. The missionaries are wakening up and lifting up the natives; and they assert that the latter have greater potentialities than either the Japanese to the south or the Chinese to the north.

An Unmarried Man in Korea Wears His Hair Braided Down His Back; a Married Man Wears His Twisted Up in a Knot.

A Canadian Who Doctors a King.

In Seoul it is noteworthy that the missionaries constitute the entire Anglo-Saxon community. There are at this capital more missionaries than all other white foreigners combined. Because of their activity and long residence, they are the best known to the Koreans. While there is a small and not very closely-knit consular set, and a business set, as in other capitals, they rank after the missionary set, and, in fact, are in more intimate relations with it than usual.

A missionary physician is the doctor of the white community. This is Dr. O. R. Avison, head of the Severance Memorial Hospital, which is spoken of in Seoul as "the hospital." Though the dispensaries also conduct busy and successful hospital here. There is no lack of work for the medical missionary here. The Severance hospital, which is the gift of Louis N. Severance, a well-known Presbyterian layman of Cleveland, O., is built and equipped on the lines of a first-class American hospital. Its patients include the best people in Seoul, and Dr. Avison is physician to his majesty.

The king recently made a gift of $1,500 to the hospital, and another of like amount to Dr. Avison himself. The latter has been through dramatic and bloody scenes at the Korean court, but always as a personal friend of the emperor; he says that he and the emperor never talk politics.—Associated with Dr. Avison, who is a Canadian, is Dr. J. W. Hirst, of Philadelphia, and these, with a trained nurse, Miss E. L. Shields, of Lawisburg, Pa., constitute the responsible heads of the hospital.

In connection with his hospital duties, Dr. Avison conducts a medical college. He is having translated into Korean, and mimeographed, a complete set of modern medical textbooks; and his ambition is to turn out a set of competent native physicians who can, with the literature thus at their command, build up a Korean modern medical profession along up-to-date lines. With such an ambition as this, a man is not to be blamed for working far into the night, as Dr. Avison does.

Government Support for the Y. M. C. A.

Conspicuous among the religious enterprises of Seoul is the Young Men's Christian association, which is at present housed in some little old Korean buildings, but which is about to break ground for the erection of a modern structure, the gift of John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia. The association has 800 members, including more than a dozen of the highest rank of Korean nobility. The emperor's nephew teaches a Bible class in the association. Twice the emperor has given subscriptions to the organization, and the Japanese continue to give, from the Korean funds, an annual subscription of $5,000.

The facility with which Korean young men turn to the Y. M. C. A. would indicate, even to a superficial observer, that conditions here are extraordinary. The fact is, the young Korean, who has been sitting on his heels for centuries, in self-satisfied idleness, and an ignorance inconceivable to a westerner, is being rudely awakened. He is beginning to realize that his head and his hands must be trained, and that he must learn how to hustle. So the educational classes of the Y. M. C. A., which are chiefly industrial and commercial, are overcrowded, the enrollment being 568, with the present inadequate equipment. An illustration of the practical bent of the association's methods is found in the fact that it is teaching stenotypewriting, to prepare young Koreans for places as soon as the new city water system is established. Twice a week lectures, which might be styled "general information," are given to audiences of more than a thousand men, hundreds being commonly turned away. This Y. M. C. A. really stands for civilization to the behind-the-times youth. It is even teaching them how to use their bodies, in physical exercise and sport.

All sorts of Korean celebrities are more or less closely identified with this work; the native secretary is a man of rank, formerly Seoul's chief of police, who was convicted while undergoing a term of imprisonment because he refused to order his men to fire on some reformers. The real motive power of the association are the English secretaries Gerdine, Gillette, Brockman and Gregg.

Team Work by the Denominations.

While America is writing articles about church federation, and holding conventions and mission study, the real thing is under way in Korea, as in other mission fields. Aside from a small Anglican mission, and the Roman Catholic mission, Presbyterian and Methodist bodies are the only ones represented in this country. The way in which they work together is a rebuke to many a community in America, rent by sectarian jealousy and pride. The stage of mere good will was passed long ago.

Here in Seoul the Presbyterians and Methodists have united their academies in the John D. Wells training school, and the funds and teachers are supplied by both denominations. Arrangements are in the making for a union of hospital work, as in Pyeng Yang. The Methodist and Presbyterian church papers have been made one and the Sunday school literature is also issued jointly. Union revival services are held and union Bible classes. A union hymn book is being compiled, and the big Methodist publishing plant is in process of union concern.

Considerable attention is being paid to the publication of tracts, papers and other religious literature. The Korean Religious Tract society, which is one of the union enterprises, is even getting out a set of educational primers. The Korean common people have not been readers; so to the missionaries has come the opportunity to quicken a desire for reading in the nation, to teach it to read, and to create a literature. There is little or no evil reading matter to counteract; the field is open for the missionaries, and they are copying it.

The demand for the Scriptures has not yet been met fully, since the Korean Christians are devoted Bible students. The New Testament has been put into the native tongue, and a board of translation is at work upon the Old Testament. This matter of Bible translation, which is financed and directed by the American and British and Foreign Bible societies, is considered of far reaching importance, inasmuch as it is done for all the future. Owing to the lack of native words to express many religious terms, a new Christian vocabulary is practically created.

The Cross on the Dance Hall.

The visible signs of Christianity which the casual visitor may find in Seoul would by no means tell the whole story. On two hills outside the old city walls (whose gates no longer shut at curfew, as they did a few years ago) may be seen imposing Roman Catholic churches. The Methodist church, not far from the American legation, is also in western style, as is likewise the Anglican church. One other large outbuilding on the main street bears the sacred symbol in the form usually seen over Protestant Episcopal churches; investigation shows, however, that the building is a low dance hall, the vilest resort in the city. How it ever came to be surmounted by a cross nobody seems able to explain.

The churches, for the most part, are in low-ceilinged Korean buildings, the exterior giving no adequate conception of the seating capacity. The Presbyterians have what they call a "Collegiate Church." It comprises three congregations, meeting together for a joint preaching service by a missionary in the afternoon. In the morning Sunday schools are held, more adults than children attending, and in the evening the congregations worship separately usually with a Korean preaching. Several of the church buildings are too small to hold the crowds in attendance. Union services in English are held every Sunday afternoon on the Methodist compound.

The Methodist churches, like the Presbyterians, are experiencing a tremendous growth. Rev. Dr. George Heber Jones, pastor of the largest, tells me that upon his recent return from America he found no less than 500 probationers on the waiting list. One Sunday of my sojourn in Seoul one of the most notorious characters in the city arose in the Methodist church, and, confessing his sins, asked to be admitted as a probationer. He has been a high office holder and a wealthy man; his extortions had earned for him a nickname which Dr. Jones says can only be translated as "Min the cuss."

A Young Woman With Nerve.

A great deal of religious work in the surrounding country centers in Seoul. From this point many of the missionaries who reside here go out on their itinerating trips. It is seldom possible to find all the missionaries at home at once. A newspaper page could be filled with stories of the experiences of the itinerating missionaries.

At a little dinner party in Seoul I chanced to be seated alongside of a charmingly dressed young American woman. Apropos of my tale of riding 12 hours in Pyeng Yang in zero weather in absolutely unheated cars, she told how before the railway was running she once set out on horseback from Pyeng Yang to Seoul, in a Korean sampan filled with natives. There was only one room, and no sleeping accommodations, and no privacy. The boat was scheduled to start at noon; by a wild rush she managed to arrived in time; and there she had to stay until six o'clock the next morning, expecting the boat to start at every minute, and with no heat and no food except Korean rice. After that delay of 30 hours over the long ride down the ice-filled river.

This young woman, apropos of the subject of foreigners resting, proposes to travel armed, for fear of Japanese coolies, related how in the earlier days when there was considerable hostility to foreigners in the interior of Korea, she was wont to examine her revolver every night, in a business-like fashion, in order to impress the natives, although she was as much afraid of the weapon as they were. Sojourning in an inn with an evil reputation, she overheard an ominous conversation. Going out front, and with great circumstance of preparation, the missionary made as if to shoot a magpie in a distant tree. The terrified natives besought her not to do so, and, with seeming reluctance, she put away the revolver—and slept undisturbed through the night. There is an amusing side as well as a seamy side and a hopeful side, to mission work in Korea.

BUILDING UP BUSINESS

AN ORIGINAL PLAN TO TEST NEW ENTERPRISES.

AN INDUSTRY INCUBATOR

Suggestions as to Assisting Small Manufacturers Toward Success and Helping Town Interests.

Regardless of the magnitude of a city or town there must be employment for the people. In fact, population of any city depends upon the opportunity that it may afford the residents gaining a livelihood. The agricultural town receives its support from whatever mercantile traffic it can gain from contiguous territory, and what industries in the manufacturing line that can be advantageously conducted. The city draws support from the smaller towns in an area of country, which, owing to its geographical position, and what other advantages it may have, it may command the trade of.

It is to the advantage of every town to have as many manufacturing plants as can be profitably operated. Natural conditions regulate manufacturing to a great extent. Transportation facilities, the cost of raw material and fuel are highly important factors; yet there are certain lines of small manufacturing that can be well carried on in the community if only rightly managed. For many years ambitious towns have followed the practice of offering bonuses to manufacturing concerns in order to secure their location. The bonus system has not always operated satisfactorily. Too often promoters of manufacturing enterprises look to the town already as a means of making profit rather than to the legitimate conduct of the business. Then, again, there are stock-jobbing schemes that operate in connection with the bonus plan, and it has been known that towns to the thousands of dollars have been lost by people anxious to further the manufacturing interests of their home towns.

Numerous manufacturing centers have been gradually built up through the right kind of co-operation of the citizens. There is one prosperous city in Illinois that owes its activity mainly to the plans pursued by an enterprising class of Swedish citizens, who some 40 years ago organized a Swedish Aid society. This society advanced money to worthy workers who desired to engage in business. Officers of the society supervised the business to a great extent, and small concerns which were established grew to be factories whose output run well up into the millions annually. This aid society loaned money for capital from the profits of the business. The plan was a successful one.

The system here referred to suggests a means whereby each town or city which desires to build up manufacturing interests can do so at the minimum cost; that is, that the designers and objections offered by the bonus system are entirely eliminated, as is also the chance for promoters to reap a harvest through the exploitation of unsound enterprises. This plan involves the incorporation of a promoting company. Local capital may be subscribed to whatever extent is deemed expedient. To illustrate: If an organization be formed with $25,000 capital, $10,000 of this capital can be employed in the equipment of a building for manufacturing purposes. This building can have facilities for half a dozen to a dozen small manufacturing concerns. The power necessary may be supplied from a general power plant. The machinery for manufacturing can be installed as required. A board of directors shall be selected to control the interests, and whenever a small enterprise is found to be needing a location, the directors can undertake to negotiate for its location. Facilities for manufacturing and marketing whatever the product may be can be afforded. If the enterprise proves successful it can be moved from the experimental station into a separate building, when the holding company investing in its stock, and the dividends on the stock can be placed in the general fund for the extension of other enterprises. Should an enterprise prove to be lacking in merit it can be discarded. This plan would enable a town to a dozen different enterprises can be carried on and thoroughly tested as to their merits before locating. It must not be expected that all of the undertakings will prove successful, but the few successful ones of the promoting company can be compensated by receiving an equitable percentage upon the amount invested in stock.

This plan eliminates the objectionable features of granting bonuses and is the broadest kind of a scheme for that are in embryo stage and purely experiments.

No Good to Town.

The man who spends his time loafing about the town stores and complaining of the conditions of his environments is no good to himself, his family or the town. There are a class of men who spend their time in bemoaning the fact that they are not getting the right kind of living which the world owes them, and who never once think how much better this living could be if they would only hustle. The man who is constantly grumbling about the dullness of his town is never found looking around to discover a means by which he can make it livelier.

EQUITY IN BUSINESS.

Practice of Live-and-Let-Live Principles Most Desirable.

Too frequently it is noticed that in the struggle to attain wealth the rights of the individual are ignored. Fair dealing is a desirable thing as well as most simple, and it requires only common honesty to practice it. Not alone is there honesty involved in the matter of selling but also in the matter of buying. It is quite as dishonorable for the purchaser to exact that the seller receive no profit on an article sold as it is for the seller to demand an exorbitant price for his goods.

There is much sound philosophy in the live-and-let-live gospel. This is nothing more than an observance of the Golden Rule that has found expression in all ages of enlightenment from the time of Gautama down to the present. In every day dealings it is apparent that there is too much of exaggerated selfishness in avidence. Too great a struggle for the vantage. There should be a spirit of Christian cooperation that would bn just to all alike. Whole communities suffer sometimes from the lack of this sense of equity on the part of merchants and their customers.

How often is the complaint heard in rural districts that the storekeepers of a town charge too high prices for what they have to sell? How often it it noticed that where this feeling dominates the people that the home town suffers as a consequence! It is short sightedness on parts of merchants to require of their customers more than what may be considered a legitimate and just profit. In fact, it is poor business policy to follow out a plan of this kind. There are many towns whose growth has been prevented, impeded by a peculiar conduct of the merchants to make all they possibly can in a few short years, and to give the people as small an amount of goods as they will take for their money. The natural result of a policy of this kind is that the people seek other towns in which to do their trading and quite often buy from the mail-order houses.

Habits once formed are hard to break. It is quite as difficult for the merchant to recover from the habit of making exorbitant profits as it is for the patron of the mail-order house to turn his trade to the home stores. Should both the merchants and their customers calmly consider principles that enter into commerce, and both determine to practice equity in their dealings, the merchant to sell honest goods at honest profits and the customer to give patronage to merchants who would practice this principle, it would be wholesome not alone for the home towns, but for all the communities.

TOWN HELPS.

It is easy to estimate the business importance of a place by the appearance of its stores. Dingy, dirty appearing business places always give a jaded impression and are generally indicative of the character of the business men of the town.

* * *

Good newspapers are important factors in building of towns. Well filled advertising pages, as well as local news pages speak for the prosperity of the town and makes an impression upon the readers that assist the town to greater prosperity.

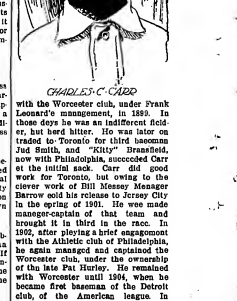
* * *

Each town should have a good public hall, a place where meetings can be held and entertainments be given. such a hall be erected by private enterprise it rightly managed can be made a profitable investment in the average small town.

* * *

Quite often when towns are organized the matter of providing for public parks is overlooked. Every town is a city in embryo. No one can estimate how great it may become in time. It is well to look into the future and to set aside grounds that may be used for park purposes. It has been the experiments of many cities that the park question is a troublesome one when not looked after in ample time. There is nothing that makes the city more attractive or is such a blessing to its people as a cozy park where they may meet for recreation during the warmer months of the year.

PUBLIC OPINION.



Power of the Country Press and Its Influences Upon the Community.

While the influences of the great city papers are recognized and the great magazines of the country read, neither of these conveyers of general information can ever supplant the field that is occupied by the country press. The home paper is the medium that conveys local intelligence to its readers. It fills a place in the small-town world that no other publication can ever supplant. The country press is the rock on which the people of a town build the rough literary game are qualified to form an opinion. It may not be up to the highest classical standard, but the rough literary gems are quite as valuable in molding of public opinion. It may not be up to the highest classical standard, but the rough literary gems are quite usually shining resplendent and cast their rays in the most remote corners of the land. It is a power for good. In its reflections of events, in the local field are shown the progress of the people whom it represents. It is the mirror of the condition of the town and the country. The residents of every community should take the greatest pride in assisting in making the home press more powerful. Stand up for your home paper. It is the one staunch advocate of your local interests and to an extent is indicative of either your prosperity or your lack of progress.

Sporting Gossip.

John L. Sullivan several years ago umpired a ball game at Weehawken, N. J., between the West New York Field club and the old Ironsides, of Newark, the oldest semi-professional team in the country. Castro, then a member of the Bayonne college team, and Jack O'Neill, the well-known semi-pro. catcher, were the Ironsides battery. Sullivan was umpiring behind the pitcher. During the first inning when O'Neill received the ball he would work the catcher's trick of pulling a wide pitch toward the plate and then hold up the ball, asking for a strike. The scheme didn't work with John L., and he passed a couple of batters. After the inning was over Sullivan said to Castro with his full, deep voice: "Boy, pitcher, you tell that young fellow to cut that out or I'll cut him out of the game. And that goes!" O'Neill took the hint and pulled no more wide ones. Later in the game Tom Brush, of the West New Yorks, took a desperate chance and tried to steal home from third. The catcher touched him fully a yard from the rubber, but Sullivan called Brush safe. Nobody disputed the exchampion's decision, but after the game he said: "I knew that fellow was out at the plate, but I wouldn't call anybody out who had the nerve to take a chance like that!"

Charles C. Carr, the first baseman, manager and captain of the Indianapolis club, of the American association, is a notable figure in the baseball world. He first came into prominence with the Worcester club, under Frank Leonard's management, in 1899. In those days he was an indifferent fielder, but hard hitter. He was later on traded to Toronto for third baseman Jud Smith, and "Kitty" Bransfield, now with Philadelphia, succeeded Carr at the initial sack. Carr did good work for Toronto, but owing to the clever work of Bill Messey Manager Barrow sold his release to Jersey City in the spring of 1901. He wee made manager-captain of that team and brought it to third in the race. In 1902, after playing a brief engagement with the Athletic club of Philadelphia, he again managed and captained the Worcester club, under the ownership of the late Pat Hedley. He remained with Worcester until 1904, when he became first baseman of the Detroit club, of the American league. In 1905 he joined the Cleveland club, and while a member of that team in conjunction with third baseman Bradley opened a sporting goods store in Cleveland, under the firm name of the Carr & Bradley Sporting Goods company, which is now doing a thriving business. In 1908 he started the season with Cleveland, of the National league, and finished it with Indianapolis, by which club he was reengaged for this season. In a game of picture, standing six feet two inches in his socks.

The records for throwing a baseball are all in doubt. None are reliable or authentic. Ned Crane heads the list and is given credit for throwing a ball 135 yards one foot and one-half inch, which he is credited with doing at Cincinnati on October 12, 1884. If that throw was on the square it is doubtful if it has ever been beaten. It is alleged that Hens Wagner has beaten it again. Wagner is said to have thrown a ball 134 yards one foot and eight inches in an official trial at Louisville, October 16, 1898, and later is said to have thrown it 135 yards a yard. But it is alleged that the wind favored him on the latter occasion. Pat Dougherty and Wagner are considered of the greatest throwers in the game and Herrmann wants them to get together and contest with all the strong throwers.

Jack Dillon, the utility catcher of the Baltimore club, has left the Orioles to reenter the theatrical profession. Dillon will have a part in the "Clock Model," which has begun rehearsing in New York. Dillon's reason for retiring from the diamond at this time of the season is due to a strained arm which is the result of a railroad accident he was in last March while on his way west to join the Kansas City team. Dillon believes that a rest will bring his arm around in shape again.

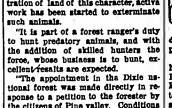
Interesting Bits of News Picked Up Here and There at the National Capital



WASHINGTON.—The government has obtained an official "hunter," not a mere mollycoddle of an octopus slayer or a special commissioner who seeks the money devil in his skyscraper lair, but the genuine, pure article, who will go around with a real gun with the intention of killing big game at so much per, to be paid for out of Uncle Sam's treasury. He is T. M. Moody, and the appointment, which was made by the United States forest service, took effect on July 1, when the official almred assumed his duties in the Dixie national forest in Utah.

The appointment, according to a statement made by the forest service, "has greater significance than appears on the surface." To this explanation is added that "it is a fulfillment of the promise of the forest service to do something to help settlers all over the west to lessen the losses they have suffered from predatory animals."

The bulletin in part says: "From the time of the first settlement of the country this has been one of the greatest sources of loss to the rancher and farmer. The country is not suited to cultivation, and always realized refuge to cougars, wolves, and other animals of their class. Now that the government has undertaken the administration of land of this character, active work has been started to exterminate such animals.

"It is part of a forest ranger's duty to hunt predatory animals, and with the addition of skilled hunters the force, whose business is to hunt, excellent results are expected.

"The appointment in the Dixie national forest was made directly in response to a petition to the forester by the citizens of Pine valley. Conditions there are so bad farmers are afraid to allow their children to go after the milch cows in the evening and the losses from stock killed were heavy."

WORKINGMEN SAID TO BE SHARING IN PROSPERITY

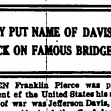
IT IS predicted in official circles that the forthcoming bulletin of the bureau of labor will show that the increase in wages the past year have broken all records and that the prosperity which is so much heralded is tangible and that the working people are fully participating in it. Whether they are receiving their fair share is a question which cannot be answered officially or otherwise to the satisfaction of all concerned, but it is stated that official figures will show that the advances in wages during the last 12 months have been unprecedented.

Along with the increase in wages has been experienced an increase in the cost of living. The purchasing power of money has decreased both when applied to labor and to living. While trusts and monopolies have in some instances fostered the power of supply and demand to effect prices, it is promised that normal and natural rules will apply when the department of justice completes its programme of attacks upon the combinations. So far as supply affects prices Secretary Wilson says that he will produce bountiful harvests.

"If the railroads could only get the labor the investment of money in betterments this year would exceed anything ever reported," says John T. Marchand, assistant to the president of the Rock Island system, who until recently was a highly valued employe of the interstate commerce commission. "The trouble is that the labor can't be had at any price. We are doing everything possible, for instance, on the Rock Island lines to establish a strictly first-class condition. It has been only by the greatest exertion that we have been able to get the, of which we had hundreds of thousands bought, delivered to us. No labor.

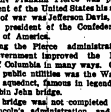
"What it can be set down as certain that next fall and winter will not see a repetition of the troubles of last winter. The railroads have their tracks in condition, have more cars, more power, more of everything and have got it all into the best possible state of efficiency. Tonnage is so big that the prospect of a small reduction, which seemed to be promised during the spring, was really rather gratifying to the operating departments, for it gave them a chance to catch up with business. But the reduction evidently isn't going to take place, for crop conditions are really better than anybody dreamed was possible at that time."

SECRETARY CORTELYOU GIVES GARFIELD SNUB



SECRETARIES CORTELYOU and Garfield have laid the foundations for a fine quarrel. Some time ago Garfield issued a regulation for the officers and clerks of his department which permitted them to file expense accounts without swearing to their accuracy and truth.

Garfield figured that if the government could not trust the men it sent out to look after its business to render a true bill of expenses it had better get other men.



Robert J. Tracewell, comptroller of the treasury, who passes on all questions of law relating to disbursements of money, and George B. Cortelyou, his official superior, think otherwise. They think the jurat is necessary because they believe the law requires verification under oath.

Tracewell and Cortelyou have put out a new method of accounting for money disbursed by the government, in which they set aside the Garfield regulation without mentioning it or without having consulted the most prominent member of the tennis cabinet.

In view of the standing of Garfield at the White House, this shows wonderful temerity on the part of Cortelyou. The only way Garfield can prevent this cold official ignoring of him and his act is to appeal to the president.

MAY PUT NAME OF DAVIS BACK ON FAMOUS BRIDGE

WHEN Franklin Pierce was president of the United States his secretary of war was Jefferson Davis, afterward president of the Confederate States of America.

During the Pierce administration the government improved the District of Columbia in many ways. One of the public utilities was the Washington aqueduct, famous in legend as the Cabin John bridge.

The bridge was not completed until Lincoln's administration, and as it was erected under the supervision of the war department, a stone tablet was inserted in the masonry bearing the names of the presidents and secretaries of war who had to do with the work. Of course, Jefferson Davis' name appears with the rest.

When the war of the rebellion began, and the erstwhile secretary of war became the executive head of the confederacy, the name of Jefferson Davis was chiseled out of this tablet, and to-day a glaring blank occupies the space.

As sectional prejudice has disappeared, this little expression of animosity has been regretted by many who approved and who might have cheered the deed at the time of its commission.

A few days ago the president received a letter on the subject from Walter F. Phillips of Bridgeport, Conn., and this document he referred to the war department.

The result is the first time the agitation has been put into any definite and official form, and it is believed steps may soon be taken to restore the tablet to something resembling its former self.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

SCORED TAFT VICTORY

Arthur I. Vorys, of Columbus, O., political manager for William Howard Taft in his presidential campaign, and insurance commissioner of Ohio, has scored his first victory in Ohio by having the Republican state central committee indorse Taft as Ohio's "overwhelming choice" for the Republican presidential nomination in 1908.

Vorys is a young man. He is also a determined young man. He was picked by Charles Taft of Cincinnati, brother of the secretary of war, as chief Taft boomer.

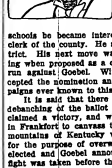
The very first thing Vorys struck the snags that Joseph Benson Foraker, Ohio's senior United States senator, had laid out for anyone who tried to get the Ohio indorsement for president. Foraker had favorite son notions of his own and had been preparing for years to get where the presidential lightning would strike him. A well-oiled "machine" was at his disposal.

But Vorys cared little for the Foraker opposition. He went ahead with his plans and one of them was to nail down the state central committee. His first broached the subject early in the spring, but dropped it when the Foraker forces prepared to show fight. Foraker proposed state primaries to show whether the people of the state wanted Foraker or Taft as favorite son. Vorys immediately took up the challenge and began to shout for the primaries. Then Foraker said it was too early in the game and from Washington immediately made dates for several speeches in Ohio.

Vorys waited until the speeches had been delivered, then calmly went about getting the Taft indorsement in spite of them.

Mr. Vorys is not a noisy worker. He goes after what he wants in the way best suited to get it, and he generally gets it.

TO WED A GRANT

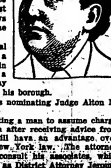


The engagement has been announced of Miss Edith Root, the only daughter of the Secretary of State and Mrs. Elihu Root, to Lieut. Ulysses S. Grant, U. S. A., son of Maj. Gen. Frederick Dent Grant, and grandson of President Grant. No date has yet been set for the wedding, but it probably will take place in the early autumn.

The romance had its beginning and most of its scenes in Washington. It was while serving as military aid to President Roosevelt that Lieut. Grant found opportunity to press his suit for the hand of the daughter of the secretary of state. Their social duties brought them into frequent contact, but so unobtrusively was the lieutenant's wooing done that only the most intimate friends were aware of its progress.

President McKinley's appointment of Lieut. Grant to a cadetship at West Point was in pursuance of a written request made by President Grant shortly before his death.

FUGITIVE OFFERED IMMUNITY



William Sylvester Taylor, former governor of Kentucky, who has been a fugitive from his state since the murder of William Goebel, seven years ago, is charged with murder. Taylor, too, was suspected of having previous knowledge of the assassination of Goebel, his Democratic rival for the office of chief executive of the state, but he escaped the boundaries and finally located in the Indiana city, where he has been practicing law.

The career of Taylor as governor was not long, but it was exciting. Taylor lived down in Butler county, Ky. He was born there in 1853 and was married there to Sarah Taun 25 years later. Upon finishing his studies in the public schools he became interested in politics and secured a position as clerk of the county. He studied law and was later made a judge in his district. His next move was to the attorney generalship, where he was acting when proposed as a candidate for governor on the Republican ticket to run against Goebel. With apparently no chances of winning, Taylor accepted the nomination and then began one of the most bitter political campaigns ever known to this country.

It is said that there was an enormous corruption fund and scandalous debauching of the ballot boxes. After the election both Goebel and Taylor claimed a victory, and when election commissioners went into session in Frankfort to canvass the returns, a small army of desperadoes from the mountains of Kentucky were brought into the city by the anti-Goebelites for the purpose of overwhelming the commissioners. Taylor was declared elected and Goebel announced his intention to contest the election. The fight was taken before the state legislature, but on the day before the final arguments in the case were made Goebel was shot down within 30 feet of the capitol building by an assassin concealed in the office of Secretary of State Caleb Powers, and only 35 feet from Taylor's office, then the acting governor. After the assassination the legislature immediately took Taylor's chair away from him and declared Goebel governor. He was sworn into office on his death bed.

Taylor then went to Washington, D. C., where he stayed for a time, but has since made Indianapolis his home.

NEW COUNSEL FOR THAW

Martin W. Littleton, who has been selected to succeed Delphin Delmas as chief counsel for Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, at his next trial, which is scheduled to begin in the September term of court, is a former president of the borough of Brooklyn and has the reputation of being one of the keenest criminal lawyers in New York. In fact, it was his remarkable series of successes in winning cases considered almost hopeless by older and more experienced attorneys that first brought him into prominence in the metropolis.

Early in life Mr. Littleton entered the political arena and with his eloquence and ability as a vote-getter was soon recognized as a power in the New York Democratic ranks. He secured a strong following and gradually worked his way up until in 1903 he easily won the presidency of his borough.

Mr. Littleton made the address in St. Louis nominating Judge Alton N. Parker for president of the United States.

Harry K. Thaw has taken his time in selecting a man to assume charge of his case and has decided upon Mr. Littleton after receiving advice from veterans of the legal profession. Littleton will have an advantage over Delmas in that he is thoroughly posted on New York law. The attorney from the west was continually compelled to consult his associates, while Thaw's new counsel is to spring in this regard in District Attorney Jerome, it is said that Littleton's fee is $25,000.

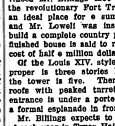
Life in the Great Metropolis Mirrored for Our Readers

NEW YORK.—Tryon Hall, the new residence of C. K. G. Billings, well known as a breeder of trotting horses, which has just been completed at Fort Washington road and One Hundred and Ninety-sixth street, marks a novel departure in home building in New York. It is virtually a country place in the city. Surrounded by spacious grounds and commanding wide views of rural scenery, it is nevertheless on Manhattan Island, on the edge of the crowded metropolis and within reach of the theaters, the hotels, and the business district.

There is an interesting story of the development of the idea which resulted in the establishment of Tryon Hall. Mr. Billings bought several acres of land some years ago for the purpose of building a stable for his famous trotting horses, which he raced on the Speedway, and he gave the commission to his architect, Guy Lowell.



As the scheme progressed, Mr. Billings took an active interest in the site, especially the fine view up and down rife Hudson, and he decided to build e smell lodge on the lead across the road from the stables.

Eventually not alone the view but the ease with which the cottage could be reached, the opportunity to use horses and automobiles and to keep a yacht in the river below convinced Mr. Billings that the site of the revolutionary Fort Tryon offered an ideal place for a summer home, and Mr. Lowell was instructed to build a complete country place. The finished house is said to represent a cost of half e million dollars.

Of the Louis XIV. style, the house proper is three stories high, while the tower is five. There are high roofs with peaked turrets, and the entrance is under a porte-coche from a formal esplanade in front.

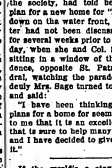
Mr. Billings expects to spend half of each year in Tryon Hall. He also has a residence in Fifth evenue, but until recently he has been living in Libby Castle, once the retreat of "Boss Tweed."

RIVALRY AMONG SOCIETY WOMEN IN CHARITY WORK

AMONG the women of New York society there is just as much competition in charitable work as there is in their social doings. Perhaps it cannot be said that they have selfish motives, but it is certain that there is bitter rivalry for the honor of the highest sales.

The other day at Newport there was a fair to raise money for a church, and the devices conceived by the matrons of society to get the ear from their neighbors were almost marvelously ingenious. Miss Pauline French is said to have cast all her competitors in the dark with her booth, the contents of which were a strict secret until the fair was well under way. When she unveiled the booth there was a big crowd of curious women present. The goods offered for sale were nothing more than cushions shaped like sausages, but with the aid of a clever professional demonstrator Miss French's pillows went like hot cakes on a winter's morning—of course, at tremendously fancy prices. But who among

THE wife of J. G. Phelps Stokes, the millionaire, who was Rose Pastor, a cigar factory girl on the east side, has decided to do journalistic work.



When she lived in a stuffy tenement and shared with her neighbors the inconveniences and simple pleasures afforded by the east side streets and parks, she amused herself by writing little pieces for Yiddish papers and early developed a keen insight into the problems of her quarter and a reasoning mind that suggested many sensible remedies. For a long time after her marriage she and her husband remained on the east side doing helpful settlement work, but later they stopped it.

Now, however, she is going to resume writing, but in another vein. "Bintel Brief" will be the heading of her column in a Yiddish paper. It means "bunch of letters," and Mrs. Stokes' answers to those letters may be properly designeted as "balm for lovers." The paper has developed its advice-to-the-lovelorn department until it is now read by all the east side. The Yiddish method of conducting such a department is much the same as that employed by English papers, and judging from the letters received, there is just as much unrequieted love east of the Bowery as there is farther up town. It is reasonable to suppose that Mrs. Stokes, as editor, will be asked many times how she captured her wealthy husband.

In addition to deeling out advice to her Yiddish sisters in their love affairs, Mrs. Stokes will write weekly articles on socialistic subjects.

MRS. STOKES TO ADVISE GIRLS IN LOVE AFFAIRS

MRS. SAGE STILL BUSY SCATTERING HER MONEY

MRS. RUSSELL SAGE'S gift of $100,000 to the Teachers' college of Syracuse university, coming so closely on several other gifts of similar size, indicates how busy she is at the task of doing good with the money her husband worked so assiduously to acquire.

It is evident that in the long years when "Uncle Russell" was at work, and when the quiet, unostentatious wife was supposed to be equally busy with her small domestic affairs, she was acquiring a vast knowledge of worthy institutions, for she is known to be extremely cautious in her donations, and yet she makes them with great dispatch.

How much occupied Mrs. Sage is with her new work is indicated by the manner in which she announced the gift of $125,000 to the Seamen's Friend society a few months ago. Col. Slocum, her brother, who is president of the society, had told her about the plan for a new home for "Jack ashore" down on the water front, but the matter had not been discussed by them for several weeks prior to St. Patrick's day. When she and Col. Slocum were sitting in a window of the Sage residence, opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral, watching the parade, when suddenly Mrs. Sage turned to Col. Slocum and said:

"I have been thinking about your plans for a home for seamen. It seems to me that it is an excellent idea, one that is sure to help many a poor man, and I have decided to give $125,000 for it."

PROSECUTION FOR CAPITOL FRAUDS

PERSONS WHO MULCTED PENNSYLVANIA TO BE BROUGHT TO JUSTICE.

Eighteen Will Be Sued—Final Report of the Investigating Committee Submitted to Gov. Stuart Who Promises Vigorous Action.

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 17.—Criminal and civil proceedings against all persons concerned in the fraudulent transactions in connection with the construction and furnishing of Pennsylvania's $13,000,000 capitol is recommended in the final report of the capitol investigation commission, made to Gov. Stuart, Friday.

Eighteen persons are named in the report as being involved in one way or another in the irregular transactions, and the matter is referred through the governor, is urged to act at once.

Eighteen Persons Named.

The persons named and against whom either criminal or civil suits are recommended are John H. Sanderson, of Philadelphia, contractor for furnishings; Jos. M. Huston, architect, and Stanford Lewis, his assistant; J. H. Shumaker, of Johnstown, former superintendent of the board of public grounds and buildings; W. H. Snyder and E. B. Hersheurg, former auditors general; W. L. Mathues and Frank G. Harris, former state treasurers; Congressman F. Bond Cassel, president of the Pennsylvania Construction company which supplied the metallic casings and furniture; Geo. F. Payne, who built the capitol, and his partner, Charles G. Wetter; Chas. P. Kinsman, Wallis Bolliet, John G. Nouderer and Geo. K. Storm, who organized the Pennsylvania Bronze company which supplied the leaded lighting fixtures to Sanderson; Frank Irvine, an auditor in the auditor general's office; Geo. C. Town, bookkeeper under Shumaker, and the international Manufacturing and Supply Company, which bid against Sanderson for the capitol furnishing contract.

Vigorous Prosecution Promised.

The report was presented to the governor by Chairman Fisher in the presence of the commission. After receiving it Gov. Stuart issued a statement in which he said: "I will transmit the report to the attorney general for his action and I can assure the people of Pennsylvania that there will be a vigorous prosecution of every person whom the evidence may show to have been guilty of any criminal offense in connection with the construction and furnishing of the state capitol.

"Wherever the evidence submitted shows that there has been any money wrongfully or fraudulently taken from the state treasury, civil suits will be commenced to compel restitution."

CONNOR'S RAILWAY HIT.

Wisconsin Commission Scores Practices of Lieutenant Governor's Road.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 17.—That the practices of the Marathon County Railroad company of which Lieut. Gov. W. D. Connor, are "unlawful, inequitable and socially and economically parasitic" is the opinion of a special train banded down by the railroad commission Friday on a complaint lodged against the road by Nicholas Strevener.

The commission found that in some cases passengers were carried free over this road and, in many cases, less than carload lots of lumber did not have to pay freight. It was also disclosed that the company did not publish a tariff schedule as is required by law.

Toledo Maccabees Beat Drilled.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 16.—Toledo company, Capt. Julius Geloor, Buckeye division, was declared Thursday to be the best drilled company in the uniformed rank Knights of the Maccabees of the World now in biennial encampment at the Jamestown exposition. It was awarded the $600 silver trophy offered in the Maccabees contest in which Toledo, Cleveland and Auburn, N. Y., companies participated.

Los Angeles Celebrates Founding.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 16.—The anniversary of the founding of the city by Spanish padres 135 years ago was celebrated Thursday under the auspices of the Society Larrena DeLos Angeles. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee commanded the Spanish forces at Pueblo and surrendered to Fremont, was in charge of the exercises at night and there was a celebration, reviving all the old Spanish customs of the city.

Michigan Woman Kills Her Husband.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Aug. 16.—James A. Conley was shot and killed at 38 Commerce street Thursday afternoon by Madeline Conley, his wife. The man came home at two o'clock and found the door of the house locked. He was climbing through a window when the woman shot him. Conley ran outside and fell dead. It is said another man was the cause of the trouble. The woman was arrested.

Goshen Wins Choral Contest.

Warsaw, Ind., Aug. 17.—Goshen, Ind., Friday won a majority of the numbers in the National Junior Choral contest at Winona Lake. Warsaw and Winona also figured in the winnings. The program ended with a chorus of 250 young voices.

MUST SHOW JUDGE LANDIS

ALTON IMMUNITY BATH PASSED UP TO WASHINGTON.

Inquiry Adjourned Until Government Officials Decide Whether Pledge Is to Be Kept.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—Attorney General Bonaparte must convince Judge Landis that there can be no prosecution of the Chicago & Alton railway without a violation of good faith on the part of the government before he will stop the investigation of the road's relations with the Standard Oil company of Indiana by a federal grand jury that was organized Wednesday morning. That the attorney general may be given sufficient opportunity to make this showing the grand jury was directed to adjourn until September 3 before examining evidence against the Alton.

This method of meeting an unusual situation after he has ordered an inquiry into the alleged law violations by the Alton railroad was adopted by Judge Landis Wednesday morning and was expressed in his charge to the jurors after they had been given the grand jury oath. What action will be taken by the grand jury when it meets again September 3 will depend entirely, the court indicated, upon the conclusions of the attorney general as to what good faith requires the government to do.

He ordered that a transcript of the record in the Standard Oil case showing what evidence the Alton railroad had really contributed to the conviction of the Indiana corporation be sent to the attorney general for examination. If the latter concludes that the railroad has lived up to the promises that obtained for the road assurance of immunity and the official at the head of the department of justice shows the court that no prosecution can proceed without a violation of the immunity agreement, then the Alton will escape and the grand jurors will not make an investigation.

POPE COMPANIES FAIL.

Receivers Appointed for Big Concern in Several States.

New York, Aug. 16.—Receivers for the Pope Manufacturing company and its subsidiary company, the Pope Motor Car company, which are engaged in the manufacture of automobiles and bicycles, with main offices and plant at Hartford, Conn., were appointed Wednesday in New York. New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Similar action will be taken shortly in Illinois, Ohio, Indiana and Maryland, where the companies own plants.

The petitions filed by the Mounsell-Kelly company, of Toledo, O., asking for receivers, show the total assets of both companies to be $13,306,570, with total liabilities reaching $1,974,236. The difficulties of the Pope companies were the direct result of a curtailment of loans and reduction of loans on notes.

BOMB FOR LORD ASHTOWN.

Irish Landlord Has a Narrow Escape from Death.

Clonmel, Ireland, Aug. 16.—Lord Ashtown, one of the landlords recently active in the cattle grazing war has aroused the most bitter animosity, narrowly escaped death Wednesday morning from the explosion of a bomb which partly destroyed the hunting lodge where he was sleeping.

There has been considerable feeling against Lord Ashtown arising from a remark he made in the course of a speech on the cattle grazing war. This remark was: "I would rather have bullocks on my estates than Catholic laborers."

HUNCHAKIST LEADERS TAKEN.

New York Police Say Chiefs of Gang Have Confessed.

New York, Aug. 16.—According to an announcement by Deputy Attorney Jerome and Deputy Police Commissioner Woods the detective bureau has arrested the ringleaders of the Hunchakist secret society and has obtained confessions from them, which will end the reign of terror of the organization. Kasak Jelalian, arrested Sunday night, confessed to Mr. Jerome, the police say, after a grueling examination which lasted for more than six hours, that it was he and no other who had directed the murders of Father Karper Vartasian, whose body was cut to pieces and the wealthy rug merchant Hovsep Mooradian, who was found with his office near Union square.

BLOODY TRAGEDY IN NEW YORK.

Man Murders Wife and Is Killed by His Daughter.

New York, Aug. 16.—George Wasser, 57 years of age, murdered his wife and was in turn slain by his daughter at the home of the women in Harlem Thursday. Wasser fired upon his wife and then exchanged shots with his daughter. The latter was not wounded.

Mrs. Wasser soon succumbed to her injuries and her husband died a little later. The daughter was arrested. She asserted that the father had persistently practiced cruelties upon his family.

Trade Secretary of New Mexico.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Nathan Jaffa, of Roswell, N. M., was appointed secretary of New Mexico Wednesday to succeed Secretary Reynolds, resigned.

Washington, D. C.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—President S. J. Small's order for a general strike of commercial telegraphers, issued early Friday morning, did not seem to meet with the response the union officials had expected. In Chicago the additions to the strikers' forces were few and in New York the order had little apparent effect on the situation.

Friday afternoon the operators employed by the Chicago brokerage firm of Haliburd, Warren & Chandler struck, and word was received that the wire men of three of the biggest brokerage houses in St. Louis had walked out.

Why Brokers' Man Are Slow.

The delay of the Chicago operators in brokers' offices was explained by the men themselves, several of whom were interviewed while at their work, by saying that the brokers who had not already signed the union agreement were expected to before night. Word came from New York that all of the principal brokers there had "signed up." In Chicago the firm of Finley, Barrel & Co. was added to the list of those that have signed the new agreement demanded by the operators. The operators of that firm are said to have threatened to strike when they first reported for work Friday, but the trouble was averted.

At the offices of the Standard Oil company it was said the leased wire men were all working as usual. The manager in charge of the telegraph department declined to say whether there was a union contract.

There was not much surprise among the strikers that the order had little effect at the stockyards, for the union leaders admit that the men in the plants, except those that struck at the plants of Armour & Co., are not well organized.

May Arbitrate Later.

A conference between Small and President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor resulted in a renewal of the arbitration talk that grew unpopular with the Chicago strikers earlier this week. President Small said he would accept the offices of the general board of arbitration of the federation.

At the close of the interview President Gompers gave out this statement:

"The offices of the general board of arbitration of the American Federation of Labor will be acceptable to the general executive committee of the telegraphers' union under satisfactory conditions. These conditions have not yet been fully worked out. The arbitration board consists of President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers of America, President Daniel J. Keefe of the Longshoremen's union, and myself. Frank W. Perkins, president of the Cigarmakers' Union of America, will very likely be called in to confer with us. I presume notice of this action will be served on officials of the telegraph companies, but as yet there is nothing to be said about this."

General Strike Called.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—President Sylvester J. Small, of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, issued the following general strike order at two o'clock Friday morning:

"To All Commercial Telegraphers: All telegraphers employed by the commercial telegraph companies, the Associated Press and private and leased wires, not working under a union agreement, are hereby called upon to cease work immediately by authority of the president and general executive board of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America. S. J. Small, President."

Decision Reached at Midnight.

Although the strike order was decided upon at midnight it was not made public until two hours later, following a conference at the Briggs house in which President Small, Secretary Russell, President Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, and several other leaders were present.

At the Briggs house conference it also was decided definitely that there should be no strike of the 47,000 railroad telegraphers of the United States. These operators will be called upon shortly to contribute a strike fund of $60,000. Two of their general officers attended the conference.

The action submitted to mean an additional strike of around 5,000 men in the country, including all the remaining commercial operators in the big packing houses. It will take out 75 men in the Chicago stockyards alone, in addition to the 40 who quit at Armour's.

Gompers in Commanding Position.

Mr. Gompers in this crisis, is the man who arrives, to exercise a powerful influence over the situation aside from the years of experience that he has had in labor difficulties. He will attend in Washington next week the quarterly meeting of the executive council and of the federation of labor. That board will vote upon the advisability of a strike sentiment upon the 2,000,000 members of the federation of labor. In other words, the federation of labor is expected to furnish the sinews of war.

Mr. Small's attitude on arbitration was briefly expressed thus:

"We will consider arbitration when the time comes."

He indicated that the time was not ripe for arbitration and might not be for some time.

Executive Board Acts.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—With nearly 10,000 operators on strike in 96 cities Wednesday afternoon, the general executive board of the Commercial Telegraphers' union sent out a decidedly warlike message to the presidents of the boards of trade and all other exchange and commerce bodies in the United States and Canada, warning them to get their business into shape to combat within 24 hours a strike which by that time shall have "spread to every branch of the commercial telegraph service."

Fifty operators employed by Armour & Co. at the stockyards walked out at 1:30 p. m. Wednesday, following the refusal of that firm to sign the new wage contract granting an increase of salary from $20 to $25 a week. It is believed that this will be followed by a strike of the 100 operators employed to work leased wires by the other packing firms.

Monster Explosion of Gasoline.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 17.—Several thousand gallons of gasoline in the Standard Oil company's tank at Brodhead, Wis., exploded Friday afternoon, destroying the tank and causing a panic in the town. A passenger train was standing nearby when the explosion occurred. All the car windows were broken, but no one was injured.

FAR FOR ARENDTS TO VISIT MRS. EDDY

COUNSEL AGREE ON ANOTHER CALL OF MASTERS AT PLEASANT VIEW HOME.

PRIVATE LETTERS ARE READ IN EVIDENCE

In One of Them She Says Her Life Is as Pure as That of Angels—Thinks Frye Is "Honest But Disagreeable."

Concord, N. H., Aug. 19.—Counsel before the masters in the Eddy inquiry agreed to have two allenists accompany the masters on a visit to Mrs. Eddy at Pleasant View. Although Gen. Streeter, for Mrs. Eddy, objected at first, he said he would consult his client before the next session of the hearing on Tuesday and let it be thought that he will at that time agree to the proposal.

Letters from Mrs. Eddy in her own handwriting were introduced by which the plaintiffs seek to prove that she was influenced in her business affairs by fear of what she calls "malicious animal magnetism."

Defends Her Life and Work.

In one of these letters, addressed to her "dear son," George William Glover, and dated Concord, N. H., April 27, 1898, Mrs. Eddy defends the purity of her life and of her work and says the test is the fruits shown by the works.

She says: "My life is as pure as that of the angels," refers to the great growth of Christian science, and of her own prominence as the founder, and then writes as follows:

Talks of Her Circumstances.

"Now, what of my circumstances? I name first my home, which of all places on earth is the one in which to find peace and enjoyment. But my home is simply a house and a beautiful landscape. There is not one in order at two o'clock Friday morning: body. I have no congeniality with my help inside of my house; they are no companions, and scarcely fit to be my help.

Her Estimate of Frye.

"I adopted a son, hoping he would take Mr. Frye's place as my bookkeeper and man of all work that belongs to man. But my trial of him has proved another disappointment. His books could not be audited, they were so incorrect, etc., etc. He is the most disagreeable man that can be found, but this he is, namely (if there is one on earth) an honest man, as all will tell you who deal with him. At first mesmerism swayed him, but he returned through my forbearance to govern himself."

Adds a Postscript.

"P. S.—My letter is so short I add a postscript. I have tried about one dozen bookkeepers and had to give them all up, either for dishonesty or incapacity. I have not had my books audited for five years, and Mr. Ladd, who is famous for this, audited them that week and gave me his certificate that they are all right. I myself in some places not quite plain, and he showed Frye how to correct that.

"When I can get a Christian, as I know he is, and a woman that can fit his position, I shall do it. But I have no time to receive company, to call on others, or to go out of my house only to drive. I am always busy with work for others, but my body to help me even to get help such as I would choose. Again,

"MOTHER."

Lays Trouble to Mesmerism.

In a letter to her adopted son, Dr. E. J. Arendt, dated March 17, 1897, Mrs. Eddy said: "But you were governed by hypnotism to work against me," referring to incidents connected with the dismissal of Dr. Eddy from a Philadelphia church.

In another letter to Dr. Eddy Mrs. Eddy used the expression: "You are better to be removed from M. A. M. in Boston."

WRITER COMMITS SUICIDE.

John Owone' Infatuation for Woman Ends in Death.

Cincinnati, Aug. 19.—John E. Owens, well-known newspaper writer of this city, committed suicide at the Mrs. "Bonnie" Tucker, the former wife of a politician of this city, led to his death. He landed in Mexico City. On her refusal Owens committed suicide.

Escapade in Mexico City.

The tragic death of Owens was the climax of his sensational escapade with Mrs. Tucker in Mexico City, Mexico, months ago. The two had traveled some time and finally reached the Mexican capital. There Owens caused a sensation by appealing to the police to locate his "wife," who had left him. It was said that she had decided to leave him on account of his insane jealousy.

Fleshlight Powder Burns Woman.

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Mrs. Samuel Kraft, 40 years old, was seriously injured when fleshlight powder exploded fn a photograph shop. The building was set on fire and destroyed.

CAME PRETTY FAST FOR HIM.

At That, He Had Had Only What the Doctor Ordered.

A Philadelphia physician says that not long ago he was called to see an Irishman, and among other directions told him to take an ounce of whiskey three times a day. A day or so later he made another visit and found the man, while not so sick, undeniably drunk.

"How did this happen?" the physician demanded of Pat's wife, who was hovering about solicitously.

"Sure, docther, an' 'tis just what you ordered, an' no more, that he had," she protested.

"I said one ounce of whisky three times a day; that could not make him drunk," the physician said. "He has had much more than that."

"Well a drop more, docther, dear," she declered. "Sure an' ol did't know just how much an ounce was so ol went to the drug store an' asked, an' the lad—he's a broth of a boy, too—told me that an ounce was 16 drams and Pat has that three regular, an' no more!"—Harper's Weekly.

Merchants Visit Milwaukee.

Come to the city of beautiful parks, clean streets, fine buildings, large factories, immense jobbing houses and hospitable people. Spend your time during the Annual Fall Buying Season and you can bring your families and combine business with pleasure.

The recent lawa in Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and neighboring states, by which passenger fares are reduced to two cents a mile, are of great advantage in merchants in the territory who wish to come to Milwaukee. After August 25, 1907, merchants may buy a regular ticket to Milwaukee at a rate of two cents a mile (the lowest rate now given for any occasion) and will not be required to secure certificates or be restricted to certain dates. This offers decided advantages to Milwaukee patrons. Write in Milwaukee call for information at the Milwaukee Association of Jobbers and Manufacturers, 45-49 University Bldg.

Used Ink for Bluing.

"One can never be too careful about apparently harmless articles lasting about the house," said a housewife the other day. "Not long ago my husband bought home one of those little bottles of ink from the office. It had got to be such a nuisance buying one of the small five-cent ones every time we ran out of ink, that he said he would bring home a supply.

"About a week after that I got a new maid, and when she did the washing she took the big bottle of ink for bluing. Of course nothing but our white clothes in the washing was ruined."

Her Secret Sorrow.

"That woman over there has some hidden sorrow," declared the sympathetic one, as she came in and took her seat at a table not far away. "I have often noticed her. Sea. Her companion orders everything she could possibly want, and even she sits there silent with a face like a mask. I em awfully sorry for her."

"Don't you worry," advised her pessimistic friend. "That's her husband with her. She's bored, that's all."

A Misogynist.

"Me father," said Mrs. Murphy, "always sits up whin a lady eathers the room."

"The ould man is too suspicious," Mr. Murphy grunted. "I never seen the woman yit that 'ud be mane enough to hit ye when yo was sittin' down."—Chicago Daily News.

Man does what he can, and bears what he must, and the man by which he calls the result is left to each to decide; a clever man calls it happiness.—Goethe.

FOOD FACTS

Grape-Nuts

FOOD

A Body Balance

People hesitate at the statement that the famous food, Grape-Nuts, yields as much nourishment in a dime meal as can be absorbed by the system from ten pounds of meat, bread, wheat or oats. Yet such is the exact might concerning the nourishment than one pound of Grape-Nuts, but not in shape that the system can assimilate it, as the body can take up from one pound of Grape-Nuts.

Why and how are the selected parts of wheat and barley which are prepared and by natural means predigested, so wonderfully effective as a food?

A Mo. man says: "I have gained ten pounds on Grape-Nuts food. I can truly say I never enjoyed a meal more." He had been eating meat, bread, etc., right along, but there was no ten pounds of added flesh until Grape-Nuts food was used.

One curious feature regarding true food is that its use will reduce the weight of a corpulent person with unhealthy flesh, and will add to the weight of a thin person not properly nourished. There is abundance of evidence to prove this.

Grape-Nuts balances the body in a condition of true health. Scientific selection of food elements makes Grape-Nuts good and valuable. Its delicious flavor and powerful nourishing properties have made Grape-Nuts famous. There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Camping on the Fair Grounds.

Secretary C. N. Cosgrove, of the Minnesota State Fair, has laid plans for a most delightful camping ground at this year's state fair. He will utilize a handsome grove on the new part of the fair grounds—the forty acres purchased this spring northeast of the main part of the grounds. There are some very fine trees on this forty and the tents will be set up among the trees and in a location which will be especially convenient to the new dairy and poultry buildings and the agricultural machinery division of the fair.

A tent can be rented for about $2 for the week, and a season ticket entitling the holder to remain on the grounds during the entire week may be purchased for $2. A family dining in this way can either do its own cooking in camping out style or buy meals at some of the restaurants on the grounds. The camp will be entirely sanitary, as there will be an abundant supply of pure water, and the new sewer system will reach the camp ground some time before the opening of the fair. This year's fair will be held in the week of September 2 to 7.

GREAT $25,000 POULTRY BUILDING.

The management of the Minnesota State Fair is just completing a fine new poultry building, which will be occupied during the coming fair, September 2 to 7. It is the largest poultry exhibition building in the world and is admirably adapted to the needs of the poultry exhibitors. The architects, Thorl, Allin & Fisher, have secured a maximum of light and air and floor space at a minimum of cost, the building being 187 feet long and costing $25,000.

Strike Broken.

Hibbing—While no reports of trouble are sent to the governor's office from the iron range, and the constantly increasing number of men returning to work seems to indicate that the strike is broken, its effect will be keen in the next balance sheet of the state, according to State Auditor S. G. Iverson. He expects that the receipts from royalties on the ore taken from the state lands will be decreased to some extent owing to the idleness of the mines for several weeks during the season, which is none too long at best in the open pit mines. It is feared that the mines will not be in full operation and turning out the average product for a few weeks, and as the royalties are on the tons of ore taken from the mines the receipts from this source undoubtedly will be somewhat less than the amount anticipated.

Good Receipts.

St. Paul—The state board of control transmitted to State Auditor Iverson the report of the receipts at the various state institutions for the month of July, with checks for the amounts.

The total receipts at all the institutions was $26,000.17, distributed as follows: Anoka asylum, $8; Hastings asylum, $63.25; Fergus Falls hospital, $499.35; Rochester hospital, $616.66; St. Peter hospital, $4,180.45; Faribault, $59.66; school for the deaf, Faribault, $637.86; school for the feeble minded, Faribault, $2,497.39; state public school at Owatonna, $390; state training school, Red Wing, $174.62; reformatory at Saint Cloud, $6,704.95; prison at Stillwater, $9,276.09.

BRIEF NOTES.

Northfield—Rev. F. M. Garland, of Bank Center, has accepted the call of All Saints Episcopal church of this city and will take immediate charge of the pastorate.

St. Paul—The Soo Line has issued a call for men to assist in harvesting the crop in the territory tributary to this road. It is estimated that more than 6,000 men will be needed.

Ellsworth—John A. Valley, an alleged deserter from the Eleventh cavalry two years ago, was arrested here by City Marshal Reddy and immediately will be taken to the military prison at Fort Snelling. The reward of $50 offered for his capture will go to Mr. Reddy.

Shawano—Herman Zernicke, one of the best known young farmers of this part of the county, died suddenly after but two days' sickness. He was literally choked to death by a malignant growth in his throat which caused the entire closing of his windpipe. About two years ago he married the young widow of Gustav Klebesadel. She and two children survive. Her first husband was struck and killed by lightning in the spring of 1902.

Washington—Minnie V. Hines is appointed postmistress at Roosevelt, Kittson county, Minn.

Settled.

St. Paul—The old controversy over the title to land included in a grant to the old Hastings & Dakota railroad has been closed by the delivery by State Auditor S. G. Iverson of deeds to 20,904.47 acres of land to the trustees of the road. The title to this land has been involved in litigation twelve years, and the termination of the controversy was made possible by an act of the legislature passed last winter.

The land grant was made by an act of congress, and the list of lands included were certified to the state for the benefit of the company. Later complication arose, however, and in 1895 the Minnesota legislature declared the land grant forfeited. The grant having originated in an act of congress, however, the federal authorities refused to pay any attention to the legislative act, and the company took the matter into the courts, with the result that its title to the land was confirmed.

Ever since the passage of the act of 1895, however, the state officials have refused to issue deeds for the land, in view of the fact that the state legislature had ordered the grant forfeited. As the title of the railroad has been upheld by the courts the legislature last winter passed an act repealing the act of 1895. This cleared the way for a settlement of the question, and Gov. Johnson has now signed the deeds which will give the settlers on the lands in question a clear title to their lands. While they have heretofore been in undisturbed possession of the land, the failure of the state to issue the deed left a cloud on the title.

The deeds just issued cover lands located in eight of the counties of the state, as follows: Swift, 11,119.28; Stevens, 6,191.18; Big Stone, 2,061.46; Chippewa, 1,998.80; Kandiyohi, 240; Yellow Medicine, 160; Lac qui Parle, 33.67; McLeod, 40.1.

BRIEF NOTES.

St. Paul—The Ryan hotel has been robbed systematically of silverware during several days. Property to the value of $500 is missing. The police are on the lookout for two former employees.

St. Paul—William L. Qualey, 405 Dayton avenue, manager of the St. Paul Marble and Granite Works, 178 West Fourth street, fell in front of his place of business mortally wounded from a pistol bullet in his abdomen. He died at the city hospital an hour later.

St. Paul—There is no intention on the part of the health department to make any change in the rules to prevent the spread of smallpox or other infectious diseases. This means that the smallpox cases will be quarantined as before and that the Dale street infirmary will continue to be used in such cases.

White Bear—Carl Gausewits, 22 years old, son of the Rev. Carl Gausewits, former pastor of St. John's German Evangelical church, Margaret and Hope streets, and now of Milwaukee, died while he was bathing at Mahtomedi. His death is thought to have been caused by heart trouble, resulting from a shock.

St. Cloud—Two more bold attempts at burglary have been reported to the police. The residence of Charles Michaelson at East St. Cloud was entered by a man through a raised window. Mr. Michaelson was aroused, and securing a club, made after the intruder. The man dove head first out of the window and escaped in the darkness.

Crookston—After piling a wagon-load of hay against the front of the building to deaden the noise, robbers last night broke through the rear door of the Farmers State Bank at Newfolden, blew open the safe and stole $2,000.

St. Paul—State immigration commissioners begin to secure data about Minnesota to carry on advertising campaign.

Crookston—High water above the great dam in the Red river at this place has become a serious menace to the city.

SECRETARY PLAYS GOLF AND FISHES IN CANADA.

Not Considered Great Men by Boatman—Justice Harlan and Ohioan Constantly Chaff Each Other on Links.

Manoir Richelieu, Pointe au Pic, Quebec.—"The stout gentleman over there addresses the bell with unusual vigor and enthusiasm," observed the Canadian member of parliament, "but," and here he adjusted his eyeglasses, "if it was his intention to land on the fifth green he has taken an easterly direction, while the green is in the southwest. His elderly companion seems to be making a better record over the course."

By and by the stout gentleman and his elderly companion, each mated by a little Canuck coddy, appeared on the broad veranda of the clubhouse, where the Canadian member of parliament had the pleasure of being formally presented to William H. Taft, secretary of war of the United States of America, and to Justice Horlee, of the Supreme court of the United States of America.

If you were to ask the secretary of war, as he sits sunning himself in the open, with his cap lifted back from his broad forehead, what interests him most in his daily routine of vacation he would reply, "Hordening my muscles, training down and tanning my nose."

To go over the greens, climb the hillocks and cross the stretch of brief swamp with Taft and Harlan is a treat to one who likes to study human nature. The two men chaff each other from the time they set out until they leave the links with the awful bogy still unbeaten.

The judge is 72 years old, as straight as an arrow, with a bald head and a helo of long, grayish white hair that sticks out at sixes and sevens. His eye is as keen as an eagle's, his profile like a Roman and the color of his cheeks is as red as a cherry. He dresses loosely for golf, an old pair of baggy brown trousers, heavy brogans, a red golf jacket, a duck cap and, as astonishing as this news may appear to golfists, he carries an umbrella.

Crashing wagon spring gaitmen Taft goes out to ride. He usually has his brother as companion on these trips, as he also does when he goes to swim. It is in bathing that the secretary of war appears to the best advantage. The muscles of his great arms stand out in distinctive rolls so easily traced that an anatomist might label them. His chest development is nearly as pronounced as his girth. While there is flesh in abundance it is not flabby. If Taft has gained weight or lost it since he crossed the border the story told by the scales is kept n

TO GUARD GRAVE OF MOTHER.

Indian Woman Lawyer Opposes Removal of Burial Ground.

MISS LYDIA CONLEY

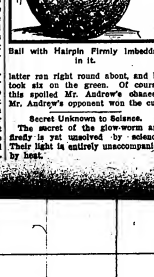
Kaosns City, Kan.—In order to protect the grave of her mother and to keep the government from despoiling it, Miss Lydia Conley, the only Indian woman lawyer in the country, has erected a cottage in the center of Huron cemetery here, and with a shotgun will drive off those who attempt to take possession of the property.

Uncle Sam has undertaken to sell the property, which is the last resting place of the old and famous tribe of Wyandot Indians, which once occupied the whole state of Ohio, and which was driven slowly westward, leaving the last stand in Kansas.

The government, at the request of the city authorities, has had a commission appointed to dispose of the property.

Miss Conley sought to prevent this in the federal circuit court, but she has been ruled against, and it was the ruling that caused her to prepare to guard her mother's grave when the time comes. She says no one shall move the bodies of her loved ones from their last resting place so long as she is able to lift a hand in protest.

Miss Conley has many of the popular attributes of the Indian: It is her boast that illness is a stranger to her, merely by reason of the fact that she instinctively obeys the Indian idea of health. She can work for days without food, and yet without feeling fatigue. In fact, her whole time is spent in a manner that would put a girl less hardy out of the run-



GOLF BALL HITS HAIRPIN.

Unlucky Accident by Which Scotch Player Came to Grief.

Boston.—The story comes from England of a golf match lost under conditions in which a woman's hairpin played a leading part.

The Scottish ladies' gold championship was played over the Troon links, and when the Hillhouse cup scratch competition, open to Ayrshire golfers, was played over the same course Robert Andrew, the holder, had an unlucky experience. Playing to the twelfth hole, his ball fell on a lady's hairpin, which must have been sticking in the ground points upward, as both points were firmly imbedded in the ball. He struck his second well, but it went no distance, and he took four to get on the green.

As there was no rule bearing on the point, he putted out with the hairpin adhering to his ball, but the latter ran right round about, and he took six on the green. Of course, this spoiled Mr. Andrew's chances. Mr. Andrew's opponent won the cup.

Entered as Second-class matter August 20, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Railroad Companys are are urgeing the people of northwestern Minnesota and North Dakota to lay in a supply of coal for next winter, for fear there will be another fuel famine. We can not understand why they do not do this, for if they can not make money enough to buy coal to keep them from freezing to death, they had better cut for tall timber before the snow flies.

Gasoline raised 6 cents a gallon when the U.S Federal court colected that fine from the Standard oil company of $29, 000 000. We suppose John D. Rockefeller made a fair profit out of the deal, but if he did not, look out for an advance in kerosen oil. John D. is a great Socialist, and is doing more for the advancement of that party than all the earth stone orators combined, but Teddy is coming on their trail and may get them yet. A good stiff jail sentence at stone broaking would be about the proper medicine to administer to that gang of law breakers, then they would get something that they could not pay by advanceing the price of oil.

A WISE BRITON.

He Half Suspected at the Start That the Feathers Weren't Edible.

A Brooklyn man who entertained an English relative tells this without the quiver of an eyelid:

"My cousin from London reached New York last summer, along with a hot wave. The crowds were deep before the soda water fountains on lower Broadway. He remarked that he did not comprehend how Americans could swallow that 'nasty slush.'

"'A mere preference,' I explained, 'we have many curious examples of that kind in this country. One of the most remarkable evidences of hostile appetite for fresh rather than salt is that of the American poultry lover who daily advertises in our New York papers for 1,000 feather beds. As you may well imagine, he is said to have entirely lost his taste for the flesh of the fowl.'

"'Oh, really' exclaimed the Englishman in quiet surprise. Nothing more was said till nine months later, when I opened my mail one day and found a marked copy of the London Times, which he had sent to me. He called my attention to this extract in an article on mob rule and lynching in America. 'It can hardly be possible that the supply of fur and feathers in the United States will be sufficient to the rate the mobs are covering the bodies of the poor wretches who are tortured and humiliated before they are drawn and quartered or burned at the stake.'

"'I fancy you will see your error after reading this,' he wrote. 'It is quite plain the man wanted the beds for another purpose and not, as you believe, to eat.'"—Brooklyn Eagle.

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the tartar used is first dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are then passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of resin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an incredibly thin film of resin on it.

From Deer Park.

Ben Kveste, one of the popular Highlanding farmers was a pleasant caller here Snuday.

Miss Lina Rustad and her brother Johnnie came up here last Saturday to visit their brother Bennie.

The Jonson Bros. passed thru here Wednesday with their threshing rig and are getting ready for the falls run.

Sam B Swanson, one of the famous Rhoda batchelders here, returned from Akely last Saturday on the new steam boat and will start horse keeping on the homastead.

Theaedore Hyland, returned home from the drive last Monday and will now assist his father with hayling.

For some reason or other the rats that are making their home with Bennie Rustad have grown so familiar that they want to share his bed with him. As Bennie is a bachelor, the rats seem to be of the opinion that he must have a bed fellow of some kind. In the meantime Bennie has his bed hung up by ropes, and when we last seen him he was out for a lark with the girls, so we guess he took the hint.

Rev E A Mostue will hold religious services at the Deer Park school house on Sunday the 25th of August at 11 o'clock A. M. Be sure and come.

HOW WE ARE FORMED.

A Few of the Many Marvels of the Human Body.

On an average man's body there are 340,000 hairs. Finding one every second it would take him five days eight hour working days to pull them all out. In his blood there are 25,000,000,000,000 red corpuscles. Laid out side by side they would cover a surface of 3,120 square yards.

The whole of the blood passes through a man's heart nearly twice in every minute. It weighs one-thirteenth of the entire body weight, and it moves in different parts of the body at speeds varying from ten feet to 1,666 yards (nearly one mile) an hour.

The fat of your body is dual. It becomes solid only when the body cools after death. It is one of your most useful constituents, forming a cushioning sheath to protect you from shock, as pads to preserve from shock, as the tips of the fingers, the toes and the heels and lying always ready as a reserve food supply when you can get nothing to eat.

Every time you sneeze from your brain through the skull into the scalp, which acts as a safety valve when the brain is congested with blood.

The skin cannot grow again once it is destroyed; hence the unsightly scars left by burns and severe wounds. Only the surface layer can renew itself. When the whole thickness is destroyed, it never reforms. This is the more curious as muscles, nerves, blood vessels and bones, all less liable to injury than the skin, can grow again.

You are really a water rather than a land animal. Although as a whole you live on dry land, your body consists of countless millions of separate living particles, and these are all immersed in the water which constitutes four-fifths of your substance.

Within the inner part of your ear, deep in the bone, is a quantity of fluid which acts as a spirit level and enables you to keep your balance.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Naturally.

Gunner—Yes, he is a champion golf player, and so is the girl he is going to marry. Not only that, the minister who will pefform the ceremony is very fond of the game.

Guyer—Ah, I suppose he will be pleased to link their names together.—Chicago News.

Bound to Crop Out.

"Yes, I believe I did say you were always lying about yourself."

"I'll have you to understand, sir, that I am not used to this kind of talk. I'm a gentleman, sir."

"There you go. Can't keep from it, can you?"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Time to Get Busy.

Her Husband—I thought you were going to visit your mother?

His Wife—And so I am.

Her Husband—Well, you had better begin to pack your trunk at once. The train leaves in forty-eight hours.—Detroit Tribune.

The Wealthy Angler's Tackle Outfit.

The wealthy angler who wants the best of everything has a special air tight oblong case or trunk for his fishing rods, which, being the best, cost about $50 each. He has a heavy surf casting rod, a lighter bay casting rod and a set of fly rods for fresh water fishing. His reels, of which he must have various types, cost $25 each and upward. For his fishing tackle there is a special trunk, in which are the best Irish linen lines, hooks and flies of all descriptions, stokers, swivels, squids, spoons, spinners, floats, artificial baits, etc. Such fishermen usually carry duplicate tackle and several duplicates of polo tips and such things as may be necessary to insure the total cost of a wealthy angler's tackle outfit ranges from $250 to $1,000.—New York Tribune.

Fire and Water.

Water will extinguish a fire because the water forms a coating over the fuel, which keeps it from the air, and the conversion of water into steam draws off the heat from the burning fuel. A little water makes a fire fiercer, while a large quantity of water puts it out. The explanation is that water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen. When, therefore, the fire chemically decompose the water into its simple elements it serves as fuel to the flame.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

It is reported that smallpox has broken out at Plummer. The land lady of the only hotel in the place was taken down with the disease last week, and the hotel has been closed and quarantized, but as the house was full of boarders that scattered in all directions it would be a difficult matter to tell how far, and in what direction the disease has been spread.

Stephen Singer, of the firm of Singer Bros. passed by here to day on his way from Kratka to Rhoda. He says they are doing a good business at Kratka and he proposes to build up a big trade down there, by selling the farmers their goods at bed rock prices. Furthermore the Singer Bros. do not hide their light under a bushel, but use printers ink to make the light shine.

An Arabian Legend.

The Arabians had a tradition that when the devil started forth from his own place to the garden of Eden he was too lazy to walk and begged all the animals, one after another, to carry him. All refused except the serpent, which was then a quadruped and the most beautiful of all beasts. Yielding to the entreaties of Satan, the serpent took up the devil on its back and carried him the rest of the way, un less he knows how far, and after the commissioners of the devil's entry into the garden became apparent the angels were commanded to took up the serpent and punish it, so Michael cut off its legs, and it was doomed henceforth to travel about on best it could on the ground.

Goldsmith's Generosity.

A beggar once asked alms of Oliver Goldsmith as he walked with a friend up Fleet street, and he gave her a shilling. His companion, knowing something of the woman, censured the writer for his excess of humanity, saying that the shilling was misapplied, as she would spend it for liquor. "If it makes her happy in any way, my end is answered," replied Goldsmith.

Another proof that the doctor's generosity was not always regulated by discretion was at a time when, after much delay, a day was fixed to pay the £40 due his tailor. Goldsmith procured the money, but a friend calling upon him and relating a piteous tale of his goods being seized for rent, the thoughtless but benevolent author gave him all the money. The tailor called, and was told that if he had come a little sooner he could have had the money, but that he had just parted with every shilling of it to a friend in distress, adding, "I would have been an unfeeling monster not to have relieved trouble when in my power."

A Plain Hint.

An elderly gentleman on his way to a quiet watering place in Scotland met in the railway carriage an old worthy who turned out to be a native of the place and, wishing to have a talk and at the same time learn something of the coast village, accosted him thus:

Village Worthy—Gravin' an' healthy, I should think see.

E. G.—Then it's considered one of the healthiest quarters around here?

V. W.—It should think see. There's no inside sickness there.

E. G.—It should think not. Have you never been sick?

V. W.—Never!

E. G.—How do you account for that?

How He Got a Drink.

An Indiana traveling man told a story the other day of an incident on the road. He was in the smoking car of an express train reading his paper when a man rushed in from the car behind the smoker, evidently in great agitation and said: "Has anybody in this car any whisky? A woman in the car behind has fainted!" Instantly dozens of flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork and put the bottle to his lips. With a long, satisfied sigh, he handed the flask back and remarked, "That did me a lot of good, and I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint away."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MR. FARMER

The Farmers' Tribune,

Sioux City, Iowa,

Is beyond a doubt the strongest agricultural weekly paper in the west.

It is published for the benefit of farmers of Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Nebraska and it champions your interests. It is edited by men who are thoroughly versed in agriculture. Mr. John Thompson, the editor, formerly of the University of Minnesota, is recognized as an authority on matters pertaining to agriculture. Mr. H. G. McMillan, general manager of this paper, is owner of one of the largest and best known breeding farms in the United States and he knows what an agricultural journal must be in order to be of the greatest value to its readers.

Among its contributors are:

Prof. C. F. Curtiss of the Iowa Agricultural College.
Prof. H. H. Smith of the Nebraska Agricultural College.
Prof. J. W. Wilson of the South Dakota Agricultural College.
Prof. T. L. Haecker of the University of Minnesota.

This paper is absolutely reliable in every respect.
It stops when subscriptions expire.

Elizabeth's Romance

By REBECCA HARDING DAVIS

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Elizabeth was engaged to be married next month. John Melvin did not like sitting under bushes, or in the moonlight—he had enough of out-of-doors on the farm, he said. Lizzy was paring peaches by the kitchen table with her mother the morning the matter was definitely settled.

Mrs. Woods had hoped for this for a long time. John Melvin was as steady as a rock, and his farm was his own, and unincumbered. There was a great weight lifted from her heart about Lizzy's future.

As for John, he, too, had been anxious about the matter for years. Elizabeth was very dear to him; yet he would never have married her if she had been a shrew, or wasteful. But she had no faults that he could discover. He had suddenly come into full daylight this morning.

People in the country, however, usually smother emotion under the commonplaces nearest at hand.

"Will you come out and show me your wallflowers?"

It was the stranger from New York, whom Mrs. Merrill had brought over for tea, who spoke. Elizabeth was so used to strangers that she had not noticed him before. She went before him now, glad to get away from them all, down through the dusky garden-paths to the wallflowers.

A queer-looking little man, Lizzy thought, turning to look at him sharply; with a bilious-yellow complexion, dead black eyes, and lank hair put behind his ears, dressed in a coarse brown suit of city cut, the gaping pockets stuffed with letters and cigars.

The stranger was very friendly. He told her he was a newspaper man.

Lizzy was dumb. Nobody who had not lived in a country village, and known the awe-approaching dread excited by a man who has "written for the press," can comprehend her emotion. They sat there until dark came. "We must go in, or we will have your knight down to reckon with me. You ought not to put the yoke about your neck, by-the-bye, until you had seen more of the world, Miss Lizzy. If you were a boy, how I should like you for compagnon out yonder exploring the west!"

Lizzy did not answer. If John came down, he undoubtedly had the right to break up this delicious dream which the last hour had brought. Why did she give him the right? The "yoke" galled her. If there had been any approach to flirtation in Hanlon's manner, her purity would have taken the alarm. But this intellectual sympathy—this wish that she were a boy and his compagnon; there was a greeting here of soul to soul, which she had never received from John Melvin, and in which was no disloyalty to him.

"Must you go now?" she said.

"Yes. I have an engagement with, with— These stupid duties are the chain wherewith we're darkly bound, after all, I think." He held her hand, pressed it slightly, and hurried away. The truth was, it was Mrs. Merrill's supper hour, and he had a keen remembrance of her fried chicken and waffles.

As for Lizzy, she sat still, to think. She had learned from her favorite histories that in every heroic life comes the crisis, the imminent moment when Fate must be met and grappled with. She thought it had come now; John Malvin, she acknowledged, was one of the noblest of men, generous, honorable to a fault, and loved her dearly. Of Hanlon she knew nothing. He was the acquaintance of a day. He might be weak, cruel, a gambler, or a roue; but he pleased her passion or her whim. To be sure, Hanlon did not love her. there was no chance that he ever would.

Night gathered around Lizzy as she sat alone. Her blood grew chilled, her head pained her. The outcry and persecution would be terrible if she broke her betrothal; she was not a strong girl, and she began to cry. "But I cannot marry him with the feelings that I have!" she sobbed. "I will go to John and tell him all," she cried, getting up.

Perhaps if she had had time to reach the house, the story might never have been told. But a hand was laid on her shoulder as she spoke.

"What's the 'all' you have to tell me, Elizabeth?"

"Oh, John!" (There was no need to tell all; half would do.) "I meant to say to you," pale and desperate, "that it must all stop. I cannot be your wife, John."

"Why not, Lizzy?" He laughed—a wild, discordant laugh, she thought.

"We are not alike. There is not that kindred instinct, that sympathy between those born under one star," trying to talk the dialect of all young women in her situation.

"What do you mean, Elizabeth?" he said.

The man was capable of passion, after all, and she had pushed him too far.

"I mean that you must go on your own road. I cannot marry you."

"If you don't marry me, Elizabeth Woods, my horse may break my neck, for aught I care!" and he flung her from him.

"John! John!" she cried, feebly.

But John was gone. The next moment she heard his horse's hoofs galloping down the creek road.

About ten o'clock her father came in. "The creek bridge is down," he said. "I told the commissioners 'twan't safe weeks ago."

"Did not John take the creek road going home, Lizzy?" said Mrs. Woods.

But Lizzy could not answer for the sudden terrible choking in her throat.

It was on Tuesday night that the bridge fell. Thursday, Friday passed without tidings of John Melvin. In the village there was no hope. The men had been dragging the creek, and firing a cannon over the water, in the hope of recovering the body. Late in the afternoon, the women about Lizzy saw a sudden confusion in the crowd of men and boys down on the bank. There was a running and hurrying together.

"They have found it," they whispered, shuddering, to each other.

But it was only a hat which had been dragged out of the water—a brown felt hat, which they all knew at once.

Suddenly there was a quick motion in the crowd about her, an oath or two, and a loud, cheerful voice exclaiming:

"Where? Why, to see about Brook's

"John! John!"

Alderney heifer, to be sure. Then we went over to the county fair. Yes, that's my old hat; it blew into the creek as I crossed the ford. Why, Lizzy, child!" and he picked her up and carried her like a baby into the house, holding her close to his breast, and when they were inside, kissed the wet, pale face passionately enough to satisfy even her.

"But you were angry with me, John? I thought you had gone to the bridge, meaning to die there!"

"Bless my soul, Lizzy! Do you take me for a fool? What would I die for? No; I wanted to see Brooks about the heifer, and went to tell you; but you were out of sorts that evening, and I let my temper get the best of me. So I thought I'd better stay away a day or two until we had both cooled off. I never would have known how you love me, if you had not thought me dead."

"No, neither am I sorry," said Elizabeth, quietly.

A day or two after, John said:

"Where is that little scribbling chap who was at Merrill's?"

"I don't know. I had quite forgotten him," answered Lizzy, which was quite true.

That evening, however, she received a large yellow envelope, with two or three columns of newspaper cuttings inclosed. She read it, growing angrily red.

"What is it, Lizzy?" asked John, who was watching her.

"Does that mean me?" the tears of mortification standing in her eyes.

"By George! here's the whole story! Pathetic incident-idyl of innocent love, broken in upon by Death's mournful summons. Village damsel—fair, ignorant, uncultured, save in the art of love—the manly Strephon for this Chloe. It's certainly you, Lizzy, for here is your name in full. But your friend must have left before the end, for here is a full account of the finding of my body, and a description of you insensible upon the sands beside it. I wonder he left you alive. Here is a note—did you see?"

Lizzy read it:

"My Dear Miss Woods—You will perceive that I have exerted the descriptive powers, which you were so kind as to approve, in your behalf. The story possessed fine elements for a sensational sketch, and I willingly exerted myself to make it as complete as possible for you, feeling only too happy that I was able to return the pleasure which the hours passed in your society gave me.
Yours faithfully,
BENJAMIN HANLON.

"P. S.—Necessarily, the sketch is not quite literal. I took the liberty of bringing Mr. Melvin's body to shore instead of his hat. We artists have our privileges, you know. I am most happy, for your sake, that it was the hat only which the waters drank down to muddy death. My wife, to whom I told the story, offers her good wishes with mine to both him and you. B. H."

John laughed heartily.

"Not a bad fellow, I take it; but half-witted, I suppose, Lizzy?"

"One of the vainest, weakest men that ever lived," cried Elizabeth, vehemently. "The very thought of the man disgusts me."

Dainty Petticoats

The two dainty petticoats shown here are made up in white cambric. The first has a shaped flounce, slightly gathered at the top, where it is fixed to the petticoat under a narrow crosswise band stitched at each edge; the lower edge is embroidered, and above the embroidery a band of lace insertion is sewn on. The camisole has a band of piece embroidery on the bust that is carried to the waist each side the front; the edge is trimmed with insertion and torchon lace, the insertion threaded by ribbon that is tied in a bow in the front.

Materials required for the petticoat: Four yards 40 inches wide, four yards insertion; for the camisole: ¾ yard 36 inches wide, one yard piece embroidery 18 inches wide, four yards lace, one and quarter yard insertion.

The second is made to touch the ground all round. The flounce is trimmed with two rows of insertion, with tucks between, and is put on under a heading of insertion; the edge of flounce is trimmed with muslin embroidery four inches wide.

Materials required: five yards 40 inches wide, about 14 yards insertion, six yards embroidery.

The camisole has a round yoke of lace, and is intended to be worn under transparent blouses; the puffed sleeves are finished with lace edging.

Materials required: One and half yard 36 inches wide, half yard piece lace, one and half yard lace edging.

THREE NOVEL FUNCTIONS

Pretty Decorations for Bridal Luncheon Table—Suggestions for Club Party—Candlelight Wedding.

Bridal Luncheon Table.

The attendants at the wedding which took place the same week that this affair was given were the only guests and the matron of honor (a recent bride) was the hostess.

All the appointments pertained to the event to follow. The centerpiece was a perfect little automobile, in which were seated the dearest of doll brides and an up-to-date men doll for the groom. A trunk, suitcase, hatbox and even umbrellas were in the seat besides the driver. A road of rice made a circle in which the bridal party followed the automobile. The guests exclaimed with delight on coming into the dining-room.

Each place was outlined by wreaths of myrtle and pink sweet peas, while dainty pink satin slippers held pink and white heart bonbons.

A large circular gilt basket was suspended over the table by pink and white tulle and a broad pink satin ribbon went to each place. These streamers were pulled at the close of the luncheon and each maid drew a jeweler's box of pink leather, her monogram on top in white lettering. These boxes contained the bride's gifts and were little finger rings, two hearts, with her initial and the groom's, the date inside. These circlets had been made to order and were exceptionally pretty.

For a Club Party.

A correspondent asks for suggestions in regard to entertaining a club of boys and girls, whose ages range from 16 to 20. Also what to serve for refreshments.

A jolly crowd of young people had the merriest kind of a time the other night with impromptu illustrations of book and song titles. I know the idea is not new, but somehow this entertainment never fails to please and there are always new ways presenting even with old subjects.

For instance, "The Lady of the Decoration," was instantly recognized by her medal on a blue ribbon. "The Man on the Box" was represented by a youth seated on an empty shoe box. "The Underside of Things" by Lillian Bell, was not guessed at all, this young man wore his coat and cap wrong side out the entire evening. "Les Miserables," "Wandering Jew," "Scarlet Stockings" and "Sweet Violets" were more easily divined.

The refreshments were lovely, fluffy kisses, were filled with peach ice cream, a spoonful of whipped cream on top. Dainty small cakes were passed.

A Candlelight Wedding.

A pretty revival of a very old custom is the candlelight wedding. A recent southern bride carried out the idea to the delight of the guests.

The hour was half after five, the rooms were lit with quantities of candles, many of the tall cathedral ones were used and the effect was lovely. Directly preceding the bridal party there were six young girls carrying tall lighted tapers. They stood on either side of the clergyman; in olden times they furnished the light for reading the service.

The dining-room table was decorated with two immense silver branched sticks that had been in the family for generations.

OF WHITE GRENADINE

Tunic Skirt Attractively Trimmed with Groups of Shirrings at Top and Bottom.

The tunic skirt is made with groups of shirring at the top and trimmed at the bottom with a wide band of fine lace and narrow heads of guipure.

The blouse is shirred at the shoulders and finished around the armholes and the V-shaped neck with the lace and guipure.

The chemisette and puffed sleeves are of lace, trimmed with bands of guipure. The puffs of the sleeves are separated by bands and knots of old blue ribbon, of which the girdle is also made. The straps and buttons are also of old blue.

For the Dainty Hand.

Very smart English chamois gloves in natural shades and in fawn and light grays, made elbow length, are worn with smart tailor frocks and with morning muslins and linens. Some of them instead of being buttoned are given shape at the wrist by bands of stitched chamois which clasp over from side to side. They are far nattier than the buttoned ones and are just as cheap.

Another novelty in gloves is a biscuit-colored suede elbow glove turned up at the top with a contrasting shade, such as wine or green or blue, to be worn with frocks to match the turned up part. These parts are by no means cuffs, the effect merely being that the glove has been turned back and is showing a contrasting lining.

A Doubtful Mode.

In their desire to be up to date women are taking tremendous chances with their eyesight and their hair. The double veil is a dangerous article. The inner veil is of net with fine dots, the outer veil of chiffon with large dots. The double set of dots and the effort to see through two meshes form a combination that will boom trade for oculists and opticians.

ARE PHYSICIANS' PRESCRIPTIONS NOSTRUMS?

To one not qualified, and few laymen are, to discriminate intelligently between physicians' prescriptions, proprietary medicines and nostrums, it may seem little short of a crime to hint even that physicians' prescriptions are in any manner related to nostrums; nevertheless, an impartial examination of all the facts in the case leads irresistibly to the conclusion that every medicinal preparation compounded and dispensed by a physician is, in the strict sense of the word, a nostrum, and that the average, ready-prepared proprietary remedy is superior to the average specially-prepared physicians' prescription.

What is a nostrum? According to the Standard Dictionary a nostrum is "a medicine the composition of which is kept a secret." Now, when a physician compounds and dispenses with his own hands a remedy for the treatment of a disease—and it is authoritatively stated that probably 60 per cent. of all physicians' prescriptions in this country are so dispensed—the names and quantities of the ingredients which constitute the remedy are not made known to the patient. Hence, since its composition is kept a secret by the physician, the remedy or prescription is unquestionably, in the true meaning of the word, a Simon-pure nostrum. Furthermore, the prescription compounded by the average physician is more than likely to be a perfect jumble—replete with therapeutic, physiologic and chemical incompatibilities and bearing all the earmarks of pharmaceutical incompetency; for it is now generally admitted that unless a physician has made a special study of pharmacy and passed some time in a drug store for the purpose of gaining a practical knowledge of modern pharmaceutical methods, he is not fitted to compound remedies for his patients. Moreover, a physician who compounds his own prescriptions not only deprives the pharmacist of his just emoluments, but he endangers the lives of patients; for it is only by the detection and elimination of errors in prescriptions by clever, competent prescriptionists that the safety of the public can be effectually shielded from the criminal blunders of ignorant physicians.

Nor can it be said that the average physician is any more competent to formulate a prescription than he is to compound it. When memorized or directly copied from a book of "favorite prescriptions by famous physicians," or from some text-book or medical journal, the prescription may be all that it should be. It is only when the physician is required to originate a formula on the spur of the moment that his incompetency is distinctly evident. Seemingly, however, the physicians of the United States are little worse than the average British physician; for we find Dr. James Burnett, lecturer on Practical Materia Medica and Pharmacy, Edinburgh, lamenting in the Medical Magazine the passing of the prescription and bemoaning the fact that seldom does he find a "final man" able to devise a prescription even in "good contracted Latin."

And what, it may be asked, is the status of the written prescription—the prescription that is compounded and dispensed by the pharmacist—is it, too, a nostrum? It may be contended that the patient, with the written formula in his possession, may learn the character of the remedy prescribed. So, possibly, he might if he understood Latin and were a physician or a pharmacist, but as he usually possesses no professional training and cannot read Latin, the prescription is practically a dead secret to him. Furthermore, the average prescription is so badly written and so greatly abbreviated that even the pharmacist, skilled as he usually is in deciphering medical hieroglyphs, is constantly obliged to interview prescribers to find out what actually has been prescribed. It may also be contended, that inasmuch as the formula is known to both physician and pharmacist the prescription cannot therefore be a secret. But with equal truth it might be contended that the formula of any so-called nostrum is not a secret since it is known to both proprietor and manufacturer; for it must not be forgotten that, according to reliable authority, 95 per cent. of the proprietors of so-called patent medicines prepared in this country have their remedies made for them by large, reputable manufacturing pharmacists. But even should a patient be able to recognize the names of the ingredients mentioned in a formula he would only know half the story. It is seldom, for instance, that alcohol is specifically mentioned in a prescription, for it is usually masked in the form of tinctures and fluid extracts, as are a great many other substances. It is evident, therefore, that the ordinary formulated prescription is, to the average patient, little less than a secret remedy or nostrum.

On the other hand, the formulae of nearly all the proprietary medicines that are exploited exclusively to the medical profession as well as those of a large percentage of the proprietary remedies that are advertised to the public (the so-called patent medicines) are published in full. Under the Food and Drugs Act, every medicinal preparation entering interstate commerce is now required to have the proportion or quantity of alcohol, opium, cocain and other habit-forming or harmful ingredients which it may contain plainly printed on the label. As physicians' prescriptions seldom or never enter interstate commerce they are practically exempt under the law. And if it be necessary for the public to know the composition of proprietary remedies, as is contended by those who, through ignorance or for mercenary reasons are opposing the sale of all household remedies, why is it not equally necessary for patients to know the composition of the remedy prescribed by a physician? Does any sane person believe that the opium in a physician's prescription is less potent or less likely to create a drug habit than the opium in a proprietary medicine? As a matter of fact, more opium-addicts and cocain-fiends have been made through the criminal carelessness of ignorant physicians than by any other means.

Unquestionably, there are a number of proprietary remedies on the market the sale of which should be prohibited, and no doubt they will be when the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act are rigidly enforced; many are frauds, pure and simple, and some are decidedly harmful. Of the average proprietary remedy, however, it may truthfully be said that it is distinctly better than the average physicians' prescription; for not only is its composition less secret, but it is prepared for the proprietor by reputable manufacturing pharmacists in magnificently equipped laboratories and under the supervision and advice of able chemists, competent physicians and skillful pharmacists. It should not be considered strange, therefore, that so many physicians prefer to prescribe these ready-prepared proprietary remedies rather than trust those of their own devising.

JUST THE SAME AS CURRENCY.

Third Son Felt He Had Nothing to Reproach Himself with.

William Knoepfel, of St. Louis, has invented and hopes to patent a secret plowing method for the cure of baldness. "A genuine cure for baldness," said Mr. Knoepfel the other day, should make a man very rich. Why, men grow rich on fake cures. It is amazing, it really is, what fakes some of these cures are. Yet there's money in them." Mr. Knoepfel gave a loud, scornful laugh. "In their crookedness they remind me," he said, "of the third son of the old eccentric. Perhaps you have heard the story? Well, an old eccentric died and left his fortune equally to his three sons. But the will contained a strange proviso. Each heir was to place $100 in the coffin immediately before the interment. A few days after the interment the three young men met and discussed the queer proviso and its execution. 'Well,' said the oldest son, 'my conscience is clear. I put my hundred in the coffin in clean, new notes.' 'My conscience is clear, too,' said the second son. 'I put in my hundred in gold.' 'I, too, have nothing to reproach myself with,' said the third son. 'I had no cash at the time, though; so I wrote out a check for $300 in poor, dear father's name, placed it in the coffin and took in change the $200 in currency that I found there.'"

PUSHED THE BEAR ASIDE.

Surveyor Tells of Experience He Does Not Care to Repeat.

To walk right up to a monster bear and try to shove it out of the way and then escape without so much as a scratch is an experience of a lifetime. Harry I Engelbright found it so a few days ago in Diamond canyon, above Washington, says a Nevada City correspondent of the Sacramento Bee. The young man, son of Congressman Engelbright, has just returned from the upper country, where he has been doing some surveying, and relates his thrilling experience. It was coming on dusk, at the close of the day's work. In the brush-lined trail he saw protruding what he thought were the hind quarters of some stray bovine. He walked up and gave the brute a shove. It came to its haunches with a snort that made his hair rise and caused him to beat a hasty retreat. The big brute looked around and then shuffled off into the woods. It was either asleep or else so busy eating oats from an old log that it failed to hear the young surveyor, whose footsteps were deadened by the thick carpet of pine needles. Later it was learned that the same bear, a monster cinnamon, had killed a dog earlier in the day. The dog ventured too close and with one blow of its paw the big beast sent it hurtling yards away, dead as a doornail.

Magnifying Choir Leader's Voice.

In the old village of Breybrook in Northamptonshire, England, is a monster trumpet, five six inches in length, and having a bell-shaped end two feet one inch in diameter. The trumpet is made up of ten rings, which in turn are made up of smaller parts. The use of this trumpet—only four of the kind are known to exist at the present day—was to magnify the voice of the leader in the choir and summon the people to the church service. At the present time neither the choir nor the service is in need of this extraordinary "musical instrument," but the vicar of the church takes care of the ancient relic and is fond of showing it to all visitors.

Painfully Exact.

A New England man tells of a prosperous Connecticut farmer, painfully exact in money matters, who married a widow of Greenwich possessing in her own right the sum of $10,000. Shortly after the wedding a friend met the farmer, to whom he offered congratulations, at the same time observing: "It's a good thing for you, Malachi, a marriage that means $10,000 to you." "Not quite that, Bill," said the farmer, "not quite that." "Why," exclaimed the friend, "I understood there was every cent of $10,000 in it for you!" "I had to pay $2 for a marriage license," said Malachi.

THE DAIRY

DAIRYMAN'S WATER TANK.

Made of Cement and of Convenient Shape and Size.

The bottom was first covered with rock to be used as a base and then the concrete was poured into the spaces. This made a floor some three to four inches thick. Then the walls were based on this floor. One by 12 planks were used to make the form or mold into which the rock and concrete were pecred to form the walls, which were made two feet high. The base of these walls are 15 inches wide and narrow in to ten inches at the top. The lime rock was broken to pieces the size of a goose egg and smaller. The concrete was made of one part cement to two parts sand, mixed with water to form a thin batter. This bardened in 24 hours, so that the boards could be removed and has got barder every day it has stood.

NECESSITY FOR CLEAN MILK.

Sentiment Growing in Favor of High Grade Product.

Whatever may happen in Denmark, there is a strong possibility that pasteurization is not to come into great favor in this country during the present generation. The enthusiastic American prefers bis milk raw rather than cooked, and the physicians largely agree with him. In New York city a great deal of antagonism has developed against the use by infants and invalids of pasteurized milk. We doubt if there is any good grounds for the contention of some physicians that pasteurized milk is not healthful, but the prejudice will count for the same in discouraging the pasteurizing of milk. In New York city the board of health tried to get through an ordinance compelling the pasteurization of all milk used in the city, but the aldermen sidestracked it, the influences against it coming from physicians. Many of these seem more ready to have their patients take their chances with germs of typhoid fever and scarlet fever than with a milk hard to digest. So far as we know there are no evidences that pasteurizing milk (at a temperature of 155 to 165 degrees) raises it to a high enough point to make it take on the character of cooked milk.

In the face of this prejudice, which seems to be growing, it becomes very necessary to produce milk on the farms under such conditions that it may be safely used. The reading, intelligent farmers are already doing this, but how shall influences be brought to bear on the men that never read an agricultural paper and never appear to care whether they produce clean or dirty milk? It is evident that the only remedy lies in preventing the dirty milk being sold.

MOVEMENT OF WATER IN SOIL.

Fact that It Has Little Lateral Motion Prevents Sub-Irrigation.

Most people imagine that water moves about freely in the soil and that its lateral movement (movement sideways) is considerable. This is not so, except in very sandy soils. Soil water moves very slowly sideways, through the soil. This was one of the great obstacles in the way of the success of sub-irrigation methods. Sub-irrigation has now but few friends, because of the fact that water introduced through pipes sunk two or three feet deep in the ground merely rose above the pipes and did not move laterally. This necessitated laying pipes very close together in the ground if a piece of land was to be thoroughly supplied with water. On the land of the experiment station at Logan, Utah, it was found that the lateral movement of water was only four and one-half feet for the first foot of depth and six feet for the second foot.

Pruning Fruit Trees.

There are some people that object to the pruning of fruit trees, as they say it is against nature. But that is not a matter worthy to be taken into consideration. Nature does not give large, plump, juicy sweet fruit, but generally fruit that is hard and hardy, but small and lacking in flavor. This particularly applies to the apple, a natural specimen of which has not yet been found that equals the improved varieties. We have enough data on the results of pruning trees to know that better fruit and more of it is obtained from pruned than from unpruned trees.

This is the season of the year when the farmer wishes, before the rain, he had a disc plow, but after it rains his old moldboard does the best work.

Remember These Points and Be a Better Dairyman.

Keep the cows clean, and do not compel or allow them to wade and live in filth. This means clean yards and clean, well bedded stalls. Everything short of this is positively repulsive and should not be tolerated in a civilized community.

Stop the filthy habit known as wetting the teats, by which is meant the drawing of a little milk into the hands with which to wet the teats before and during milking.

Wash all utensils clean in luke-warm water, afterwards washing in rain water, and rinsing in an abundance of boiling water, then exposing, until the next using, in direct sunlight, which is a good sterilizer.

Use milk pails, cans, etc., for no other purpose but to hold milk.

Keep all of these utensils all sour or tainted milk, even after they have been used for the day. Using them for this purpose at any time infects them so badly that no amount of washing is likely to clean them. Bacteria are invisible, and millions can find lodging in the thin film of moisture that remains after dishes are apparently clean.

Brush down the cobwebs and keep the barn free from accumulations of dust and trash.

Whitewash the barn at least once a year.

The reasons for the above suggestions are: All sour milk is due to the presence of germs. They are abundant in every stable; more abundant in a dark stable than in one lighted, for the reason that sunlight kills the germs; more abundant in a filthy stable than in a clean one. They are found on the udder of the cow and on the hair. They are found in the teats where they establish themselves in little colonies. Hence when the farmer milks on his hands and wets the teats he not only gets a colony of germs in the milk started, but he gets with it a solution of the water with there may be on the teats. The very first milk should be milked on the ground and not in the pail. Wash the germs out of the teats by two or three motions, letting these go on the floor. Germs harbor in the pails, hence the necessity for absolute cleanliness. A pail that has held sour milk will be admirably stocked with germs, which even warm water can not remove immediately.—W. J. Frazier.

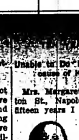
PICKINGS.

An ounce of good management is worth more than all the fussing, coddling and dragging ever done, or that can be done.

Why do we always hear of those wheat fields that turn out better than expected, but never a word of those that go the other way?

Moisture down to far or last long on unplowed or uncultivated fields at this time of the year. A hard packed soil cannot be plowed too soon after a rain.

More corn can be raised in three ways: Better seed, better soil preparation, better cultivation. These three factors worked together will reduce the acreage and increase the yield.



Balance of Soil and Water.

In the garden and in the fruit patch the balance of soil and water has a great deal to do with the success of the cultural operations. Many of our orchards do not produce the fruit they should because the soil has never been drained and the soil becomes waterlogged after heavy rains and so remains for a long time after rain weather has come. The drains in clay soil should be at least 3 inches deep, so that the water table may be lowered to that point. More drains in our orchards would make it possible to get better results from the fruit trees and fruit plants growing in them.

Like to Be Free.

There is one question we wish our folks would answer for us. If you have an unfenced lot around the hog pens, and the pigs have the run of it, they will grow as fast as the weeds and grass they are eating. Fence this in, then turn the same pigs in, and the growth is checked. You will soon notice the pigs are not doing as well. Is it the sense of freedom that makes the difference?

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton St., Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney troubles. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp, shooting pains. My head was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

Daniel Osiris, the Jewish banker and philanthropist, of Paris, who recently died, left a will in which he disposed of $13,000,000, giving $5,000,000 to the Pasteur institute.

The Reason Why.

"How did you come here?" said one Mexican bolt to an old acquaintance, as they met in the arena.

"How?" replied the other, with a glance around. "I may say I was roped in."

Not His Element.

"And if I give you money," said the philanthropist, "will you promise to go and take a bath?"

Redface Leary drew himself up to his full height.

"A bath! And is it a mermaid you take me for?" he cried bitterly.

Cunning Chap.

"Yes," confessed the blushing girl with the white parasol, "I thought it rather odd that Jack should keep on asking about our college yell. Finally, to get rid of him, I told him it was three yells in quick succession."

"What then?" asked her chum.

"What then? Why, the goose kissed me three times before I could remonstrate and when I gave a yell for each kiss mamma thought I was giving the class yell."

Architects and Closets.

An architect, says a writer, complains that women have a mania for closets and that when a woman is allowed any liberty in the matter she changes his whole architectural plan in order to make room for them. Perhaps, he says, makes him a laughing stock among his fellow architects. This is very interesting, but why do architects make plans if not to make every effort themselves to secure convenience? A house may be architecturally perfect and yet not fit to live in, and it certainly is not if there is not closet room enough.

WHAT'S THE USE!

To Pour in Coffee When it Acts as a Vicious Enemy.

Fasters have gone without food for many days at a time but no one can go without sleep. "For a long time I have been sleeping hardly a night, lying awake for two or three hours during the night but now I sleep sound every night and wake up refreshed and vigorous," says a Calif. woman.

"Do you know why? It's because I used to drink coffee but I finally quit it cut and began using Postum. Twice since then I have drank coffee and both times I passed a sleepless night, and so I am doubly convinced coffee caused the trouble and Postum removed it.

"My brother was in the habit of drinking coffee three times a day. He was troubled with sour stomach and headache, often notice him setting soda from the can to relieve the distress in his stomach; lately hardly a day passed without a dose of soda for relief.

"Finally he tried a cup of Postum and liked it so well he gave up coffee and since then has been drinking Postum in its place and says he has not once been troubled with sour stomach."

Even after this lady's experience with coffee her brother did not suspect for a time that coffee was causing his sour stomach, but easily proved it.

Coffee is not suspected in thousands of cases just like this but it's easily proved. A ten day's trial works wonders. "There's a Reason."

Oklahoma City Surprised Many-Minded New Yorker.

Oklahoma amazes an easterner. The wide, asphalted streets; the plate-glass fronts of department stores, the clean sidewalks, the well-dressed, unhurried shoppers, the finish, the metropolitan air you find in Oklahoma City, for example, seem marvels to find in a territory only 17 years old. But do not take my opinion.

A New Yorker who went there on business complained that fate was thrusting him into a wilderness, and his Oklahoma associates could not reassure him. But coming down to breakfast the first morning, at his hotel in Oklahoma City, he stared around in wonder as he entered the dining-room.

"This," he exclaimed, "this is Oklahoma!! Why, do you know?" confidentially, "I've even found a porcelain bathtub in my room."

"Well," said an Oklahoman, drily, "don't you have those in New York?"

BABY TORTURED BY ITCHING.

Rash Covered Face and Feet—Would Cry Until Tired Out—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby was about nine months old when she had rash on her face and feet. Her feet seemed to irritate her most, especially nights. They would itch so that she would be awake most of the night and sometimes she would cry until she was tired out. I had heard of so many cures by the Cuticura Remedies that I thought I would give them a trial. The improvement was noticeable in a few hours, and before I had used one box of the Cuticura Ointment her feet were well and have never troubled her since. I also used it to remove what is known as 'cradle cap' from her head, and it worked like a charm, as it cleansed and healed the scalp at the same time. ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

PORT ARTHUR NOW SCENE OF RELIGIOUS CONFLICT.

Port Arthur, Manchuria.—Port Arthur, Dalny (or Dalren, or Talren, as the Japanese indiscriminately call it) and the entire Liaotung peninsula are a center of interest to those who watch the struggle for supremacy between antagonistic religions that is one of the important phases of the complex far eastern question. Here, on Japan's newly acquired territory, it is to be demonstrated whether or not her Christianity is to expand along with the borders of the empire, or whether the old faiths, Buddhism and Shintoism, are to follow the sun flag. As this great promontory represents, geographically, greater Japan, its strategic importance as a field of religious conflict is apparent at once.

An investigator of religious conditions may find Japanese Christianity here, of a specially significant type. And he will also notice the lack of idols, shrines and temples that confront one at every turn on the island which the Japanese now call "the mainland." Chinese shrines remain, but these, as in China, are comparatively few. Of interest to the western world is the fact that the only new missionary agency that has come in since the war is a veteran American missionary, Rev. T. C. Winn, one of the leaders of the Presbyterian force in Japan.

A New City That Looks Deserted.

A creepy feeling possesses the visitor upon his entrance into the edict-made city of Dalny, upon which the czar had centered such great hopes and lavished such vast expenditure. It seems like a deserted city; yet it is full of people. A sense of perversion haunts one; for here is a big, substantial European city, with rows of attractive brick houses, and all the outward tokens of a prosperous western community; and yet there are less than a dozen white men in all Dalny. One may live here for days without seeing a Caucasian face. White hands built these houses and streets and a white brain designed it all. But now the squat Chinese town off toward the hills is no more oriental than the population of Dalny, although externally the city appears to be the antipodes of any Japanese settlement.

The signs of ruin and defeat on every hand are depressing. Some of the finer buildings were burned by the Russian forces before they evacuated, and no attempt has been made to tear down or reconstruct these. Others are in sad disrepair, simply because the Japanese, who are camping in them, do not know the use of the buildings, which are so unlike their own. The windows are curtainless and shutterless. Bricks are falling and decomposing. The very metal storks that stand guard on the eaves of the houses are tumbling unheeded to the ground. The dwellings are going to ruin and their occupants are uncomfortable; thus nobody is satisfied. So numerous, however, is the Japanese population that it is impossible to rent a house; the American consul asked to be transferred because he could not get a home for his family.

Good order is preserved in this strange city. The Japanese are entirely masters of the situation. There are no Russians, and more Chinese than Japanese. The former are the coolies, the jinrickisha man, the drivers of the low Russian carriages, or droskas, and the workmen generally. While it is plain that the Japanese are in command, there is none of the overbearing attitude, browbeating and oppression that are so apparent in Korea. Toward the country which it has really conquered Japan is gentler than toward its friendly neighbor, Korea.

Soon after the war was over—indeed, before the Portsmouth treaty had been signed—the Japanese Christians in Dalny began to get together. Their leader was the man in charge of the entire commissary department of the army. The same energy and efficiency displayed in keeping the widely-separated host of soldiers fed has always characterized this man's religious activities. When he had organized the Christians, who were mostly army officers, into a church, the question of securing a pastor arose.

Thereupon a unique distinction was conferred upon one of the veteran missionaries of Japan, Rev. T. C. Winn, a Presbyterian of Osaka. Mr. Winn had always been engaged in pioneer work. Before going to Osaka he had been the first missionary at Kanazawa, on the east coast, and many times he had been mobbed. Once he found a mob, armed with knives, stones and sharpened bamboo poles (which make the wickedest of spears) waiting outside his meeting, and even tearing down the walls to get at him. He calmly went out, faced them for a moment, and then walked through them, and a way opened for him. But they followed with increased imprecations. Once they closed around him, and again he turned and faced them.

A little further on, as the crowd grew more and more vehement, and the clamorings for his life became more insistent, he darted suddenly up a dark alley, although he knew that should he begin to run his fate would be quickly sealed when caught. Strangely enough, he was not followed. It was many years before he learned why. On one occasion he was introduced to a big Japanese, then become a Christian, as the man who had once saved his life. It appeared that the man was a ringleader of the mob; Mr. Winn's attitude had led him to change his mind, and when the missionary ran up the alley he stepped in and barred pursuit. He had to knock down a number of men, and throw two into the river, but the pursuit was discouraged.

In sharp contrast to those stirring days, Mr. Winn, than whom no Caucasian is more popular with the Christians of the island empire, was called unanimously to become pastor of the new Dalny and Port Arthur church. When the attitude of the Japanese churches toward the missionaries is remembered, and it is recalled that in all Japan there is not another white pastor of a native congregation, this peculiar honor conferred upon Mr. Winn becomes the more marked. The man himself is quiet, retiring and soft-spoken, without any signs of self-assertiveness.

The Church in a Cathedral.

Still other extraordinary honors were conferred upon the Winns—for Mrs. Winn is as popular as her husband with the Japanese, and herself a resourceful, tireless missionary. While the American consul was utterly unable to secure a home, one was provided, rent free, for the Winns by the government. Even more noteworthy was the fact that the Russian cathedral was turned over to this infant Japanese church for its meetings. The Japanese Christians talked in the newspapers so much about this remarkable concession that the authorities were, after a time, obliged to withdraw it; but not until it had been found by the congregation that in location and construction the cathedral was unsuited to their purposes. A new building was furnished by the government and this is now in use, pending the erection of a church.

In this building two Sunday services are held. The congregations vary because of the shifting nature of the population. The army men who were responsible for the establishment of the church have all gone, and the new organization might have lapsed had it not been for the presence of the Winns. Some of the leading men of Dalny were present the Sunday morning I attended service and in the evening there were upwards of a hundred men. In the afternoon Mr. Winn had a Bible class with students and civilians, and Mrs. Winn one with policemen.

Except for the missionary's salary, the church is quite self-supporting. It is more aggressive than many long-established congregations in Christian lands, for it maintains, with no outside aid, a hospital and a commercial school for young men; with, naturally, religious features attached to both. The varied labors of Mr. and Mrs. Winn include writing frequent articles of a timely, practical sort for the Dalny daily newspaper!

A New War on Liaotung Peninsula.

The recent war which centered its most noteworthy features here held the whole world's attention. This present religious conflict, while less spectacular, is also strategic. Buddhism and Shintoism are not here in force or power. The ancient religious associations are lacking. The outward signs, such as idols and shrines of the ancestral creeds, are wanting. Christianity is here and displaying marked vitality. It looks like a rare chance for the latter.

In addition to Mr. Winn's work (he being the only American missionary on the peninsula) the Young Men's Christian association is serving the soldiers, who still abound all over this region. Another laudable enterprise is that of rescue work, in which both the native church and the Y. M. C. A. were engaged, before it was given over to the Salvation Army. The reader must remember that the debris of war is the commonest sight here. The stranded camp followers, and all the harpies that follow in the wake of an army, are almost as numerous as the discarded army mules which trudge patiently along every road. As soon as hostilities were over, thousands of young girls were brought into Manchuria from Japan, many of them of incredibly tender years, and most of them actual slaves. Hundreds of these poor creatures have been rescued by the Christians.

Further up the peninsula, and throughout Manchuria, are the missions to the Chinese of the Scotch and Irish Presbyterian churches, which do not properly come within the scope of this article. During the war these men, who are far above average grade, did such conspicuous humanitarian service that their praise was sounded by Japanese, Russians and Chinese. Dr. Westwater, at Liaoyang, was officially mentioned by Marshal Oyama and given a substantial contribution for his hospital. The war correspondents likewise found shelter and succor within the homes of these sturdy Scotchmen and Irishmen.

One branch of Mr. Winn's work extends to Port Arthur, where there are a number of Christians. I also heard that one British Lutheran missionary is at work there, but I could not find him. In truth, war overshadows everything else at Port Arthur. The Japanese are pushing work on their new fortifications, and on the dismantling or restoring of the sunken Russian warships that still lie in the harbor. They seemingly have had no time to patch up the buildings wrecked in the siege; so that it appears as if the conflict had taken place only a week ago. There stands the hospital, bearing its blazing red cross, with its corner still a gaping wound. Churches, schools, office buildings and homes are all scarred or broken by the terrible fire. The spectacle is a heart-sickening one, making the visitor wish that some new missionaries of peace might convert the powers of civilization.

The best view of it all is from historic 203-Meter Hill, whence Port Arthur is seen as an open book. On the way thither—it is about three miles back of Port Arthur proper—I passed through a Chinese town, where I had my first experience of being called a "foreign devil." Two small boys ran after my carriage for half a mile, monotonously and spiritlessly repeating the epithet, as if it were a religious duty with them. Certainly they showed none of the signs of pleasure that a small boy usually displays when up to mischief. At the end of the village they waited for my return and repeated the performance. Very few visitors go to Port Arthur, but 203-Meter Hill, which is not now fortified, is apparently becoming a Japanese patriotic shrine.

The debris of that terrific assault is still to be seen upon the mountain—broken gun-carriages, fragments of shell, bullets, discharged cartridges and entrenchments. In one of the little holes which one of the soldiers had vainly dug for his protection I found part of a man's backbone—all that was left of a once brave soldier. The very top of the mountain was blown off by the battle. The whole country for miles about is pitted with the smallpox of war—holes torn in the earth by the exploding shells, and entrenchments dug by the contending armies.

In all these tragic signs of war's devastation the thoughtful person must read the story or prophecy of another conflict. The white man has passed away from this peninsula, and the yellow has come in again. Have the old creeds of heathenism come, too? That depends, I take it, largely upon the caliber and number of missionary representatives who are dealing with the problem. The Japanese Christians on the peninsula have proved their fidelity and aggressiveness. They, cooperating with western representatives of the type of Mr. Winn, must early plant Christian enterprises for the incoming Japanese, up as far as Newchang (which, instead of Dalny, seems destined to remain the principal port of Manchuria) and as Mukden.

A SIMPLE REMEDY

ONE OF THE WAYS TO CURTAIL OPERATIONS OF TRUSTS.

HOME PATRONAGE PRINCIPLES

Systems That Oppose the Advancement of Rural Towns and Agricultural Communities.

Never before have the people of the country been so awakened to the importance of home protection as they are at present. The wide knowledge spread by means of the public press as to the operations of the great trusts and how the masses are made to serve the more favored classes is having its effect. The residents of agricultural communities are beginning to realize the dangers of business concentration in sections of the country dominated by the capitalistic classes. They are fast becoming aroused to the truth that this concentration is a menace to the prosperity of the nation, and directly affects every producer, every laborer and every citizen of the country who depends upon his work for support.

The building up of great trusts commenced less than a score of years ago. At the same time there were other systems inaugurated that tended towards robbing the home towns of business and concentrating this business in the large cities. One of these systems, most notable in its injurious operations and its force to draw wealth from communities where it is produced, is the mail-order system of business. None will say that this system is illegitimate, but no economist can show wherein its principles are sound. By the system communities are impoverished and kept from progressing. He who will give study to the basis of country development will see that it is the labor employed that not alone enhances the value of the farm lands, but builds up the towns. When there is little to employ this labor, the result is depression, stagnation and non-progress. The great evil of the mail-order system which has grown up, is its taking away the means that small towns have of employing labor, and the drawing from each community the profits in commercial transactions that represents the wealth that is procured. It is sophistry to claim that the resident of a community who sends his money to a foreign town and saves the ten per cent. that may represent the home merchant's profits, is not a factor in impoverishing the community. While the saving may remain in the community the employment of labor essential to every business is given to the foreign place, and the home town is robbed of this employment giving power.

Every dollar that is sent away from a community where it is produced either by the tilling of the soil, by the growing of live stock, by the work of the day laborer, or by the storekeeper, impoverishes the community to that extent, and this dollar ceases to be any factor in the advancement of the community. Presuming that there are in a community 2,000 people, suppose that each one of these 2,000 people send away to some foreign place $50 per year. This in the aggregate is $100,000 per year that goes to the support of a foreign town. Suppose that each one sending his money away saves ten per cent.; the savings for a year would be $5, and in ten years $50. Look at the other side—$100,000 business per year would support in the home town five good stores. Each one of these stores would give employment to a number of hands. The small percentage of profit that would be made would be retained in the community and be invested in new enterprises. Year after year there would be a continual increase in the prosperity of the town, and the building up process would add to the value of all the town property, and to the farms within the trading radius of the town. While by sending away the farmer would in ten years' time save but $50, whereas by patronizing the home town the profits that would come to him in substantial increase in real estate values would be ten times this amount. The building up of the town would improve the home market, affording every producer on the farms better prices for all his produce.

Then there is another thing, the town supports the churches, the schools and other public institutions. The efficiency of these institutions are dependent upon the life and activity of the town. Where poor towns exist, the schools do not receive the support that is necessary to make them good, neither are the churches of the high standard they should be. Home patronage means good schools, good churches and all conveniences that add to the pleasure and enlightenment of a people.

All the residents of a community have common interests in it—the banker, the lawyer, the doctor, the merchant, the farmer, the day laborer—all have equal interests. Thus we find that a community is in reality a large cooperative assembly. What is of interest to one is of material interest to the other. But more important than all is that by a practice of the home patronage principle the possibilities of building up trusts for the control of industries of the country are reduced to the minimum; in fact, a strict adherence to this simple principle of building up and protecting home industries precludes the building up of harmful trusts and combinations.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Two Vital Things for the Welfare of the Masses.

There is wisdom in the old slogan, "A school on every hill top and a church in every valley." Citizens of the United States may well feel proud of the great educational system which makes it possible for all classes to acquire the proper mental cultivation. They may also feel proud of the religious liberty that each and every citizen enjoys. There is no established church to interfere with the free exercise of conscience, neither is there any law that interferes with the exercise of religious belief.

The United States can be looked upon as a nation where schools and churches flourish to the fullest. The public school system is one of the most perfect that civilization has yet evolved. Of course there are communities where local conditions are not so favorable for schools as other places. It will be observed that the more important is the city or the town, the more advanced are the educational facilities offered the people. The residents of rural communities have their state or district school, the curriculums of which are restricted. It is to the nearby town that the children who are residents of the farm districts must look for their higher education, which is a necessary preparation for entry into college, and for business life. How important it is, then, to the resident of the farm district that his home town be an active place and of sufficient business importance to justify the maintenance of a high class school! It can be seen how each resident of a farming community should be interested in the home town and all that pertains to its upbuilding. If on no other account, purely on account of the educational facilities.

Running parallel in importance with the schools are the churches. The better the home town the better are the church buildings, and the greater is the talent that fills the pulpit. Both schools and churches have educational qualities that should not be lightly valued. They mean the highest mental and moral development, and upon this development depends the good citizenship and the advancement and perpetuation of the nation.

OVERLOOKED OPPORTUNITIES.

Chances in Average Small Town for Profitably Engaging in Business.

According to the United States census of 1900 there was produced in the United States 1,293,662,433 dozen eggs. The same statistics give the annual production of poultry at 250,623,114. The butter made on farms each year is in excess of 1,000,000,000 pounds. The cheese made on farms averages about 20,000,000 pounds annually. These statistics are interesting, and with each farmer growing poultry and eggs and making butter and cheese, it hardly seems possible that such combinations as dairy trusts and egg and poultry trusts could exist, but that they do is nevertheless a fact.

Every small town in a farming district can command sufficient butter, egg and poultry trade to support a prosperous exclusive produce establishment. The practice has generally obtained in agricultural districts of storekeepers in various lines taking farmers' produce in exchange for goods. The produce thus received by merchants is forwarded to the commission houses in the large city, and these houses are factors that make it possible to maintain trusts in the produce business. It appears that if each town had its exclusive produce establishment to buy what the farmer has to sell instead of the produce going through the local stores, that better prices could be paid the farmers and the business made a most profitable one if rightly conducted.

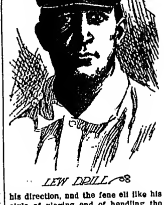
According to the natural laws of business industry succeeds best where advantages are most abundant. Thus it seems that the produce offers a most excellent field in the majority of agricultural towns.

GOOD ROADS MOVEMENT.

Millions of Dollars Annually Saved to the Farmers of the United States.

One of the most important movements that has been inaugurated of recent years, and which has resulted in wonderful benefit to the people is the good roads movement. Within the United States there are approximately about 8,000,000 farmers. If during a year each of those farmers can be saved $10 in time, or in wear and tear upon horses and wagons by means of improved roads, it means a saving of $80,000,000 annually; but the truth is that the improved roads that have been built up the past half dozen years through agitation of the good roads movement saves each farmer in the land from $50 to $100. Thus it can be seen that the savings brought about through this movement aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars each year.

Good roads are important to the progressive town. This fact has become so recognized that wherever there exists a live agricultural town its citizens will be found to be staunch advocates of road improvement, and there is a civic pride and friendly competition in the matter of having good roads leading to the towns. The work of road improvement has only fairly begun. A number of state legislatures have taken up the work and during the next dozen years great changes will be wrought as to the building and maintenance of public highways.



Gave Much Work to Women.

The invention of the typewriter has given work to more than 1,000,000 women.

Sporting Gossip.

Grove City College, near Sharon, Pa., claims the honor of having produced more high-class ball players than any small college in the country. Among the prominent professionals turned out there is "Spike" Shannon, the Giants' left fielder. Shannon played three years on the college team and also tackled football. He was considered one of the best players that ever donned the uniform. "Spike" came to college penniless and worked his way through. Last summer he was sold to New York by St. Louis for $10,000. Don Marshall, the ex-Giant, now with St. Louis Cardinals, spent two years at the college. He was born near the town. Sam Brown, who is playing good ball for the Boston Nationals, was two years at Grove City. Frank Smith, of the World Champion White Sox, pitched his first game at Grove City, as did Mat Eason, recently released by Brooklyn. Charley Jones, of the Washington club, played short stop on the college team for three years. Terry Turner, the lightning short stop of the Cleveland Naps, was born in Grove City and played good ball there till he joined the Columbus club. Other players who started their careers in the vicinity of Grove City, are Socks Seybold, Rhoddy Wallace, Shorty Slagle, Charley Hemphill and Young Bates, of Boston.

Lew Drill, ex-Tiger catcher and former St. Paul player, is making a great hit in Pueblo, where the fans say he is one of the best managers the team has ever had. Drill took hold of the team when it was hopelessly in last place, and "by his efficient work and knowledge of baseball has made the best team the city has ever boasted of." The team is now climbing up and expects to land about fourth in the Western league team race. A Pueblo paper has this to say of him: "Lew Drill is one of the best men that ever came here to furnish amusement for the sport-loving people of this city. Manager Drill, there is no doubt, has made the team what it is. The players get right down to business under his direction, and the fans all like his style of playing and of handling the men. The most pleasing part of his work shows up in the conduct of the local team on the field. Everyone of them follows his example of gentlemanliness, which has much to do in making baseball one of the best sports of the present day."

Knocking the national game started way back in 1876, and it is no wonder that the "hammer" artists have got it down to a fine science by this time. In the preface to a baseball guide printed in that year the following statement regarding professional ball is made:

"Owing to abuses which the professional clubs have allowed to creep into their circle a certain prejudice has been created against the existence of this class of ball players. It should be borne in mind, however, that while our game exists there will always be a professional class of its exponents; and the only question to be considered by a majority of the whole fraternity is whether this class shall be encouraged by a liberal recognition and a reputable patronage to play the game in its integrity, or shall by the very reverse action be driven to indulge in the worst phases of professionalism, gambling, frauds and that curse of all sports, 'hippodroming.'"

Professional baseball is an honest sport nowadays. It was purged of any crookedness long ago, and whatever else its faults, it is on the level and appeals to the reputable, intelligent people.

Charley Keith, the Southern league twirler, pitching for Little Rock, who has won a Rhodes scholarship, and who will leave soon for Oxford to take up his new studies, is anxious to get permission to show his throwing qualities before an audience in London. Keith has just won a wager by tossing a ball over a lofty tower in Little Rock. He says he will try to throw a ball over the tower of St. Paul's church when he reaches London if he can get permission from the lord mayor. Dusty Miller, an old-time Cincinnati fielder, in Lima, O., threw a baseball over an arc light tower 150 feet in height.

NO FOOLISH LATIN ON STATUES, SAYS WILSON

WASHINGTON.—Plain, everyday barnyard English, and no high-falutin' Latin for Yama Jim Wilson. The secretary of agriculture has given a rude shock to the sculptors who heretofore have been wont to embellish architecture and allegorical designs and inscriptions suggesting linguistic association with the old masters and the classics. He has even gone so far as to compel the stone-cutters to rechisel the inscriptions on the new agricultural building, the wings of which have been constructed ahead of the main portion.

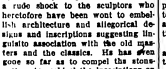
The new home for the department which, when finished will have cost about $2,000,000, is now nearing completion, and the secretary is taking as much interest in its progress as though it were designed for a country home for himself.

On the north shoro aro four pedi-ments, in each of which are a male and a female figure, seated with a shield between them. On these shields are inscribed the four words "Pro-tec-tion," "Cereales," "Forests" and "Flores."

A few days before leaving Wash-ington for the summer the head of the department come into the office of his assistant and friend, Dr. Beverly T. Galloway, chief of the bureau of plant industry, who is also deeply interested in the plans for the building, and in the course of their conversation the pediments were considered.

In glancing at them and in looking at the photographs that had just been taken Secretary Wilson asked:

"Doctor, what do these words mean? 'Pro-tec-tus,' what on earth is that?"



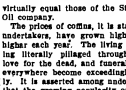
"Why, that's Latin for fruit, and the others mean cereals, flowers and forest," replied the scholarly Galloway.

"Well, why in —— don't we say so, then, and cut out this foolish Latin?" was the prompt reply.

Orders were then and there given that the stonecutters arase the offensive words and substitute up-to-date "United States."

Dr. Galloway closed the incident by remarking that it was just as well to change them, as there was no such Latin word as "forests" anyway, and that, at least, would have to be changed.

PRESIDENT CREATES NEW RESERVATION FOR BIRDS



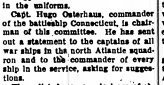
PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has signed an order creating the Tern Islands a Bird reservation. This is the eighth reservation for birds created by the president. It embraces all the "mud lumps," so called, in and near the mouths of the Mississippi river.

The "mud lumps" are islets more or less temporary, and created chiefly by sedimentary deposits from the river. They seldom exceed an acre in size and are elevated from five to eight feet above high tide. They are occupied during the breeding season by large numbers of brown pelican and other terns. Many thousands of the various species breed in these places every year.

These islands are useless for commercial or agricultural purposes and are reserved to protect the birds. The islands are placed under the charge of the secretary of agriculture, who appoints wardens whose duties embrace frequent trips to them, putting up warning notices and otherwise preventing trespassers from molesting the birds, either out of curiosity or to collect plumes or eggs.

The recommendation for this reserve was indorsed strongly by the National Association of Audubon societies for the protection of birds and animals, whose expert ornithologist and field agent visited the islands and made an exhaustive report on the bird breeding qualities and feeding ground of the native fowl along that section of the coast. The creation of reserves of this character is strongly encouraged and adporied by the League of American Sportsmen and similar societies.

GOVERNMENT TO PROBE ALLEGED COFFIN TRUST



AN official investigation of the coffin trust must be deferred until the department of justice can find a few spare moments in which to give it attention. No inquiry has yet been instituted, and none will be undertaken for several months.

It has become known that practically every coffin manufacturer in the country is turned out at factories owned and operated by a trust almost as remunerative as the oil trust. It is declared that the men who head the coffin trust have made millions out of the business, and that their dividends virtually equal those of the Standard Oil company.
